The balance of advantage in these mutual arrangements is, no doubt, largely in favour of the United States, but inasmuch as the English law grants its benefits even in the absence of any reciprocity, and as the protection obtained by British authors in the United States under existing conditions is of very material and recognized value, it is clearly to the interest of this country to retain the present United States' treatment and to smooth over, as far as possible, any difficulties which might possibly lead to the withdrawal of the President's Proclamation.

The English Copyright Law, according to the opinion of your predecessors in L.O.R. 1892 (Conf. 6347). p. 82. office in 1889 and 1892—copies of whose reports are inclosed (Papers K and L)—and the decision of the Supreme Court of Upper Canada in Smiles v. Belford (1 Upper Canada Reports 436), runs in Canada, but there is, it appears, also a local Canadian Copyright Act providing for the registration and protection of copyright in Canada.

The 4th section of the Canadian Act (Paper E) provides that copyright may be obtained by "any person domiciled in Canada or in any part of the British possessions, or any citizen of any country which has an International Copyright Treaty with the United Kingdom."

This it is which gives rise to the remonstrance of the United States' Government, whose view of the matter is very fully set forth in notes from Mr. Blaine and Mr. Olney (inclosed in despatches from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington) of the 22nd December, 1891, and of the 6th February last respectively (Papers F (1) and F (2)), and still further elaborated in a note from the United States' Ambassador at this Court of the 9th June (Paper G).

It is alleged that the Canadian authorities have steadily declined to permit the registration of copyright in Canada on the ground that the United States' enactment of the 3rd March, 1891, and the Proclamation of the President of the 1st July, 1891, do not constitute an "international Treaty" within the meaning of the Canadian Act above quoted, and that, therefore, United States' citizens cannot register under that Act.

The views of the Dominion Government in regard to this allegation are set forth in the report of the Committee of the Canadian Privy Council of the 10th August, 1897, inclosed in a letter from the Colonial Office of the 9th September (Paper H).

The Committee submit that, while the ground of objection stated in Mr. Olney's note to Sir J. Pauncefote (Paper F) is one of the conditions as respects foreigners contained in the Copyright Act of Canada, yet, as that condition is only technical, it is one that Canada is not disposed to urge in view of the understanding that has been arrived at between Great Britain and the United States, and if it were not for other and substantial objections to the present International Copyright Law between Great Britain and the United States, Canada would be glad to meet the convenience of American authors desirous of obtaining copyright in the Dominion.

The Dominion Government object to the unequal treatment of Canadian and United States' authors and the want of reciprocity in the present arrangement, but they express their willingness to amend the Canadian Copyright Act and accord to American authors the privilege of copyright in Canada, on publishing only, if a similar favour be conceded to Canadian authors who desire to obtain copyright in the United States.

In these circumstances Lord Salisbury is disposed to think that the United States have no reasonable cause of complaint, so long as the English Copyright Law is enforceable in Canada, and the United States' Government have not, at present, adduced any instance in which there has been a failure to enforce it.

The remedies open to American authors against infringement of copyright in Canada were very clearly indicated in Lord Rosebery's note to the United States' Chargé d'Affaires at this Court of the 12th November, 1892 (Paper I), wherein it was pointed out that if registration cannot be effected in Canada under section 8 (1) (a) of "The International Copyright Act, 1886," any person, whether a British subject or an alien, whose work has been first published in Canada or in any part of Her Majesty's dominions can entitle himself to a complete remedy against infringement by registering at Stationers' Hall, in London, under the English Copyright Acts. And, in face of the objections of Canada, it seems doubtful whether Her Majesty's Government could well press the matter further.

His Lordship is therefore disposed, in replying to the representations of the United States, to reiterate the assurances already given in the notes (above referred to) which were addressed to United States' Representatives on the 16th June, 1891, and the 12th November, 1892, adding that if, in addition, it is desired to secure registration for American works under the Canadian as distinct from the English Act, the Dominion Government are willing to amend their Act and to accord to United States' authors, under the Canadian as well as the English Law, the privilege of copyright in Canada, on publishing only, if a similar favour is conceded to Canadian authors who desire to obtain copyright in the United States.

It must, however, be borne in mind that if these assurances be not accepted as sufficient there is a considerable risk of the President's Proclamation being withdrawn, and of English authors losing their valuable rights in the United States, for the sake of asserting on behalf of Canada a grievance which can scarcely be considered as more than sentimental, inasmuch as the number of Canadian authors who could claim exact reciprocity of treatment in the United States is extremely limited. It is, therefore, desirable that the answer given to the United States' Government should give them all the satisfaction which the state of the Law and the attitude of the Canadian Government will admit of.

I am accordingly to request that you will take these Papers into your consideration and favour his Lordship with your opinion whether a reply in the sense suggested may properly be returned to the United States' Government as satisfying the conditions on which the benefits of the United States' Copyright Act have been extended to British subjects, or whether it should be amended or modified in any, and if so, what particulars.

Lord Salisbury would also be glad to be favoured with any observations of a more general nature which you may be disposed to offer on the questions at issue.

I have, &c.

Report.

We suggested that, in answer to the United States' Government, it should be pointed out, as proposed, that subjects of the United States can obtain in Canada every privilege in a matter of copyright open to British subjects by registering at Stationers' Hall, and that under these circumstances the Law of Copyright in force in Canada does permit to citizens of the United States the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to British subjects. The question whether registration should be under the Canadian or the Imperial Act is merely one of machinery, and the Imperial Act is in force in Canada.

At the same time we think that the United States' Government may be informed that, as a matter of good feeling, Her Majesty's Government would be glad to do anything in their power to facilitate registration by subjects of the United States under the Canadian Act. This must be a question for the Canadian Legislature, and it should, we think, be added that the passing of the desired amendment of the Law in Canada would probably be very much facilitated if the United States would concede to Canadian authors the privilege of copyright upon publishing only in the United States.

It must, of course, be doubtful whether the United States will yield on this last point, and we feel strongly in view of the great importance of the present arrangement for British authors that an endeavour should be made to induce the Canadian Government to give way on what they admit to be a mere technicality, without making it a condition that the international arrangement now in force should be modified in substance.

[December 16, 1897.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, November 11, 1897.

Fine on master of "Cuban" for alleged violation of United States' Immigration Act.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, with regard to the imposition of a fine by the Collector of Customs at New Orleans on the Master of the West India and Pacific steam-ship "Cuban," for an alleged violation of the United States of America Immigration Act Amendment Act of the 3rd March, 1891, by neglecting on arrival in United States' waters, to detain on board his ship two stowaways, who, in consequence, came unlawfully into the United States, within the meaning of Section 10 of the above-mentioned enactment.

The facts of the case are as follows (Papers A, B, C, D):—

The "Cuban" left Liverpool on the 15th April, 1896. On the second day out two stowaways, named Patrick Downey and Michael Cavanagh respectively, were found on board, both of whom had applied before the departure of the vessel to be taken on as members of the crew, but had been refused by the Chief Officer.

Sometime during the voyage the master, Mr. J. L. Bertie, placed the names of these men on the crew list, and permitted them to sign the ship's articles for the voyage to New Orleans and return voyage to Liverpool, and therefore employed them on board as members of the crew.

On arrival at New Orleans on the 4th May, these facts came to the knowledge of the Immigrant Inspector, and at a meeting of the Board of Immigration, it was decided, after hearing the statements of the Inspector of Immigration, the Customs Inspector, Mr. Bertie, and the two defendants, that the said defendants were stowaway paupers, and persons likely to become public charges on the revenues of the United States of America. As such, it was ordered that they should be remanded to the custody of the master of the steam-ship "Cuban," to be deported on that vessel upon his next sailing to the country whence they had come.

It was contended by Mr. Bertie and by the British Consul, that the men were not immigrants, but duly enrolled members of the crew of the "Cuban," and therefore not liable to the provisions of the Immigration Law of the United States; but the Board felt justified in issuing the order above cited, on the grounds that both the men were under age; that both had, on their own confessions been arrested in Liverpool before leaving, and that both admitted that they intended to remain in the United States if possible. Mr. Bertie, it was further stated, had opportunities of becoming acquainted with the character and purposes of the men before enrolling them as members of his crew.

Her Majesty's Cousul requested to be informed on what ground these men, though possibly stowaways, were treated as alien immigrants, and was told that under the decision of the Superintendent of Immigration, dated the 13th June, 1893, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, "All stowaways who are aliens and arriving in vessels from foreign ports, must be treated as alien immigrants, and vessels bringing them will be liable to all pains and penalties contained in the Immigration Law."

Mr. Bertie states, in an affidavit dated the 15th July, 1896 (Inclosure in Paper B), that he appealed to the Board to assist him by incarcerating the men, as he had applied to Her Majesty's Consul for permission to use force to detain them but had been refused on the ground that they were members of the crew. The Board at first granted Mr. Bertie's request, but it was afterwards refused by the Immigration Inspector.

With a view to carrying out to the best of his ability the directions of the Board Mr. Bertie gave strict orders that the men should not be allowed on shore at any time for any purpose whatever, and he appointed one of Boylan's policemen, in addition to three of the ship's officers, to enforce this order. In spite of these precautions, the two men escaped from the vessel on the 11th May.

The captain immediately claimed the assistance of the city police, offering a reward of 10 dollars for each man recovered. He also persuaded a shipping master to go round and visit all the city haunts with a view to their recapture. These efforts were, however, unsuccessful. Thereupon, without any trial or conviction by a Court of Law, Mr. Bertie was held guilty of a misdemeanour, and two fines of 300 dollars each were imposed upon him by an Executive officer of the United States, claiming authority for such action under Section 10 of the Immigration Act Amendment Act of the 3rd March, 1891.

The terms of this Section will be more fully stated hereafter, and a copy of it is left herewith.

The Collector of Customs, however, had, in the first instance, recommended that the fines should be reduced to a merely nominal amount, as it was believed that the escape of the two men was not due to any personal negligence on the part of the master; but his official superiors, the Treasury Department, replied that, although two fines of 300 dollars each had been incurred, they would limit themselves to directing the Collector to enforce only one.

On the 18th July a letter was received from the West India and Pacific Steam-ship Company (Limited) (Paper A), who owned the "Cuban," briefly narrating the facts of the case, and pointing out the dilemma in which the master was placed. On the one hand, Mr. Bertie was informed by the United States' authorities that he must detain the two men on board the "Cuban" and ship them back to England when he sailed, and, on the other, he was expressly forbidden by Her Majesty's Consul to use force in order to carry out this order, on the ground that the men were properly enrolled members of his crew, while the authorities declined to assist the master by incarcerating them on shore.

The Company ask that the good offices of Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington may be used with a view to putting an end to conflicts of authority of this nature, and, whilst they are perfectly prepared to comply with the law of the United States for the exclusion of alien immigrants, they nevertheless consider that in cases where force has to be used, it should be undertaken by the port authorities themselves.

They strongly protest against the fines.

On the 7th August, a note was received from the United States' Chargé d'Affaires (Paper B) calling attention to the case, pointing out that the master of the "Cuban," by placing the two stowaways on his crew list and allowing them to sign his ship's articles while at sea, violated in the first instance the provisions of the British Merchant Shipping Act of 1894, section 113 (1), (2), and section 115 (1), (4), (7), which requires (section 113) the master of a ship to enter into an agreement with every seaman whom he carries to sea as one of his crew from any port of the United Kingdom, and (section 115) that the agreement shall be signed by each seaman in the presence of a Superintendent.

The note goes on to say that this was apparently done with the deliberate intention of evading the Immigration Laws of the United States, which were in fact violated by the subsequent action of Mr. Bertie in permitting the escape of the men on arrival at New Orleans. The United States' Government request that the necessary steps may be taken to prevent the recurrence of such incidents by informing masters of British vessels of the illegality of such proceedings.

The two letters in question, that of the West India and Pacific Company and that of the United States' Chargé d'Affaires, were referred to the Board of Trade on the 25th July, and on the 11th August, 1896, respectively.

The Board replied on the 8th September (Paper F), but, in the absence of fuller information, principally limited themselves to the question of the alleged infringement of the British Merchant Shipping Act.

Whilst admitting that the provisions of the Act relating to the signing on of seamen were not strictly complied with, they observed that there was no evidence to prove that the master carried, or had any intention of "carrying, the men to sea as seamen," or that he had any knowledge of their presenee on board until after the ship had left port, and they added that in these circumstances they were advised that a conviction of the master for an offence under sections 113 and 115 of the Act could not be obtained. They also adverted to the terms of section 237 (2) of the same Act, which provides that a stowaway, so long as he is on board, shall be deemed to belong to the ship, and shall be subject to the same rules of discipline as if he were a member of, and had signed the agreement with, the crew. This section, they thought, might have suggested to the minds of masters and owners of British ships the desirability of placing stowaways upon the articles of their ship, in order that they might realize that they were subject to the same discipline as the regular crew. This theory was, in their opinion, at least as probable as the suggestion of the United States' Government that the custom had arisen with a view to evading the United States' Laws in regard to pauper immigration.

They further added that, as Her Majesty's Consul contended that the men actually formed part of the ship's crew, it was difficult to understand why he should have interfered to restrain the master from taking the precautions the latter deemed necessary in order to prevent their desertion.

On the 12th October (Paper C) a Report on the case was received from Mr. Donnelly, Acting Consul at New Orleans, in the absence of Her Majesty's Consul, Mr. St. John, who was in charge when the incident occurred.

Mr. Donnelly narrates the facts of the case at somewhat greater length than the reports received up to that date.

He quotes from Mr. St. John's despatch of the 25th May to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington, in which he discusses the right of the United States' authorities to interfere with the discipline of crews legally enrolled on board British ships. His words are as follows:—

"The two stowaways in question were enrolled as members of the crew, and it was for the master to decide whether such a step was expedient or not. The enrolment took place on the high seas, in a manner recognized by the country to which the ship belonged. The men thereupon ceased to be stowaways, became British mariners, and for the authorities of the United States to make them out something different appears to me an unwarrantable proceeding, and a very objectionable precedent to establish."

On the 17th October a despatch was received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (Paper D), reporting the whole case at length, inclosing the correspondence which had passed between the United States' Government and Her Majesty's Ambassador, and also two opinions by Mr. Calderon Carlisle, the Legal Adviser of Her Majesty's Embassy, to whom the correspondence had been referred.

In addressing the United States' Government with a view to obtaining a reconsideration of the question by the Treasury Department, Sir J. Pauncefote apparently based his arguments on the fact that the decision of the Superintendent of Immigration approved by the Treasury (Paper D, Inclosure 3), was at variance with the ruling of the United States' Court in the case of the United States v. Sandrey, where it was laid down that a stowaway on a British vessel once enrolled, in good faith, as a member of the crew, acquired the status of a British seaman; and that in the event of his desertion he was to be considered as a deserting seaman, and not as an alien immigrant.

A fuller statement of the case of United States v. Sandrey will be found stated in a subsequent part of this reference.

With regard to the difficulty put in the way of Mr. Bertie in his endeavour to detain the two men by the refusal of the United States' authorities to keep them in custody, Sir Julian inclosed a statement, drawn up by Her Majesty's Consul-General at New York, as to the practice followed by the New York Customs authorities in such cases, namely, to land the stowaways on arrival, and to keep them in custody at the ship's expense until her departure.

The Department of State replied, on the 24th August, that the Treasury did not acquiesce in the decision in the Sandrey case, the ruling in that case being in conflict with the decision (in re Vito Rullo) of a Court of equal jurisdiction, the practice of the Treasury Department being established by "Synopsis of Decisions, 14,099," of which, however, no copy was forthcoming, but which is understood to contain the Decision of the 13th June, 1893, before referred to.

The Treasury invited the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the fact that masters of British vessels bound to New Orleans seemed to consider that placing of stowaways on their crew lists, in order to avoid future trouble in connection with the Immigration Laws of the United States, was one of their prerogatives; that in the cases in question, both the men had applied for shipment before the "Cuban" left Liverpool, but were refused; that it was not alleged that the addition of their names to the crew list of the vessel after their presence on board had been discovered was for any of the purposes for which shipment of substitutes was authorized by English law; that for this, and other reasons, the Treasury were constrained to believe that the names were placed on the ship's articles for the purpose of evading the laws of the United States, and that this circumstance outweighed the subsequent acts of vigilance exercised by Mr. Bertie.

They added that the local authorities of various ports, upon application, provide sufficient facilities for the detention, at the expense of the vessel, of persons to be deported, but that in this case the master had, on the advice of the British Consul that they were properly enrolled British seamen, declined to restrain the stowaways.

Mr. Calderon Carlisle, to whom all the papers were thereupon referred, holds the view (Annex 1) that the fine was legally imposed on the master of the "Cuban."

Mr. Carlisle states that, in his opinion, it would not be necessary for a master who discovered the presence of criminal, insane, or deceased stowaways on board when he was two or three days out at sea, to put back and disembark them, or, in the alternative, render himself liable to suffer the penalty imposed, but the master would undoubtedly be obliged to prevent their landing and to take them back in his ship.

Mr. Carlisle also observes that "if a stowaway regularly became a member of the crew, he could not be considered an alien immigrant any more than any other member of the crew, according to the late decision of the United States' Court, but if he did not become a member of the crew, he was none the less an alien immigrant because he stole his passage instead of paying for it."

In the decision alluded to, viz., United States v. Sandrey, the Court found that all the circumstances of the case showed that the master had acted openly and above board, within the line of his duty as master of the vessel, and no way in violation of the United States' law.

"In the present case," Mr. Carlisle continues, "the Board of Immigration and the Treasury Department seemed to have reached the conclusion that the stowaways in question really intended to violate the laws of the United States when they left England, and had successfully done so when they eluded the vigilance of the master and landed in the United States; that they did belong to the excluded classes; and that the captain had sufficient knowledge or notice of their character, condition, and purpose not to be himself free of responsibility."

Mr. Carlisle considers that, in regard to the effect of enrolling such stowaways in a crew, there would seem to be no distinction in law between the case of the two men in question, and the cases of two persons admittedly lunatics or well known as dangerous criminals. The policy of the United States being to exclude certain classes from their territory, it could not be admitted that the mere enrolment of such persons in the crew list of a British ship on the high seas, or the signing of articles, &c., could give such persons the right to land, or would free the master of the vessel from the duties and responsibilities which the law imposed on him.

The papers were then referred back to the Board of Trade, and their Solicitor wrote a Memorandum (Annex II) which furnishes the basis of the arguments advanced by the Board, and subsequently stated in this reference.

Mr. Calderon Carlisle, to whom the Memorandum (Annex II) of the Board's Solicitor was submitted, has not found reason to alter his own opinion that the fine was legally imposed (Annex III).

He evidently does not agree with the Board's Solicitor that, in order to make Section 10 applicable, the immigrant must have left the ship and have been brought back.

He holds that the procedure was correct, and that the fine was lawfully levied under Section 10, which imposes a penalty on vessels violating its provisions, and provides for its enforcement by withholding a clearance.

"The whole gist of the case," he writes, "is whether stowaways, enrolled in a crew, under circumstances like those disclosed in the case of Cavanagh and Downey, are alien immigrants within the meaning of the laws of the United States."

"The laws of the United States provide expressly (Section 6, Act of the 3rd March, 1891,) that 'all decisions made by the inspection officers, or their assistants, touching the right of an alien to land, when adverse to such right, shall be final, unless appeal be taken to the Superintendent of Immigration, whose action shall be subject to review by the Secretary of the Treasury.'"

The case of Vito Rullo is, he says, one of many authorities holding that the Courts will not undertake to review such sentences.

The case of Sandrey was a prosecution under Sections 6 and 8, which have no provision for enforcing fines by refusing clearance. Mr. Carlisle does not admit that the circumstances of this case were the same as those of the "Cuban."

Finally, Mr. Carlisle is of opinion that the United States' authorities have the right, under the Act of the 3rd March, 1891, to make the Regulations they have made with regard to stowaways, and he adds that by observing these Regulations, British masters can avoid all trouble by special care and vigilance with regard to stowaways who have been entered on the crew list.

That in the case of personal restraint they would not be liable to action for false imprisonment in the United States, nor, does he imagine, would they be so liable in Great Britain either.

The Board of Trade have on the other hand been advised by their Solicitor that in view of the decisions of the United States' Circuit Court of Louisiana in the abovementioned case of United States v. Sandrey, and also in the Stanley habeas corpus case, and even apart from those decisions the master of the "Cuban" did not commit either of the offences referred to in Section 10 of the United States' Immigration Act of the 3rd March, 1891; that even if it could be held, by disregarding and practically overruling express decisions of the Court to the contrary, or by taking an erroneous or unfair view of the facts of the case, that an offence had been committed, the United States' Executive authorities were not justified in holding the master guilty of a misdemeanour and imposing penalties upon him for that offence of their own mere motion without any previous trial or conviction by a Court of Law; and that it is a proceeding opposed to received ideas of justice, liberty, and right treatment, that executive officers should, in a case of alleged misdemeanour, be at once prosecutors and Judges, and also the instruments for enforcing their own decisions by detention of the ships of the alleged offenders.

The Solicitor to the Board of Trade is further of opinion that, even if the United States' authorities had been technically justified in their action by the terms of the Statute, they took an erroneous and unreasonably harsh view of the master's conduct in signing the two stowaways on the articles of the "Cuban," and, further, when they rejected the abundant evidence of his earnest desire and efforts to prevent their landing.

The Alien Immigration Act of the 3rd March, 1891, upon which the questions at issue arise, is sent herewith (Paper E).

A fuller statement of the contentions and arguments of the Solicitor to the Board of Trade has been prepared by him, and will be found in the annexed Memorandum (Annex IV).

I have the honour to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to—

1. Whether the action taken by the United States' authorities in this case was legal and proper?

2. And if not, whether there are good grounds for representations to the United States' Government, and if so, what form they should assume?

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured at the same time with any general observations you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion no fine can be lawfully imposed under the American Act except by a Court of Justice. The Act does not confer any such power upon any Executive officer, and he has no more right to impose a fine than to award a term of imprisonment.

We do not think it by any means clear that the master might not have been convicted under Section 10 if a prosecution had been instituted. Sandrey's case appears to us to have no bearing upon the present, as all that was there decided was that the master was not liable if stowaways, whom he had bonâ fide enrolled for the voyage to America and back, escaped while in port. The other cases referred to are also inapplicable. In the present case it would appear that the stowaways proposed to land, and that it was decided by the proper authority that they were not entitled to land in the United States under the provisions of the Act in question. The master was then asked to detain them on board. He failed to do so, and it appears to us that the circumstances do not exclude the possibility of a proper conviction under Section 10, although there is, no doubt, great force in some of the observations made by the Solicitor to the Board of Trade on this point.

But the question ought to have been tried by a Court of Justice, and as the action of the Executive officer at New Orleans in refusing clearance unless the fine which he himself imposed was paid has been adopted by the American Treasury Department, we think that diplomatic representations might properly be made to the United States' Government. They should be based upon the fact that as no proceedings had been taken, the fine was not imposed by any legal authority, and that the question whether the master had committed an offence under Section 10 was one which ought to have been determined judicially.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, December 17, 1897.

Breach of Bermudas Quarantine Laws by United States' war-ship "Enterprise."

WE were honoured with your commands, signified in Mr. Lucas' letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by you to submit to us the accompanying despatch and inclosures from the Governor of the Bermudas, with reference to a breach of the Quarantine laws of those Islands, recently committed by Commander J. G. Eaton, of the United States' Navy, when in command of the national ship "Enterprise," which resulted in his being convicted before two Justices of the Peace for the Colony, under the 6th section of "The Bermuda Quarantine Act, 1893," and being sentenced to pay a penalty of 10*l.*, and the costs of the prosecution, amounting to 3*l.* 17*s.*

That by section 5 (1) of the above Act, if a vessel arrives at Bermuda in June, July, August, September, or October, the officer, or other person in charge, must immediately, on being shown by the pilot a copy of the "Quarantine Clauses" of the Act, hoist a yellow flag, and keep the same flying without intermission, until permitted in writing by a Health Officer to haul it down, during all which time such vessel is to be and remain in quarantine.

That by section 6 of the Act, whenever the officer or other person in charge of any vessel is required to hoist the yellow flag, it is the duty of the pilot and the person in charge of the vessel to pilot and take her, if entering from the east, to the first chequered buoy or to Murray's anchorage, at the option of the master, or, if the weather will not admit of her remaining at either of those anchorages, to a specified position in the Great Sound—unless such vessel be one of Her Majesty's ships, or a troop-ship, or a store-ship, or freight-ship bound to Her Majesty's dockyard to load or unload, in which case she is to be piloted to Grassy Bay; and the pilot is to remain with such vessel at the prescribed quarantine ground until she has been visited by a Health Officer, and either released by him from quarantine, or directed to proceed to some other place or anchorage. If any vessel—not coming under the exceptions above mentioned—proceeds further west than Murray's anchorage without the permission of the Health Officer, the master or person in charge of her may be summoned by any Justice of the Peace, to appear before any two Justices of the Peace to show cause why such vessel was permitted to proceed as aforesaid, without such permission; and if such master or other person in charge, fails to show to the satisfaction of the Justices that such vessel was compelled by stress of weather, or other unavoidable cause, to proceed as aforesaid, he is liable to a penalty not exceeding 30*l.*, besides costs, and if the Justices see fit, to imprisonment not exceeding six calendar months.

That the "Enterprise" arrived at the Bermudas on the evening of the 18th September, entering from the east, and took up a pilot on nearing the Islands. That on the morning of the 19th, which was a Sunday, she proceeded to Murray's anchorage with the yellow flag flying in compliance with section 5 of the Quarantine Act. That Commander Eaton there awaited the Health Officer's visit, repeatedly blowing his whistle to attract that officer's attention, but that after a delay of fifteen minutes, on a suggestion from the pilot he proceeded to the anchorage at Grassy Bay, where he shortly afterwards obtained pratique from the West End Health Officer. That the reason he gave for acting as he did, was that the pilot showed him a "Notice to Pilots," dated the 13th February, 1897, from which he understood that the proper anchorage for him to proceed to was Grassy Bay. That Commander Eaton's bona fides in adopting that course appeared to be unquestioned. That as a matter of fact the East End Health Officer was approaching the "Enterprise" when she left Murray's anchorage, but that apparently no one on board was aware of this.

That the "Notice" in question stated that "subject to the convenience and safety of Her Majesty's ships, and to the requirements of the Quarantine Acts and Regulations, foreign ships of war and transports, and all other foreign Government vessels arriving at these Islands are, until further orders, to be piloted to Grassy Bay, and there brought to anchor not nearer than 1½ cables to any naval moorings."

That on the 21st September, Commander Eaton was summoned to appear before two Justices of the Peace at the Police Office of St. George, and that on the 22nd, after several witnesses, including himself, had been heard, he was convicted of a breach of section 6 of "The Quarantine Act, 1893," and fined 10*l.* and costs. That at the conclusion of the proceedings Commander Eaton, who had not raised the point previously, desired to have noted his protest that the Court had no jurisdiction over acts committed by him whilst on board a public vessel of the United States' Navy.

That subsequently, on the advice of the Attorney-General for the Colony, who had advised the proceedings, but who afterwards felt a doubt whether process of a local Court could be enforced on board the "Enterprise," the Magistrates were instructed by the Officer administering the Government not to enforce their sentence, and that the matter was then (after some correspondence between Commander Eaton and the Government) allowed to drop.

That although the fact seemed to be regarded by the Attorney-General of Bermuda as to some extent open to doubt, you had no ground for discrediting the statement of Commander Eaton to the effect that the "Enterprise" was a Government ship (as she undoubtedly appeared to be to the pilot). That, on the contrary, she appeared undoubtedly to have been an armed vessel employed as a training-ship, named in the official Navy List of the United States, and commanded by officers of the United States' Navy. That it was therefore assumed that no question of fact could arise as to her right to be treated as a public vessel belonging to a foreign Power.

That Mr. Lucas was, therefore, to ask us to take the papers into our consideration and to favour you with our opinion whether, upon the assumption that she was in fact a public ship, the "Enterprise" and her officers could rightfully claim to be exempted from the Colonial Laws relating to quarantine, and from the jurisdiction of the local Courts; and, if so, whether any and what means could be employed to insure the observance by public vessels belonging to foreign States of the ordinary and reasonable sanitary regulations necessary for the preservation of health in the ports of Her Majesty's Colonial possessions.

That you would also be glad to receive any general observations which we might think fit to offer upon the question which was regarded as one of considerable importance.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

That even upon the assumption that she was a public ship, the "Enterprise" and her officers could not rightfully claim to be exempted from the Colonial Laws relating to quarantine. Every man-of-war entering a foreign port does so upon the terms of observing such regulations.

It does not, however, follow that the vessel and her officers are subject to the jurisdiction of the local Courts. There has been considerable difference of opinion as to the extent of the immunity enjoyed by men-of-war in a foreign port; but in our opinion the officer commanding such man-of-war is not liable to proceedings in the local Courts, in respect of any act done by him in the management of the vessel.

The duty of observing the regulations of the port is one of international obligation. The vessel is admitted on the implied terms of observing such regulations. If they are broken she may be expelled—if such an extreme step be necessary for the safety of the port. Diplomatic representations may be made to the Government of the country to which the vessel belongs, and if anything like a right to disregard such regulations were asserted, the foreign Government might be informed that its vessels could not be admitted.

In the present case the error seems to have been purely accidental, and partly due to a mistake on the part of the pilot, and we do not think that any further notice should be taken of the incident.

We have, &c.

Uruguay Revolution. Seizure of neutral vessels

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying papers which have reference to the revolution which has broken out in the Republic of Uruguay.

Mr. Baring, Her Majesty's Minister at Monte Video, in his telegram No. 1 of the 5th March (Paper A), apprehends that the Uruguayan Government may seize small steamers, many of which belong to British Companies, and he asks whether he is authorized to act in concert with the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Beagle" for the purpose of according such vessels the protection of the British flag.

A Memorandum has been prepared in this Department (Paper B), giving precedents respecting the seizure of neutral property by belligerent Powers, but it seems doubtful whether this right can properly be claimed by a Government engaged in putting down rebellion when no recognized state of belligerency exists.

Mr. Baring has been provisionally instructed that if any British vessel is seized he should immediately inform the Uruguayan Government that Her Majesty's Government reserve all rights, and I am to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in giving instructions to the British naval officers to resist by force the seizure of British vessels under the circumstances indicated, and if not, what orders should be given in reply to the suggestion contained in Mr. Baring's telegram.

His Lordship will also be glad to receive any observations of a general character which you may have to offer on this question.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.) Mr. Baring	(No. 1. Telegraphic)	March 5, 1897.
(B.) Memorandum by Mr. A. H. Oakes		„ 6, „

Report.

The right of angary has never been recognized except where there are belligerents. So far as appears this cannot be predicated of Uruguay at present, although an attempt at revolution may ultimately result in civil war and a state of belligerency. The proposed seizure of steamers belonging to British subjects would therefore appear not to be justifiable. It could be justified only as a measure of urgent military necessity. It must, however, be borne in mind that strangers resident in a country are liable to the same consequences resulting from the acts of the Government of the country in the maintenance of peace and order as the native inhabitants of the country.

The statement of facts is so meagre, that we should feel hesitation in advising that force should be employed by Her Majesty's ship "Beagle" to prevent the seizure. It does not appear in what capacity these "small steamers" are employed, nor whether their owners are resident in Uruguay. And we have no sufficient information as to the circumstances which may be relied upon as justifying the proposed seizure on the ground of necessity.

We advise that every step should be taken to prevent the seizure, short of the actual employment of force, and that if it is effected a remonstrance and claim for compensation should be lodged with the Government of Uruguay.

Gentlemen,

Guiana Boundary Arbitration. Preparation of British Case.

I HAVE the honour to inform you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, that the negotiations now proceeding at Washington for the signature of a Treaty with Venezuela, by which the question of disputed boundary between that country and British Guiana is to be referred to arbitration, appear to be approaching a favourable conclusion.

His Lordship considers it very important that preparations should at once be made for the presentation in proper form to the Tribunal of Arbitration of the arguments on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

I am to request that Lord Salisbury may be favoured with your opinion as to the general scheme of evidence which is necessary for preparing an outline of the British Case, and he would also be glad to learn what professional assistance you will require in proceeding with this work.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Report.

We are prepared to consider the general scheme of evidence, and to advise as to the preliminary steps necessary to be taken for preparing the outline of the British Case, but before doing so we shall be glad to have a copy of the Memorandum on the points likely to be raised on the part of Venezuela, which was prepared by Mr. Reddan, and submitted to the Attorney-General at the Foreign Office, upon the occasion of his visit there a few days ago, and which was left with Mr. Reddan in order that he might note therein his comments.

We suggest that instructions should be given to Mr. Bertram Cox and Mr. Sidney Rowlatt to act as junior counsel in preparing the outline of the British Case. It may be that later on further legal assistance may be required, but we think it better that the consideration of the question whether any other gentleman should be engaged should stand over for the present. We presume that we shall have the assistance of Mr. Harris, of the Colonial Office, and of Mr. Reddan. We think it quite probable that when the work is further advanced we may require additional expert assistance in connection with the examination, collation, and possibly the translation of documents, and we think that possibly the services of Mr. de Villiers, of the British Museum, would be useful in connection therewith. The services of a shorthand writer will from time to time no doubt be required, but we understand that one of the shorthand writers attached to the Colonial Office will be available when necessary.

We do not remember whether in the draft Treaty as approved it is proposed that some Agent should represent Her Majesty's Government. If this be so, consideration will be required at a later stage of the person to be appointed to fill this position.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, March 26, 1897.

Maintenance of status quo on Guiana boundary pending Award of Arbitrators.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying papers, which relate to a proposal made by the Venezuelan Minister at Washington, that notes should be exchanged between the British and Venezuelan Governments providing that pending the Award of the Arbitrators on the boundary question no further occupation of territory would be permitted on either side, but that the status quo should be maintained by the authorities of Venezuela and British Guiana respectively.

After consultation with the Secretary of State for the Colonies, his Lordship instructed Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington to endeavour to obtain some further definition of the exact meaning and scope of the proposal.

A despatch has since been received from Sir Julian Pauncefote (Paper E), inclosing a short statement from Señor Andrade, who proposes that, pending the Award of the Arbitrators, the British and Venezuelan Governments should undertake to warn their local officials against committing, or permitting any persons under their control to commit, any act likely to give rise to a disturbance in relation to the rights claimed by either Government within the territory in dispute; and also that both Governments should undertake to refrain from granting within that territory any new concessions or rights.

Mr. Chamberlain's views on this proposal are stated in the letter from the Colonial Office of the 20th March (Paper G). He suggests that a definite line of demarcation should be provisionally adopted, and that each Government should issue instructions to their officials in the terms indicated; and that the area within which no grant or concession shall be made should likewise be defined.

I am to request that Lord Salisbury may be favoured with your opinion as to whether Sir J. Pauncefote may properly receive instructions in accordance with the arrangement set forth in the letter from the Colonial Office, or whether those proposed instructions can in your opinion advantageously be altered or modified, and, if so, in what respects and to what extent.

His Lordship will at the same time be glad to be favoured with any observations of a more general nature which you may desire to offer on the papers now submitted to you.

I have, &c.

Sir. T. Sir T. Sanderson requests that the Colonial Office letter may be returned with the papers which accompanied the reference from this Department of the 26th ultimo with regard to the proposed arrangement for maintaining the status quo.

Foreign Office, April 1, 1897.

Report.

There are, in our opinion, some objections and probable disadvantages in proposing, or agreeing, any provisional line of demarcation; and, having regard to the nature of the questions which will arise in the Arbitration, we do not recommend that the proposal made in the letter from the Colonial Office of the 20th March should be adopted.

We think that before any attempt is made to agree on a provisional line of demarcation the Venezuelan Minister, from whom the proposal emanated, should be asked to show upon a map the line of demarcation which he would suggest. His present proposal is altogether inadmissible.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, June 29, 1897.

Search of vessels under French flag in Zanzibar waters.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to request that you will favour him with your opinion on the following point:—

Of late years it has been the practice of the French Government to grant French papers and the use of the French flag afloat to any Arab going through certain formalities at Obok, Madagascar, or the Comoro Islands. The effect of such grants has been to give the holder an almost complete immunity at sea from any control which would otherwise be exercisable by British men-of-war, and to enable him to carry slaves with impunity to Arabia or elsewhere, as the existing arrangements with France only entitle British men-of-war to verify the flag of merchant-vessels, and give no right of interference with vessels on the mere ground of Slave Trade.

Her Majesty's Government have, however, recently entered into an Agreement with the French Government (see Sir E. Monson's No. 100, Africa, of the 6th April, 1897) under which Great Britain has given up her rights to jurisdiction over British subjects in Madagascar, and the French Government have stated that they are prepared to abandon their rights of jurisdiction over French citizens and French-protected persons in Zanzibar, as soon as the administration of justice shall be guaranteed in the island by properly constituted British Tribunals. These Tribunals will have been properly constituted as soon as the Zanzibar Order in Council, which has recently been approved by you, has come into operation, and the question arises whether, in these circumstances, vessels flying the French flag will, when within the territorial waters of Zanzibar, be subject generally to the local jurisdiction and liable not only to the verification of their papers, but particularly to be searched for slaves under process issued by the Tribunals of the Protecting Power and carried out by the police authorities of the Sultan's Administration.

Lord Salisbury thinks that it can hardly be contended that the police of the Sultan can act in such matters except under a warrant or other authority issued by the judicial Tribunals established by Great Britain under the new Order.

I am to request your particular attention to the arguments contained in his Lordship's note to M. Waddington, of the 13th June, 1891,* maintaining the right of British men-of-war, as the national ships of the Protecting Power, to search vessels under the French flag within the territorial waters of a British Protectorate. Lord Salisbury assumes that this contention still holds good, and that this particular right of search exists entirely independent of those other general rights (if any) which may now be superadded, as flowing from the establishment of the Tribunals of the Protecting Power within the Protectorate and the submission of the French Government to their jurisdiction.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

We agree with the views stated in Lord Salisbury's note of the 13th June, 1891,* and are of opinion that these contentions still hold good.

In addition to the right of search then asserted, we are of opinion that, when the French Government have submitted to the jurisdiction of the Tribunals established by the Protecting Power, search may be made of French vessels, within the territorial waters of Zanzibar, by the Zanzibar police under warrant granted by these Tribunals.

It has been suggested that jurisdiction over foreign vessels within territorial waters does not extend to cases affecting only persons on board these vessels. There is a want of authority for this suggestion, and in any case we do not think that any such doctrine could be properly invoked on behalf of the vessels engaged in the Slave Trade.

Extension of French Protection to Zanzibar subjects.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, relating to the manner in which French protection is extended to Zanzibar subjects since the date of the assumption by Her Majesty of the Protectorate over Zanzibar.

* Colonial Office, March 23, 1897.

Paper (A) shows the general view which has been taken by Her Majesty's Government of the question, as expressed in instructions to Her Majesty's Representative in Zanzibar. Papers (B), (C), (D), and (E) deal with the special case of Salim-bin-Abdurahman which has arisen since those instructions were issued.

Paper (B) shows that Salim-bin-Abdurahman is an Arab of Lamu, a town situated within the dominions of Zanzibar on the African mainland, and that he was a favourite of the late Sultan of Zanzibar, who used to pay him at the rate of 80 dollars a-month as a member of his household. Whilst drawing this pay, he was, at the request of the Sultan, taken under French protection, and to that end appointed by the Acting French Consul, without communication with the Representative of the Protecting Power, to a post as copying clerk in the French Consulate, although notoriously ignorant of French.

It is claimed by the Acting French Consul that, in virtue of Article IV of the Treaty between France and Muscat of 1844 (Paper F), Salim became, by the fact of this appointment, a French-protected person, and as such justiciable only by the French Consular Courts. On this ground he claimed immunity for Salim from the jurisdiction of the Zanzibar Courts.

Sir A. Hardinge contested this view, and his arguments have been supported by Her Majesty's Government and presented to the French Government by Her Majesty's Ambassador in Paris in the note of the 10th June, contained in Paper (D).

The reply of the French Government is given in Paper (E). It maintains the view originally put forward by the Acting French Consul, that under Article IV of the Treaty between France and Muscat of 1844, which still governs the relations of France with Zanzibar, Salim, as being in French service, is entitled to the same protection as if he were a Frenchman.

I am to request that you will take the papers now submitted to you into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the point at issue between the two Governments, namely, whether all Zanzibar subjects not under the protection of some Power other than Great Britain at the time of the assumption by Her Majesty of the Protectorate over Zanzibar are, since that date, under British protection, and therefore incapable of being under the protection of any other foreign State; or whether Article IV of the Treaty of 1844 between France and Muscat still holds good, whereby any Zanzibar subject enjoys French protection by being in the service of a Frenchman.

A copy of the Arrangement of 1890, whereby France agreed to recognize the British Protectorate over Zanzibar is annexed (Paper G), to the 3rd clause of which your attention is specially invited.

It runs as follows:—

"It is understood that the establishment of this Protectorate will not effect any rights and immunities enjoyed by French citizens in the territories in question."

Report.

In our opinion, when France consented to the British Protectorate in Zanzibar she agreed that all Zanzibari subjects not under the protection of some other Power, should be under British protection.

In the present case it is not necessary to decide the larger question as to what is the exact effect upon Article IV of the Treaty of 1844 of the establishment of a British Protectorate, and the assent thereto by the French under the Declaration of 1890. It is quite clear that the IVth Article of the Treaty between France and Muscat can apply only to persons bonâ fide in the service of French subjects, and in the present case it is plain that there is a mere pretence of service for the purpose of conferring French protection.

We are unable to agree with the contention of the French Ambassador in his despatch of the 5th July, 1897, that this is a matter which concerns the French Government exclusively. The IVth Article cannot inure in favour of persons asserted by the French Government to be in French service unless they are in fact so, and the service must be real, and not merely colourable. This is a question not for the French Government exclusively, but of the application of the clause in the Treaty, and it cannot be determined by the mere assertion of the French Government.

We are further of opinion that the Article relied on (Article IV of the Treaty of 1844), would not afford any exemption against proceedings of the kind which were taken against Salim in this case.

Gentlemen,

Indian immigration into Zanzibar and Pemba.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the following list of papers relating to the introduction of an Ordinance regulating Indian immigration into the Islands of Zanzibar and Pemba.

In the form in which the Ordinance now stands it is a document issued by the Sultan of Zanzibar, and purporting to be binding upon British subjects and protected persons. But the Sultan has no powers over British subjects or British-protected persons who enjoy the privilege of exterritoriality. It is, therefore, suggested by Her Majesty's Assistant Judge at Zanzibar that the Sultan's Ordinance should be put in force, so far as British subjects and British-protected persons are concerned, by a Queen's Regulation issued by Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General under the Zanzibar Order in Council.

Lord Salisbury is, however, advised that such a mode of procedure would be incorrect, and that the proper method would be for the Sultan to issue an Ordinance which would be binding upon his own subjects and persons subject to his jurisdiction only, and for Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General to make it binding upon British subjects and British-protected persons by a Queen's Regulation enforcing the terms of the Ordinance in their case, or otherwise, as may be found most convenient.

The views of Mr. Albert Gray and of Mr. Cracknall, Her Majesty's Judge in Zanzibar, are set forth in their letters marked (E) and (F) respectively.

It will be for the Government of India to say what safeguards will satisfy them in regard to the proposed immigration, and the actual terms of the Ordinance and Regulation must depend upon their views. I am, however, to request that you will take the papers now transmitted to you into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to the form in which the proposed measure should be introduced into the Islands of Zanzibar and Pemba.

Report.

In our opinion it would not be proper that the proposed Ordinance should be issued by the Sultan and applied to British subjects by Regulation under the Zanzibar Order in Council.

We agree with the reasons given by Mr. A. Gray for thinking that this course would be irregular.

We think that there ought to be a Regulation which will be binding on British subjects and protected persons, and an Ordinance by the Sultan which will be binding on persons subject to his jurisdiction. These should be issued simultaneously.

We do not think it practicable to confine the British Regulation to the obligations of the employed: it must deal with the whole subject. In many cases both employers and employed may be British subjects.

We would suggest that the difficulty as to jurisdiction in the case of employers who are neither Zanzibaris nor British subjects might be met by providing that allotments of labourers should be made only to such employers as formally agree to submit to the jurisdiction of the Courts and officers established by the Regulation and Ordinance. Without some such provision it is difficult to see how adequate security could be taken for the protection of Her Majesty's Indian subjects.

Foreign Office, September 20, 1897.

Gentlemen,

Restoration of fugitive slaves. Obligations of British officials of East African Protectorate.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to the obligations of British subjects serving in the Administration of the East Africa Protectorate in connection with the restoration of slaves to their owners. The question arises only as regards that portion of the Protectorate which is within the sovereignty of the Sultan of Zanzibar, and is hereinafter termed the Seyyidiyeh.

The circumstances are briefly as follows:—

On the 24th May, 1887, the Sultan of Zanzibar granted a concession (Document A) to the British East Africa Association, Articles 1 and 2 of which gave the Association power to administer portions of the Seyyidiyeh.

On the 3rd September, 1888, a Royal Charter (Document B) was granted to the Association, thenceforth called the Imperial British East Africa Company.

On the 9th October, 1888, the Sultan granted a further concession to the Company (Document C).

On the 31st August, 1889, the Sultan entered into an Agreement with Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, regulating the concessions to the Company (Document D). Article 2 of this Agreement provides that the Seyyidiyeh should be held by the Company as His Highness' "Wakil," or Plenipotentiary and Agent, and that it should be administered according to the "Sheri'at," that is, the (Mahommedan) laws or customs.

On the 14th June, 1890, the Sultan placed his dominions under British protection (Document E).

The Imperial British East Africa Company eventually decided to go into liquidation, and on the 1st July, 1895, the Administration of the Seyyidiyeh, theretofore exercised by the Company, was, with the assent of the Company and of the Sultan, assumed by Her Majesty's Government.

On the day of the transfer, Sir Lloyd Mathews, "Wazir," or First Minister of the Sultan, announced the transfer to the Chiefs and Elders of the Seyyidiyeh assembled at Mombasa, in a speech which contained the following passage:—

"All ancient customs will be allowed to continue."

And Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar, who had received from Her Majesty's Government instructions to make the necessary arrangements for carrying on the Administration, also made a speech, and said:—

". . . . The Mahommedan religion will remain, ... and all cases and lawsuits between natives will continue to be decided according to the 'Sheri'at'" (Document F).

The administration of the Seyyidiyeh is still exercised by Her Majesty's Government, from whom Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General for the East Africa Protectorate receives instructions for the purpose.

The Seyyidiyeh is therefore a Protectorate in which the territorial Sovereign, the Sultan of Zanzibar, has ceased to exercise any administrative functions. All such functions are exercised solely under instructions from Her Majesty's Government, both as regards persons over whom Her Majesty's Government has extra-territorial jurisdiction under Treaty with Zanzibar, and also over persons the subjects of the territorial Sovereign, namely, the Sultan of Zanzibar.

Although the Slave Trade has for some years been prohibited throughout the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar, the status of slavery, which has existed there ab antiquo, has not been abolished in the Seyyidiyeh. In that province, therefore, slavery is legal under the local law.

In the existing absence of administrative or other officers receiving instructions from the Sultan, the officers, whether British or Zanzibar subjects, or others, who administer the Government under instructions from Her Majesty's Government, have therefore administered to persons subject to the jurisdiction of the Sultan the local laws, and, amongst others, the local laws relating to slavery.

The same state of things obtained when the Administration was exercised by the Imperial British East Africa Company. The position is illustrated by a Proclamation (Document G) issued by the Company on the 1st May, 1890.

Thus subjects of the Sultan, and perhaps certain foreigners, have, in the Seyyidiyeh, legal property in their slaves, and are entitled to appeal to the officers of the Administration to assist them to recover slaves their property in the manner, whatever it may be, provided by the local law, to which both the slave-owners and the slaves are subject.

On the 24th June last, the question of slavery in the Seyyidiyeh was raised in the House of Commons (Document H), and during the course of the debate, Her Majesty's Attorney-General expressed concurrence in the position that it was unlawful for any British subject to accept, receive, or detain against his will any person as a slave within the territories of the Sultan of Zanzibar, of which, as stated above, the Seyyidiyeh is a part.

On the 26th June, Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General in that province was instructed to defer to the opinion expressed by the Attorney-General in the House of Commons to the effect that a British subject anywhere, no matter in what service or employment he may be engaged, is breaking the British law, and is exposing himself to penalties if he takes part in restoring to his master, or otherwise depriving of his liberty, any person on the sole ground that he is a fugitive slave (Document I).

Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General has now addressed to Lord Salisbury the inclosed despatch (Document K). He raises two questions:—

1. The obligations of a British subject, a public officer of the Administration of the Seyyidiyeh, instructed by Her Majesty's Government to administer the local law of that province, which recognizes the legal status of slavery and the right of the slave-owner to recover slaves his property; and

2. The question of the course of action which should in practice be followed by such an officer when applied to officially by a slave-owner to carry out the local law on the recovery of slaves.

Lord Salisbury is not aware of the provisions of English law, to which reference was made during the proceedings in the House of Commons; nor does he know to what law a British subject, a public officer of the Administration in the Seyyidiyeh, should appeal to dispense him from complying with a request made to him by a slave-owner to put in force the local law on the recovery of slaves.

Papers illustrating the course hitherto followed by officers in such cases, and the nature of the orders they have given, on receipt of such requests, in order to enforce the local law, are inclosed (Document L).

The recommendations of the Royal Commission appointed in 1876 on Fugitive Slaves (Document M), and the existing Instructions to Naval Officers employed in the suppression of the Slave Trade (Document N), should be borne in mind in the consideration of this subject.

I have the honour to request you to take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to the reply that should be made to the despatch in question, and also with any observations which will be of use to his Lordship in dealing with questions arising in connection with slavery in the Seyyidiyeh until such time as it may be found possible to abolish the status of slavery in that part of the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar.

I have, &c.

Report.

We are of opinion that the manner of enforcement of the local law as to slavery in the Seyyidiyeh should be modified so far as this can be done consistently with good faith.

We think that the issue of search warrants should be discontinued. It is not shown that there is any obligation on the British Administration to give active assistance of this kind for the recovery of fugitive slaves, and we think that it may be discontinued without any breach of the promise to maintain the law of Islam.

If the question whether any person is a slave is brought into Court, the Judge must, of course, decide in accordance with the local law if the facts establish slavery. So long as slavery exists, judgment might, for instance, properly be given against any man who forcibly detained slaves belonging to another person, and probably damages would be recoverable against any person who enticed them away, or harboured them. But where slaves have escaped, we would suggest that the owner be left to recapture them himself, every precaution being taken against abuse in the way of cruelty to the person seized, or seizing the wrong person.

The subject is undoubtedly a most difficult one, but it is probably true, as remarked by Her Majesty's Commissioner, Sir A. Hardinge, that any difficulty which may arise in a particular case may bring with it its own solution.

The Courts must, of course, recognize as lawful the detention of a slave by his master, and restrain any other person from forcibly interfering with his property, and give damages in suitable cases. But the law of Islam may be recognized in this respect without creating the odium in this country which the employment of the police to assist actively in the work of capturing slaves is certain to occasion.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, January 15, 1898.

Vestment of lands acquired for Uganda Railway.

ON the 22nd September last you favoured the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs with your opinion with regard to the vestment of the lands acquired for the purposes of the Uganda Railway in the East Africa and the Uganda Protectorates.

The Treasury Solicitor, acting on your Report, instructed Mr. Albert Gray to prepare a draft deed for the purpose of vesting the lands in certain trustees to be appointed by Her Majesty's Government.

I have now the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you a copy of a letter which has been received from Mr. Gray,* pointing out that, as regards the practice under the provisions of "The (Indian) Land Acquisition Act, 1894," after certain initial steps, the Collector enters upon the land required for public purposes, and that thereupon (section 16) this land vests in the Government without any conveyance.

Mr. Gray, after expressing doubts as to the person or persons in whom land acquired by the Local Government in East Africa would vest, proceeds to state that two courses appear to be open to the Secretary of State—

1. To direct that when any land has vested in the Commissioner, he shall forthwith convey it to such trustees as are proposed in your Report; or

2. To direct that the trustees shall, for the purposes of section 16 of the Land Acquisition Act, stand in the place of the "Government."

Mr. Gray recommends the adoption of the second course if you regard such a direction as being a proper exercise of the powers of Her Majesty under Article 11 of "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897."

I have the honour to request that Lord Salisbury may be favoured with your views on the point to which attention has been specially called by Mr. Gray, and also on the other questions raised in his letter, together with any further observations of a more general character which you may desire to offer on the subject.

The papers which accompanied the letter to you from this Department, on which you reported on the 22nd September last, are inclosed herewith for convenience of reference.

I have, &c.

Report.

We do not think that section 11 (e (ii)) empowers the Secretary of State to direct that trustees shall, for the purposes of section 16, stand in the place of the Government. Section 11 (e (ii)) gives the Secretary of State power, by order, to direct by what authority any jurisdiction, powers, or duties incident to such enactment shall be exercised. These words are not, in our opinion, apt to denote the case of the vesting of lands.

We think that the case should be dealt with by an Order in Council, providing that in all cases under the Land Acquisition Act the land shall vest in the Commissioner for the time being, or in trustees to be named by the Secretary of State in each case, with power to the Secretary of State to appoint new trustees from time to time.

Orders in Council for vesting of lands acquired for Uganda Railway, &c.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 9, 1898.

WITH reference to your letter of the 26th January last respecting the vesting of lands acquired for the Uganda Railway and other public purposes in the East Africa and Uganda Protectorates, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the drafts of two Orders in Council on the subject, which have been prepared by Mr. A Gray.

I am to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether these draft Orders in Council may, in their present shape, properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval, and generally with any further observations you may desire to offer on the matters with which they deal.

The papers which have already been before you on this subject are herewith returned, in case you may wish to refer to them.

East Africa Protectorate.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty has power and jurisdiction within the territories comprised in the East Africa Protectorate:

And whereas by Article II of "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897," "The Land Acquisition Act, 1894," an Act of the Governor-General of India in Council is applied to the East Africa Protectorate:

And whereas it is expedient that provision should be made for the vesting of lands taken for public purposes, under the provisions of the said Act:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue, and in exercise of the powers on this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise, in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. Any lands, whereof possession has been or shall, after the passing of this Order, be taken for public purposes, under the provisions of "The Land Acquisition Act, 1894," shall vest absolutely in the Commissioner and Consul-General, and his successors in office, for the time being in trust for Her Majesty, or if the Secretary of State at any time or in any case by order under his hand so directs, in such other trustee or trustees as the Secretary of State may appoint.

2. The Secretary of State may, when he thinks fit, by a like order remove any trustee so appointed, and may appoint any new or additional trustee or trustees.

3. This Order shall be read and construed with "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897," and may be cited as "The East Africa (Acquisition of Lands) Order in Council, 1898."

4. And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Salisbury, K.G., one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, August 3, 1898.

Nationality of children (1) of Mr. Strange, British subject naturalized abroad; (2) born abroad of Mr. Pollak, naturalized British subject. Procedure as to re-admission to British nationality of British subject naturalized abroad.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. H. Bertram Cox's letter of the 15th ultimo, stating that he was directed by you to transmit to us a letter and other documents received from Her Majesty's Agent at Pretoria with reference to certain questions relating to the nationality of the children of Mr. Strange and of Mr. Pollak.

That it appeared that Mr. Strange was born in England and emigrated to the South African Republic in 1888, where, in 1889, he married a British subject. That his first child was born at Pretoria on the 2nd April, 1891, and his second child on the 27th December, 1892, also at Pretoria. That Mr. Strange took the oath of allegiance to the South African Republic on the 23rd September, 1891.

That Mr. Pollak, who was by origin a subject of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, was naturalized in this country as a British subject under the provisions of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," on the 16th August, 1889, and that his children were born at Johannesburg subsequently to the date of his naturalization in the United Kingdom. That Mr. Pollak had applied to have the births of those children registered by Her Majesty's Consul at Johannesburg.

That the circumstances in which Mr. Strange became naturalized under the provisions of the laws of the Republic in September 1891 would be found on p. 2 of his letter to the British Vice-Consul at Johannesburg. That it appeared, however, to be open to some possible question whether Mr. Strange on that occasion voluntarily became naturalized in a foreign State within the meaning of "The Naturalization Act, 1870" (33 Vict., cap. 14, sec. 6), so as thereby to have ceased, in contemplation of English law, to be a British subject.

That Mr. Strange was now anxious to take the oath of allegiance to Her Majesty in order that he might be able to allege that, under Article 16 (a) of the Law No. 3 of 1894 of the South African Republic, he had lost his burgher rights and therefore ceased to be a citizen of the Republic.

That it appeared to you to be doubtful whether Mr. Strange was legally entitled to take the oath of allegiance in this manner and for this purpose, having regard to the provisions of Sections 9 and 14 (7) of "The Promissory Oaths Act, 1868."

That if Mr. Strange desired to obtain readmission to British nationality he must, it would seem, fulfil the conditions and conform to the procedure prescribed by Sections 7 and 8 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," and that the former section seemed to imply that the taking of the oath of allegiance to Her Majesty was one of the later steps if not the last step, which must be taken by a person seeking to acquire British nationality.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to request us to take the papers into consideration and advise you:—

1. What is the position of the children of Mr. Strange? Are they or either of them, British subjects, or are they citizens of the South African Republic?

2. What is the position of Mr. Pollak's children? Are they, or any of them, British subjects, or are they citizens of the South African Republic, and should their births be registered by Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Johannesburg?

3. Whether by taking the oath of allegiance to the South African Republic in 1891 Mr. Strange "voluntarily became naturalized in a foreign State" within the meaning of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," so as to be deemed, in contemplation of English law, to have ceased to be a British subject, and to have become an alien?

4. Whether it is legally permissible for Mr. Strange to take the oath of allegiance in the manner and for the purposes desired.

5. Whether a person seeking admission, or readmission, to British nationality can take the oath of allegiance before receiving a certificate of naturalization, or (as the case may be) of readmission to British nationality, from the Secretary of State?

6. If so, at what stage of the proceedings such a person is entitled to take the oath of allegiance?

7. Generally.

We have taken these papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That the children of Mr. Strange are, by Section 10 (3) of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," subjects of the South African Republic if, according to the laws of that Republic, they have become naturalized therein as would appear to be the case.

2. This is a question of great difficulty which has never been decided. But the better opinion would appear to be that a certificate of naturalization does not make even subsequent children of the person so naturalized, if they are born abroad, British subjects unless they reside here, during infancy, with the parent. We do not desire to express any final opinion on this point, which may become one of great importance, but do not advise the registration of Mr. Pollak's children as British subjects.

3. Yes. We assume that by the law of the Transvaal he became a subject.

4. No. The oath of allegiance can be taken only after complying with the other conditions necessary to become a British subject.

5. No.

6. After receiving the certificate, or complying with the conditions of readmission to British nationality.

7. We have nothing further to add.

"Africa Protectorates (Capital Sentences) Order in Council, 1898."

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying draft Order in Council amending the provisions of Article 74 of "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," and stipulating that no sentence of death given under its authority shall be carried into effect until confirmed by the Secretary of State.

The inclosed despatch from Mr. G. Wilson, who, when it was written, was administering the Protectorate of Uganda, shows the difficulties which arise under the present Law, and the views of Lord Salisbury on the subject are embodied in the inclosed draft instructions to Mr. Albert Gray of the 30th ultimo.

I am to ask whether, in your opinion, the draft Order in Council, as it now stands, may properly be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

A copy of the Africa Order in Council is transmitted, with the other three papers mentioned, for convenience of reference.

AFRICA ORDER IN COUNCIL.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has power and jurisdiction in the parts of Africa mentioned in "The Africa Order in Council, 1889":

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered as follows:—

1. So much of Article 74 of "The Africa Order in Council, 1889" as requires that in every case of sentence of death the Minutes of the trial shall be transmitted to a Secretary of State, and that the sentence shall not be carried into effect until confirmed by him, is hereby repealed as to every Protectorate of Her Majesty in Africa, and the following provisions shall be substituted, that is to say:

(a.) In every case of sentence of death the Judicial Officer by whom it was pronounced shall send the Minutes of the trial to the Commissioner for the Protectorate, appending thereto a ~~note~~ Certificate under his hand ~~stating~~ (~~together with such other observations as he may think fit~~) ~~whether in his~~ to the effect that, in his opinion, ~~sufficient grounds do or do not exist rendering it~~ it is or is not desirable that the sentence should be reconsidered ~~with a view to a remission or a commutation thereof~~ by a Secretary of State, and adding such other observations as he may think fit.

Death sentence on Amari Mahomed in Uganda.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of Mr. Balfour, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the case of Amari Mahomed, a native officer in the Uganda Rifles, who has been convicted of murder, and sentenced to death in Uganda.

Amari Mahomed was tried in the Vice-Consular Court for that Protectorate under "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," a copy of which is inclosed (document A). The Protectorate of Uganda is a part of the local jurisdiction of the British sphere on the east coast of Africa, constituted by the instructions of the Secretary of State, dated the 31st July, 1891 (document B), issued under Article 5 of the said Africa Order in Council.

An account of the trial is contained in the despatch No. 53 of the 30th May last from Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General in the Protectorate (document C), and the despatch No. 19 of the 28th May last from Mr. Collinson (document D), Her Majesty's Vice-Consul for the Uganda Protectorate.

I have the honour to request you to take the papers sent herewith into your consideration, and to favour Mr. Balfour with your opinion as to whether the death sentence should be executed on Amari Mahomed; or, if not, into what punishment it should be commuted; and, finally, I have the honour to request you to favour Mr. Balfour with any observations which may occur to you on consideration of the papers.

In our opinion, the sentence of death should not be carried out.

In substance the offence was that of levying war unjustifiably, and we think that great allowance should be made for the critical circumstances, and the influence of the clerk over the prisoner.

We think that the case is one for punishment by a term of imprisonment and deportation under Article 48, say for two years.

Naturalization of Aliens in Southern Rhodesia.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Wingfield's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by you to transmit to us copy of a letter from the Acting Secretary to the British South Africa Company, dated the 7th September, together with a telegram, dated the 12th September, from the High Commissioner for South Africa, respecting the question of the naturalization of aliens in the territories administered by the British South Africa Company.

That, in view of the contemplated issue of an Order in Council providing for the government of Southern Rhodesia and the election of members of the Legislative Council proposed by that Order, it had been thought desirable to consider in advance the question of the qualification of the electors who were to be entitled to vote at the elections of members of that Council.

That it had been considered that, if possible, the right to vote should be confined to British subjects, and consequently, in order to avoid the exclusion from the exercise of electoral rights of persons otherwise qualified for the franchise, a desire had been expressed that such persons should be permitted to become naturalized in Southern Rhodesia. That a difficulty, however, had been felt in providing for such naturalization, owing to the fact that the territories administered by the British South Africa Company were protected territories, and had never been formally declared to be part of Her Majesty's dominions, and that the laws which were in force had been made either by the High Commissioner or the British South Africa Company under the powers conferred by the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, or by the British South Africa Company under the provisions of their Charter.

That Mr. Wingfield was to observe, in that connection, that a Naturalization Act was passed in India in 1852, while that country was governed by the East India Company in trust for Her Majesty, and that a copy of a note upon the point drawn up in the Legal Department of the India Office was inclosed for reference.

That Mr. Wingfield was further to observe that it would seem to follow from the statements made by the Lord Chief Justice in his summing-up in the case of Reg. v. Jameson and others (as reported at p. 590 of the "Times" Law Reports, vol. xii) that a territory might be part of Her Majesty's dominions although no formal annexation had taken place, the fact being a necessary inference from acts of sovereignty exercised by Her Majesty therein.

That should it, however, be your opinion that it was not possible, without express authority from Parliament, to provide for the naturalization of aliens in Rhodesia, the further question would arise whether, by Order in Council under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, aliens could be permitted to take the oath of allegiance to Her Majesty, with a view to qualifying for the franchise, and that, in that connection, Mr. Wingfield was to transmit to us a copy of our Report of the 3rd August last.

That Mr. Wingfield was to request that we would take the above matters into our consideration, and advise you:—

1. Whether there was power, by an Order in Council made under the provisions of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," to provide for the naturalization of aliens within the limits of a "Protectorate?"

2. Whether the British South Africa Company had power, under their Charter, to enact a Law providing for the naturalization of aliens in Southern Rhodesia?

3. Whether there was any other means by which power to naturalize aliens in a Protectorate could be conferred?

4. Whether Southern Rhodesia could be regarded as so far part of Her Majesty's dominions as to be deemed a British possession within the meaning of sections 16 and 17 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870?"

5. Whether there was power, by Order in Council, under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, to enable aliens to take the oath of allegiance to Her Majesty as a condition of the right to vote for the election of members of the Legislative Council.

6. Generally.

In obedience to your commands, we have taken the matters referred to us in Mr. Wingfield's letter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That we are of opinion that Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, provide for the naturalization of aliens within the limits of Southern Rhodesia.

It is not material for this purpose whether Southern Rhodesia is a British possession or not. We think it is; but even if it is not to be so regarded, Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, legislate as to naturalization within Southern Rhodesia considered as a Protectorate. The 16th and 17th sections of the Naturalization Act do not negative Her Majesty's right to provide for naturalization in places out of her dominions where she has jurisdiction; they merely deal with the effect of land laws made by the Legislatures of British possessions.

The Company could not provide for naturalization by Ordinance.

We have, &c.

Note drawn up in Legal Department, India Office.

India, before the Crown took over the direct Government, was part of "Her Majesty's Dominions." Many Acts which apply to "Her Majesty's Dominions" or "Her Majesty's Possessions abroad" are in force in India. The early Copyright Acts are illustrations. Naturalization of aliens in India was permitted by Indian Act 30 of 1852 still in force. The form of oath given in the schedule required the applicant to swear that he would be "faithful and bear true allegiance to the Sovereign of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of these territories."

Before the transfer in 1858 India "was governed by the Company" but "in trust for Her Majesty."

Naturalization of Aliens in S. Rhodesia O. in C.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, December 8, 1898.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Graham's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 29th October last, he was directed to transmit to us for our consideration two copies of the draft of an Order in Council to provide for the naturalization of aliens in Southern Rhodesia, which had been drawn up in the Colonial Office.

That the terms of the draft were based upon the Naturalization Act, No. 2, of 1883, which was at present in force at the Cape of Good Hope, but that provision had been made in clause 4 of the draft for a qualifying period of residence. That inasmuch, however, as it might be found desirable to permit aliens who had been already naturalized in a British Colony to become naturalized in Southern Rhodesia, although they might not possess the qualification of previous residence therein, clause 5 of the draft had been inserted to enable this to be done.

That the original draft Order in Council had been submitted to the Foreign Office for their observations, and that certain amendments were suggested by that Department. That a copy of the original draft in which these amendments (all of which were inserted in the draft submitted to us) are indicated in red ink, was transmitted with Mr. Graham's letter.

That the matter was regarded in Southern Rhodesia as one of some urgency in view of the approaching election of members of the Legislative Council under the provisions of the Southern Rhodesia Order in Council, which came into operation on the 25th November last.

That Mr. Graham was to request us to take the draft Order in Council into our consideration, and to advise you—

1. Whether its terms are proper and sufficient for the purpose for which it is intended.

2. If not, in what respect it should be amended.

In obedience to your commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

We approve the draft Order as altered in red ink, and initialled by us.

Annex.

Draft Order in Council for Naturalization of Aliens, Southern Rhodesia.

WHEREAS Her Majesty the Queen has power and jurisdiction in the territories of South Africa known as Southern Rhodesia:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty is pleased by and with the advice of her Privy Council to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Order may be cited as "The Southern Rhodesia Naturalization Order in Council, 1898."

Definitions.

2. In this Order, unless the context otherwise requires—

"Southern Rhodesia" means the territory for the time being within the limits of "The Southern Rhodesia Order in Council, 1898."

"The Administrator" means, if there be two or more Administrators, the senior of such Administrators, and includes an Acting Administrator.

"The Gazette" means any official Gazette published in Southern Rhodesia.

Aliens may own property.

3. An alien may in Southern Rhodesia purchase, acquire, own, or dispose of movable or immovable property of any description in like manner as natural-born subjects of Her Majesty: Provided that this section shall not qualify an alien for any office or franchise which such alien does not now by law possess, nor entitle an alien to any right or privilege except such rights and privileges as are hereby expressly given to him.

Alien may apply for letters of naturalization.

4. (1.) An alien who within such limited time before making the application hereinafter mentioned as may be allowed by the Administrator, either by general order or on any special occasion, has resided in Southern Rhodesia for a term of not less than twelve months, and intends, if such application be granted, to continue to reside in Southern Rhodesia, may apply to the Administrator for letters of naturalization in the form provided in the first Schedule hereto.

(2.) The applicant shall adduce in support of his application such evidence of his residence and intention to continue to reside, and of the matters set forth in the said Schedule as the Administrator may require, and shall furnish proof to the satisfaction of the Administrator that notice of his intention to apply for letters of naturalization has been published in two issues of the Gazette.

(3.) The Administrator, if satisfied with the evidence adduced, shall take the case of the applicant into consideration, and may with or without assigning any reason give or withhold letters of naturalization as he thinks most conducive to the public good, and no appeal shall lie from his decision, but such letters of naturalization shall not take effect until the applicant has made a declaration of allegiance to Her Majesty as hereinafter provided.

Naturalization in Southern Rhodesia of aliens naturalized elsewhere.

5. Any person resident in Southern Rhodesia who has previously obtained a certificate of naturalization as a British subject elsewhere than in Southern Rhodesia may, notwithstanding that he has not resided within Southern Rhodesia for a period not less than twelve months prior to the date of his application, submit such certificate, and make an application to the Administrator stating that—

(a.) He is the person named in such certificate;

(b.) That the certificate has been obtained without any fraud or intentionally false statement;

(c.) That the signature and seal (if any) thereto are, to the best of his knowledge and belief, genuine;

(d.) That he intends, if naturalized, to reside in Southern Rhodesia; and shall adduce in support of his application such evidence concerning the matters aforesaid, and concerning the matters set forth in the first Schedule hereto, as the Administrator may require. The Administrator, if satisfied with the evidence adduced, shall take the case of the applicant into consideration, and may, with or without assigning any reason, give or withhold letters of naturalization as he thinks most conducive to the public good, and no appeal shall lie from his decision, but such letters of naturalization shall not take effect until the applicant has made a declaration of allegiance to Her Majesty as hereinafter provided.

Declaration of allegiance to be taken.

6. Every alien to whom the Administrator may grant letters of naturalization shall, before the delivery of such letters to him, make and subscribe before a Magistrate a declaration of allegiance in the form contained in the second Schedule hereto, which declaration shall be of the same force and effect as an oath of allegiance.

Rights of naturalized aliens.

7. An alien to whom letters of naturalization have been granted shall, in Southern Rhodesia, be entitled to all political and other rights, powers, and privileges, and be subject to all obligations to which a natural-born British subject is entitled or subject in Southern Rhodesia.

National status of married women and infant children.

8.—(1.) A married woman shall, in Southern Rhodesia, be deemed to be a subject of the State of which her husband is for the time being a subject.

(2.) The following persons shall be deemed and taken to be naturalized, and shall have all the rights, privileges, and obligations in Southern Rhodesia of natural-born subjects of Her Majesty:—

(a.) Any alien woman who is already, or who shall hereafter be, married to any person who shall be or become naturalized under this Order.

(b.) Where the father or the mother, being a widow, shall be or become naturalized under this Order, any child of such father or mother who during infancy shall be or become resident with such father or mother in Southern Rhodesia.

Returns to be published of letters issued

9. A Return of persons to whom letters of naturalization shall have been granted under this Act shall be published in the Gazette, half-yearly, in the months of January and July, and such Return shall show:—

(1.) The names of such person in full.
(2.) Their birth-place.
(3.) Nationality prior to grant of letters of naturalization.
(4.) Occupation.
(5.) Residence in Southern Rhodesia.
(6.) Date of the issue of letters of naturalization.

Penalty for false declaration.

10. If any person shall wilfully make any false statement in any application made under the provisions of this Act for the purpose of obtaining letters of naturalization, he shall, upon conviction, incur the same penalties as are by law provided against persons convicted of wilful and corrupt perjury. And in case letters of naturalization shall have been granted, such letters shall be void.

Fee.

11. Every person obtaining letters of naturalization under this Act shall pay for the same a fee, to be collected by means of stamps, of 1*l*.

Register to kept.

12. The Administrator shall cause a register to be made and kept of all letters of naturalization granted under this Order, and shall, upon the application of any person, and upon payment of a fee of 1*s*. in respect of every name, permit a search to be made for the name of any person upon, or supposed to be upon, the register.

Certificate of attesting.

A certificate under the hand of the Administrator attesting the fact of the issue of letters of naturalization to any person whose name appears upon the said register may, at the discretion of the Administrator, be issued upon payment by means of stamps of a fee of 5*s*. Every such certificate shall be received as evidence of the facts therein stated.

Evidence.

13. Every letter of naturalization and every such certificate as aforesaid shall be admissible in evidence without proof of the signature or seal attesting the same, and shall be primâ facie evidence of the person named therein being duly naturalized, and of the signature or seal attesting the same, and of the official character of the persons appearing to have signed the same.

Gentlemen,

Expulsion of Mr. Ben Tillett from Belgium.

WITH reference to your Report of the 16th December last, I have the honour to transmit herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, and to request that you will take into your consideration a Memorandum which has been drawn up by Mr. J. F. Rawlinson, Q.C., on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, in support of their claim against the Government of His Majesty the King of the Belgians with regard to the expulsion of Mr. Ben Tillett from Belgium.

His Lordship would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to whether the Memorandum may properly be submitted to the Arbitrator in its present form, or whether any, and, if so, what amendments or modifications should be made therein.

I am to add that as the case should be in the hands of the Arbitrator not later than the 20th instant, Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with a reply at your earliest convenience.

A copy of your previous Report on the case, as well as the various papers submitted to you on that occasion, are also inclosed for convenience of reference.

I have, &c.

Annex.

Memorandum on behalf of the Government of Her Britannic Majesty in support of their Claim against the Government of His Majesty the King of the Belgians with regard to the Expulsion from Belgium of Mr. Ben Tillett.

ON the morning of Thursday, the 20th August, 1896, Mr. Ben Tillett, a British subject arrived at Antwerp by steamer from Harwich. It was his intention, which, but for the circumstances hereinafter mentioned, he would have carried out, to return from Antwerp to Harwich by the steamer leaving Antwerp on the evening of Friday, the 21st August.

2. At 3·30 P.M. on the afternoon of Friday, the 21st August, Mr. Tillett was arrested in Antwerp by the Belgian police and taken to a police office.

He protested against the arrest, and asked on what charge he was arrested. The police officer having control of the police office answered that no specific charge was preferred against Mr. Tillett, but that he was arrested in pursuance of orders given by the Belgian Minister of Justice.

3. Mr. Tillett was detained at the said police office for a period of three or four hours until after 7 P.M. on the 21st August. He was then taken by the Belgian police to the prison at Antwerp. On his arrival at the said prison, though no accusation or criminal charge was preferred against him, Mr. Tillett was in all respects treated as a criminal or as a person arrested on a criminal charge.

He was stripped naked, searched, and placed in a prisoner's cell. The cell was damp, full of foul odour, and the walls, the floor, and the bed were covered with filth. Upon Mr. Tillett's complaint, he was removed to another cell, the condition of which, except for the bed, was equally filthy, repulsive, and injurious to health.

4. On being incarcerated, as hereinbefore stated, Mr. Tillett requested permission to communicate with his wife, his friends, and Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Antwerp On the morning of Saturday, the 22nd August, he made a written request to the like effect. These requests were disregarded.

5. On Saturday, the 22nd August, Mr. Tillett was on several occasions taken from his cell into the presence of various officials, and on each of these occasions he was compelled to wear the dress reserved for criminals and prisoners, namely, the cowl or cloak worn by prisoners in the prison at Antwerp when outside their cells.

6. At 4 P.M. on Saturday, the 22nd August, Mr. Tillett was informed that he would be liberated in two hours, and, finally, soon after 6 P.M., he was allowed to leave the prison, and was escorted to the steamer which left Antwerp that evening.

7. Mr. Tillett was thus subject to arrest and imprisonment for a continuous period of twenty-six and a-half hours. No charge was ever made against Mr. Tillett, and no sufficient explanation even given to him of the reason of his arrest.

8. Throughout his imprisonment Mr. Tillett suffered from cold, from damp, and from the absence of sufficient and wholesome food. By reason of these circumstances he suffered serious injury to his health. Such injury included severe chill, inflammation of the respiratory organs, shock to the nervous system, and complete prostration from which Mr. Tillett has never wholly recovered. Mr. Tillett has since his incarceration been unable to pursue his vocation, and has been obliged to proceed to Australia for his health.

9. For the reasons and on the grounds hereinafter set forth, it is submitted that the Government of His Majesty the King of the Belgians are liable to make adequate compensation for the matters complained of, and having regard to the indignities suffered by Mr. Tillett, to the expenses incurred by him through his illness, and to the loss he has sustained by not having been able to attend to his business, the sum claimed on his behalf by way of compensation is 3,000*l.*, and, further, it is prayed that the Arbitrator shall adjudge that the Government of His Majesty the King of the Belgians should pay the amount of the necessary costs of both parties incident to the arbitration.

10. As to the question of the liability of the Government of His Majesty the King of the Belgians for the acts complained of, even assuming that a State has the right to expel a foreigner from its territory, and in case of his refusal to go, or in case of other necessity, a right to use force or restraint in such a manner as might be reasonably necessary to secure his leaving the country within a reasonable time, it is submitted that, in the absence of any criminal charge against the foreigner, the State has otherwise no power, according to the accepted usages and principles of international law, to imprison or use force to the person of the foreigner.

In the present case, therefore, it might have been justifiable for the Belgian Government to have requested Mr. Tillett to leave Antwerp by the steamer leaving for England at 7 P.M. on Friday, the 21st August, and, if necessary, to have used force or means of restraint to compel him to do so. But it is submitted that the Belgian Government had no right to subject Mr. Tillett to the treatment he underwent or to the indignities he sustained, and, further, no right to detain him in their territory, and so prevent him leaving Belgium by the steamer on the 21st August, as he would otherwise have done.

11. The following authorities bear out the above propositions and explain the present position of international law on the subject:—

"(i.) Bluntschli, 'Das Moderne Völkerrecht,' Book V, Chapter IV, § 384:

"'Wird ein gehörig legitimirter Fremder ohne Grund verhindert, das Land zu betreten oder grundlos oder in ungebührlicher Form weggewiesen, so ist sein Heimatstat veranlasst, wegen Verletzüng des völkerrechtlichen Verkehrs Beschwerde zu führen und je nach umständen Genugthuung zu fordern.'

"Traduit de l'Allemand par M. G. Laudy, MDCCCLXX. 'Le Droit International Codifié':—

"'§ 384. Lorsqu'un Gouvernement interdit sans motif l'entrée du territoire à un étranger dûment légitimé, ou l'expulse sans cause et avec des formes blessantes, l'État dont cet étranger est citoyen a le droit de réclamer contre cette violation du droit international et de demander au besoin satisfaction.'

"(ii.) Heffter, 'Le Droit International de l'Europe,' § 33, Proposition 6:—

"'Aucune Puissance ne peut refuser de recevoir sur son territoire les sujets d'une Puissance amie, dès qu'ils justifient d'une manière régulière de leur individualité. Elle ne peut, après les avoir reçus, les renvoyer de son territoire sans des motifs qui doivent être communiqués à leurs Gouvernements respectifs. Dans tous les cas le renvoi ne peut s'effectuer avec des formes blessantes, si la conduite de l'individu renvoyé ne les justifie pas. C'est une conséquence du droit de respect.'

"(iii.) Vattel, 'Le Droit des Gens,' Liv. ii, Chapitre VIII, § 108:—

"'L'État qui doit respecter les droits des autres nations, et généralement ceux de tout homme, quelqu'il soit, ne peut donc s'arroger aucun droit sur la personne d'un étranger qui, pour être entré dans son territoire, ne s'est point rendu son sujet. L'étranger ne peut prétendre la liberté de vivre dans le pays sans en respecter les lois: s'il les viole, il est punissable, comme perturbateur du repos public, et coupable envers la société ; mais il n'est point soumis, comme les sujets, à tous les commandements du Souverain : et si l'on exige de lui des choses qu'il ne veut point faire, il peut quitter le pays. Libre en tout temps de s'en aller, on n'est point en droit de le retenir, si ce n'est pour un temps et pour des raisons très particulières. comme serait, en temps de guerre, la crainte qu'étant instruit de l'état du pays et des places fortes un étranger ne portât ses lumières à l'ennemi. Les voyages des Hollandais aux Indes Orientales nous apprennent que les Rois de la Corée retiennent par force les étrangers qui font naufrage sur leurs côtes. Bodin assure qu'un usage si contraire au droit des gens se pratiquait de son temps en Éthiopie et même en Muscovie. C'est blesser tout ensemble les droits du particulier et ceux de l'État auquel il appartient.'

"(iv.) In 1888 the Institute of International Law ('l'Institut de Droit International'), a body comprising the leading international jurists of the world, discussed at length the question of the right of a State to, and the methods whereby a State ought to, expel foreigners (cf. 'Annuaire de l'Institut,' Tome X, 1888–89, pp. 239–246, and 'Revue de Droit International,' Tome XX, pp. 498–607, &c.), and having considered the various authorities on the point, concluded, inter alia, that—

"'La décision prononçant une expulsion ordinaire et indiquant les dispositions sur lesquelles elle se fonde devra être signifiée à l'intéressé avant d'être mise à exécution.'"

Gentlemen,

Anglo-Bolivian Extradition Treaty O. in C.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the draft of an Order in Council for the purpose of carrying into effect an Extradition Treaty between the United Kingdom and Bolivia, which was signed at Lima on the 22nd February, 1892, where the ratifications were exchanged on the 7th March last.

I am to inclose the accompanying letters from the Home, Colonial, and India Offices, expressing concurrence in the terms of the draft Order in Council, and I am to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether it may, in its present form, be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

Annex.

WHEREAS by the Extradition Acts, 1870 to 1895, it was amongst other things enacted that, where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that Her Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in the part of Her Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient.

And whereas a Treaty was concluded on the 22nd day of February, 1892, between Her Majesty and his Excellency the President of the Republic of Bolivia for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, which Treaty is in the terms following:—

And whereas the ratifications of the said Treaty were exchanged at Lima on the 7th day of March, 1898.

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to her by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the day of , 1898, the said Acts shall apply in the case of Bolivia, and of the said Treaty with the President of the Republic of Bolivia.

Provided always that the operation of the said Acts shall be and remain suspended within the Dominion of Canada so long as an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the extradition of Fugitive Criminals," shall continue in force there, and no longer.

BULGARIA.

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, February 3, 1898.

Gentlemen,

Régime applicable in Bulgaria to subjects and produce of Brit. Colonies not parties to Anglo-Bulgarian Comml. Arrangement.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith the papers marked in the accompanying list which refer to the question as to what régime is applicable in Bulgaria to the subjects and produce of those British Colonies which decline to accede to the recent Commercial Arrangement concluded between Great Britain and that country.

It has always been claimed that, apart from any more recent Treaty, British trade is entitled to most-favoured-nation treatment in Bulgaria in virtue of the Treaty of Berlin, a position which none of the Colonies has, so far as his Lordship is aware, done anything to forfeit.

Article VIII of that Treaty, of which a copy is inclosed (Paper A), provides that "the subjects and citizens and commerce of all the Powers shall be treated in the Principality on a footing of strict equality;" and this principle has hitherto been observed. But it is argued in Bulgaria that the right which has been conceded to her of negotiating independent Treaties carries with it the right of applying differential treatment against those countries with which she has no direct Treaty engagements. (See Mr. Elliot's despatches No. 16, Treaty, Paper G, and No. 17, Treaty, Paper H.)

It will be seen from the Colonial Office letters of the 30th October and 5th November (Papers C and D respectively), that Canada and the Cape of Good Hope have intimated their non-accession to the Anglo-Bulgarian Arrangement of July 1897 (Paper B). The question of the treatment of those Colonies may therefore arise at any moment, but it is thought that its solution may perhaps interest in an even higher degree some others of Her Majesty's foreign possessions.

It seems, therefore, of importance to determine whether such Colonies as may decline to accede to the recent Convention are deprived of the most-favoured-nation treatment in Bulgaria, which was secured by the Treaty of Berlin by reason of Her Majesty having entered into a Commercial Arrangement with Bulgaria containing a most-favoured-nation clause, and whether, if these Colonies should refuse to give most-favoured-nation treatment to Bulgaria, they could, even if otherwise entitled to the benefit of the Treaty of Berlin, claim most-favoured-nation treatment in Bulgaria.

In this connection I am to refer you to a Report from your predecessors in office in 1888 in regard to the question whether the Treaties which were in force between this country and Turkey (including more particularly the Commercial Treaty of the 29th April, 1861) at the time of the signature of the Treaty of Berlin on the 13th July, 1878, were still in force in Bulgaria, although such Treaties might have been denounced by Turkey subsequently to that date.

The Law Officers were then of opinion that Bulgaria would remain bound by the Treaty with Turkey of 1861, at any rate until the 9th July, 1889, and that after that date it would be competent to Her Majesty's Government to claim from that of Bulgaria most-favoured-nation treatment under the Capitulations of 1675 and the Berlin Treaty of 1878.

A copy of this Report is inclosed (Paper L).

Copies of the following further documents, marked M to Q, are also sent herewith, for convenience of reference, and as throwing some light on the successive stages by which the present Treaty position of this country in respect to Bulgaria was reached; the three latter, O to Q, have, however, now ceased to be in force, and are replaced by the Arrangement concluded last year (Paper B).

I have the honour to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the points submitted in this reference, and also with any general observations which you may be disposed to offer on the subject.

Report.

By the Declaration annexed to the Commercial Arrangement of July 1897 between Great Britain and Bulgaria, it is provided that all the stipulations of the Treaties in force are maintained in so far as they shall not have been modified by the Arrangement or by special Convention.

The VIIIth Article of the Treaty of Berlin governed the relations between Great Britain and Bulgaria at the time of the Arrangement of 1897.

Any Colony which may elect, under the 5th Article of the Commercial Arrangement, to refuse acceptance thereof is remitted to the rights of British subjects under the VIIIth Article of the Treaty of Berlin. Under that Article, the people and commerce of such Colonies would be entitled to equality of treatment with the subjects and commerce of any of the Powers which were parties to the Treaty of Berlin.

We must, however, observe that it cannot be considered as beyond controversy whether the stipulation in the VIIIth Article for equality of treatment would entitle these Colonies to the treatment of the most favoured nation irrespective of their performing the conditions on which such treatment is extended to the subjects of the other Powers.

The Colonies are also entitled to the benefit of any stipulation affecting these questions which may be contained in any Treaties of Commerce and Navigation, Conventions, and Arrangements referred to in Article VIII of the Treaty of Berlin.

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 20, 1898.

Ad valorem duty of 14 per cent. on empty jute sacks from Calcutta.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith the papers noted in the accompanying list, which refer to a claim on the part of the Bulgarian Government to collect duty at the rate of 14 per cent. ad valorem on a consignment of empty jute sacks recently arrived at Bourgas from Calcutta.

The treatment of British goods in Bulgaria is, as you are aware, governed by the Commercial Arrangement concluded between this country and Bulgaria in July last. To that Arrangement, however, the Government of India decided not to adhere.

It will be seen from the despatch from Mr. Elliot, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Sophia (Paper E), that the Acting British Consular Agent at Bourgas was informed by the Director of Customs that the Ministry of Finance had ordered customs duty at the above rate to be levied in consequence of the official intimation received from Mr. Elliot that the Government of India had declined to accede to the Commercial Arrangement in question.

The question of what treatment was to be applied in Bulgaria to goods from British Colonies which had refused to adhere to the Anglo-Bulgarian Arrangement above mentioned was submitted to you in a letter from this Department of the 3rd February last (Paper A), and it was therein pointed out that the question might arise, in a practical shape, at any moment, and that its solution might interest in an even higher degree some others of Her Majesty's foreign possessions. This anticipation has been realized in the case which has now arisen.

In your report on this question of the 22nd February (Paper B) the opinion was expressed that "any Colony which may elect, under the 5th Article of the Commercial Arrangement, to refuse acceptance thereof is remitted to the rights of British subjects under the VIIIth Article of the Treaty of Berlin. Under that Article the people and commerce of such Colonies would be entitled to equality of treatment with the subjects and commerce of any of the Powers which were parties to the Treaty of Berlin."

It was added, however, that "it cannot be considered as beyond controversy whether the stipulation in the VIIIth Article for equality of treatment would entitle these Colonies to the treatment of the most favoured nation, irrespective of their performing the conditions on which such treatment is extended to the subjects of the other Powers."

With reference to this last observation, it is pointed out by Mr. Elliot that the question of reciprocity of treatment can hardly arise between India and Bulgaria, there being, so far as he is aware, no export trade whatever from that country to India.

With regard to the main question, Mr. Elliot further points out that it would appear that in strictness under the VIIIth Article of the Treaty of Berlin every Power, whether a Signatory of the Treaty or not, is not only entitled by the 3rd paragraph to most-favoured-nation treatment for its subjects and commerce, but is also entitled, under the 1st paragraph, to refuse its consent to any change in existing commercial Conventions and Arrangements, and thus practically to annul the effect of any Conventions conceding to Bulgaria the right to increase her customs duties, which might be concluded by Bulgaria with other Powers. It would seem unreasonable, however, to put it in the power of any one State so to prevent the imposition of increased duties which the Signatories of the Treaty of Berlin acknowledge to be expedient, and are prepared to agree to. Consequently, Mr. Elliot adds, while the commercial negotiations between Bulgaria and several Powers were in progress last year, it was tacitly admitted, although the question was not formally raised, that as soon as the Bulgarian Government had obtained the consent of the Powers which were parties to the Treaty of Berlin to the increased duties it would be entitled to levy them upon the produce of States which were not parties to that Treaty, even without their consent, provided that the principle of equality of treatment was maintained.

It will, it is anticipated, be held by the Bulgarian Government that the right which has been conceded to Bulgaria of negotiating independent Treaties carries with it the right of applying differential treatment against those countries with which she has no direct Treaty engagements. In this category India has placed herself by her refusal to adhere to the Arrangement of last July.

In these circumstances the question arises whether Her Majesty's Government should protest against the imposition of these differential duties on Indian produce, and if so on what ground such protest should be based.

Lord Salisbury is disposed to doubt the expediency of challenging Bulgaria on the direct issue, not only in view of the somewhat forced construction which such a contention would involve, but of the very doubtful prospect of such a protest being productive of useful result. His Lordship would be rather inclined to base a protest on the fact that India, though not a party to the Agreement, does in fact grant the same treatment to Bulgaria as does the United Kingdom, viz., that of the most favoured nation.

As to the grounds of protest, however, his Lordship would desire to be guided by the views of the Law Officers of the Crown, and I have accordingly the honour to request that you will take these papers into your consideration and favour him with your opinion on this point, and with any general observations which you may desire to offer on the subject.

It will be seen from Mr. Elliot's later despatch (Paper F) and from the correspondence with the Dundee Chamber of Commerce (Papers G and H) that the jute sacks on which the increased duty has been charged are the property of British firms established in the United Kingdom, and on this the subsidiary question would arise, whether these merchants are not entitled to most-favoured-nation treatment for their goods without regard to the origin of the latter, and Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your opinion on this as well as on the main issue, with a view to the drafting of instructions to Mr. Elliot for his guidance in dealing with the case.

The papers which accompanied the letter from this Department of the 3rd February are also returned herewith in a separate packet, for the convenience of reference if desired.

Report.

We think that the protest to the Bulgarian Government should be based upon the fact that India concedes to Bulgaria the treatment of the most favoured nation.

Under the circumstances of this case we think that the protest might also be founded upon the fact that the sacks in question were imported by, and on behalf of, and were the property of the firm of Messrs. A. Wulff and Co., carrying on business in the United Kingdom.

No doubt, under ordinary circumstances, the country of origin of the articles imported alone can be considered, and we doubt whether this ground can be insisted on.

It is possible, however, that the Bulgarian Government may be willing to admit exemption on this ground, while they do not admit the broader contention as to India.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 11, 1898.

Negotiation and ratification of Treaties with States of Greater Republic of Central America.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to the negotiation and ratification of Treaties with the States which now form "The Greater Republic of Central America."

The Republics of Nicaragua, Honduras, and Salvador, by a Treaty which was signed at Amapala on the 20th day of June, 1895, and ratified on the 15th September, 1896, while retaining their independence for the control of internal affairs, constituted themselves a single political entity for the exercise of their external authority, through the medium of a Diet composed of members chosen from each of the three Republics.

It is understood that, according to the construction placed upon Article V of the Treaty of Amapala, the Treaty-making power is transferred to their respective Legislative Bodies, by whom each Treaty is eventually ratified, the formal instrument of ratification being countersigned by the President of the Diet, or signed by him on behalf of the State or States concerned.

Her Majesty's Government have hitherto always contended that the Queen's

Report.

In our opinion there is no objection to Her Majesty's ratification being exchanged for a document signed in the manner described. The effect of the Treaty of Amapala is that the Diet represents the States forming the Central Republic in matters of foreign policy.

Any Treaty must be sanctioned by the Legislatures of the several States, and when it has been so sanctioned, we think that ratifications should be exchanged with the Diet.

The seal of the Republic will, of course, be affixed in accordance with Article 31 of the Regulations of the Diet, and it will, we presume, be countersigned by the President.

This appears to us to be the regular and proper course to pursue in Treaties of this Greater Republic.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the draft of an Order in Council for the purpose of carrying into effect an Extradition Treaty between the United Kingdom and Chile which was signed at Santiago on the 26th January, 1897, and of which the ratifications were exchanged on the 14th April last.

O. in C. applying Extrad. Treaty with Chile.

I am to inclose letters from the Home, Colonial, and India Offices, stating that the terms of the draft Order in Council are concurred in by those Departments respectively; and I am to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether it may, in its present form, be laid before the Queen in Council, for Her Majesty's approval.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by the Extradition Acts, 1870 to 1895, it was, amongst other things, enacted that, where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that Her Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in, or suspected of being in, the part of Her Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient.

And whereas a Treaty was concluded on the 26th day of January, 1897, between Her Majesty and the President of the Republic of Chile for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, which Treaty is in the terms following:—

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and his Excellency the President of the Republic of Chile, having determined, by common consent, to conclude a Treaty for the extradition of criminals, have accordingly named as their Plenipotentiaries:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, John G. Kennedy, Esq., Minister Resident of Great Britain in Chile;

And his Excellency the President of the Republic of Chile, Señor Don Cárlos Morla Vicuña, Minister of Foreign Affairs;

Who, after having exhibited to each other their respective full powers, and found them in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

The High Contracting Parties engage to deliver up to each other, under certain circumstances and conditions stated in the present Treaty, those persons who, being accused or convicted of any of the crimes or offences enumerated in Article II, committed in the territory of the one Party, shall be found within the territory of the other Party.

ARTICLE II.

Extradition shall be reciprocally granted for the following crimes or offences:—

1. Murder (including assassination, parricide, infanticide, poisoning), or attempt or conspiracy to murder.

2. Manslaughter.

3. Administering drugs or using instruments with intent to procure the miscarriage of women.

4. Rape.

5. Carnal knowledge or any attempt to have carnal knowledge of a girl under 14 years of age, if the evidence produced justifies committal for those crimes according to the laws of both the Contracting Parties.

6. Indecent assault.

7. Kidnapping and false imprisonment, child stealing.

8. Abduction.

9. Bigamy.

10. Maliciously wounding or inflicting grievous bodily harm.

11. Assault occasioning actual bodily harm.

12. Threats, by letter or otherwise, with intent to extort money or other things of value.

13. Perjury, or subornation of perjury.

14. Arson.

15. Burglary or house-breaking, robbery with violence, larceny, or embezzlement.

16. Fraud by a bailee, banker, agent, factor, trustee, director, member, or public officer of any Company, punishable with imprisonment for not less than one year by any law for the time being in force.

17. Obtaining money, valuable security, or goods by false pretences; receiving any money, valuable security, or other property, knowing the same to have been stolen or unlawfully obtained.

18.—(a.) Counterfeiting or altering money or bringing into circulation counterfeited or altered money.

(b.) Knowingly making without lawful authority any instrument, tool, or engine adapted and intended for the counterfeiting of the coin of the realm.

(c.) Forgery, or uttering what is forged.

19. Crimes against bankruptcy law.

20. Any malicious act done with intent to endanger the safety of any persons travelling or being upon a railway.

21. Malicious injury to property, if such offence be indictable.

22. Piracy and other crimes or offences committed at sea against persons or things which, according to the laws of the High Contracting Parties, are extradition offences, and are punishable by more than one year's imprisonment.

23. Dealing in slaves in such manner as to constitute a criminal offence against the laws of both States.

The extradition is also to be granted for participation in any of the aforesaid crimes, provided such participation be punishable by the laws of both Contracting Parties.

Extradition may also be granted at the discretion of the State applied to in respect of any other crime for which, according to the law of both the Contracting Parties for the time being in force, the grant can be made.

ARTICLE III.

Each Party reserves the right to refuse or grant the surrender of its own subjects or citizens to the other Party.

ARTICLE IV.

The extradition shall not take place if the person claimed on the part of Her Majesty's Government, or the person claimed on the part of the Government of Chile, has already been tried and discharged or punished, or is still under trial in the territory of the Republic of Chile or in the United Kingdom respectively, for the crime for which his extradition is demanded.

If the person claimed on the part of Her Majesty's Government, or on the part of the Government of Chile, should be under examination for any other crime in the territory of the Republic of Chile or in the United Kingdom respectively, his extradition shall be deferred until the conclusion of the trial, and the full execution of any punishment awarded to him.

ARTICLE V.

The extradition shall not take place if, subsequently to the commission of the crime, or the institution of the penal prosecution or the conviction thereon, exemption from prosecution or punishment has been acquired by lapse of time, according to the laws of the State applying or applied to.

It shall likewise not take place when, according to the law of either country, the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for less than one year.

ARTICLE VI.

A fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered if the offence in respect of which his surrender is demanded is one of a political character, or if he proves that the requisition for his surrender has in fact been made with a view to try or punish him for an offence of a political character.

ARTICLE VII.

A person surrendered can in no case be kept in prison or be brought to trial in the State to which the surrender has been made for any other crime, or on account of any other matters, than those for which the extradition shall have taken place until he has been restored, or has had an opportunity of returning, to the State by which he has been surrendered.

This stipulation does not apply to crimes committed after the extradition.

ARTICLE VIII.

The requisition for extradition shall be made through the Diplomatic Agents of the High Contracting Parties respectively.

The requisition for the extradition of an accused person must be accompanied by a warrant of arrest issued by the competent authority of the State requiring the extradition, and by such evidence as, according to the laws of the place where the accused is found, would justify his arrest if the crime had been committed there.

If the requisition relates to a person already convicted, it must be accompanied by the sentence of condemnation passed against the convicted person by the competent Court of the State that makes the requisition for extradition.

A sentence passed in contumaciam is not to be deemed a conviction, but a person so sentenced may be dealt with as an accused person.

ARTICLE IX.

If the requisition for extradition be in accordance with the foregoing stipulations, the competent authorities of the State applied to shall proceed to the arrest of the fugitive.

ARTICLE X.

A criminal fugitive may be apprehended under a warrant issued by any Police Magistrate, Justice of Peace, or other competent authority in either country, on such information or complaint, and such evidence, or after such proceedings as would, in the opinion of the authority issuing the warrant, justify the issue of a warrant if the crime had been committed or the person convicted in that part of the dominions of the two Contracting Parties in which the Magistrate, Justice of Peace, or other competent authority, exercises jurisdiction. Provided, however, that in the United Kingdom the accused shall, in such case, be sent as speedily as possible before a Police Magistrate in London. He shall, in accordance with this Article, be discharged, as well in the Republic of Chile as in the United Kingdom, if within the term of ninety days a requisition for extradition shall not have been made by the Diplomatic Agent of his country in accordance with the stipulations of this Treaty. The same rule shall apply to the cases of persons accused or convicted of any of the crimes or offences specified in this Treaty, and committed in the high seas on board any vessel of either country which may come into a port of the other

ARTICLE XI.

The extradition shall take place only if the evidence be found sufficient, according to the laws of the State applied to, either to justify the committal of the prisoner for trial, in case the crime had been committed in the territory of the same State, or to prove that the prisoner is the identical person convicted by the Courts of the State which makes the requisition, and that the crime of which he has been convicted is one in respect of which extradition could, at the time of such conviction, have been granted by the State applied to; and no criminal shall be surrendered until after the expiration of fifteen days from the date of his committal to prison to await the warrant for his surrender.

ARTICLE XII.

In the examinations which they have to make in accordance with the foregoing stipulations, the authorities of the State applied to shall admit as valid evidence the sworn depositions or the affirmations of witnesses taken in the other State, or copies thereof, and likewise the warrants and sentences issued therein, and certificates of or judicial documents stating the fact of a conviction, provided the same are authenticated as follows:—

1. A warrant must purport to be signed by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the other State.

2. Depositions or affirmations, or the copies thereof, must purport to be certified, under the hand of a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the other State, to be the original depositions or affirmations, or to be true copies thereof, as the case may require.

3. A certificate of, or judicial document stating, the fact of a conviction must purport to be certified by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the other State.

4. In every case such warrant, deposition, affirmation, copy, certificate, or judicial document must be authenticated, either by the oath of some witness, or by being sealed with the official seal of the Minister of Justice, or some other Minister of the other State; but any other mode of authentication for the time being permitted by the law of the country where the examination is taken may be substituted for the foregoing.

ARTICLE XIII.

If the individual claimed by one of the High Contracting Parties in pursuance of the present Treaty should be also claimed by one or several other Powers on account of other crimes or offences committed upon their respective territories, his extradition shall be granted to the State whose demand is earliest in date.

ARTICLE XIV.

If sufficient evidence for the extradition be not produced within two months from the date of the apprehension of the fugitive, or within such further time as the State applied to, or the proper Tribunal thereof, shall direct, the fugitive shall be set at liberty.

ARTICLE XV.

All articles seized which were in the possession of the person to be surrendered at the time of his apprehension shall, if the competent authority of the State applied to for the extradition has ordered the delivery of such articles, to be given up when the extradition takes place; and the said delivery shall extend not merely to the stolen articles, but to everything that may serve as a proof of the crime.

ARTICLE XVI.

All expenses connected with extradition shall be borne by the demanding State.

ARTICLE XVII.

The stipulations of the present Treaty shall be applicable to the Colonies and foreign possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, so far as the laws in such Colonies and foreign possessions respectively will allow.

The requisition for the surrender of a fugitive criminal, who has taken refuge in any of such Colonies or foreign possessions, shall be made to the Governor or chief authority of such Colony or possession by the Chief Consular officer of the Republic of Chile in such Colony or possession.

Such requisition may be disposed of, subject always, as nearly as may be, and so far as the law of such Colony or foreign possession will allow, to the provisions of this Treaty, by the said Governor or chief authority, who, however, shall be at liberty either to grant the surrender or to refer the matter to his Government.

Her Britannic Majesty shall, however, be at liberty to make special arrangements in the British Colonies and foreign possessions for the surrender of Chilean criminals who may take refuge within such Colonies and foreign possessions, on the basis, so far as the law of such Colony or foreign possession will allow, of the provisions of the present Treaty.

Requisitions for the surrender of a fugitive criminal emanating from any Colony or foreign possession of Her Britannic Majesty shall be governed by rules laid down in the preceding Articles of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE XVIII.

The present Treaty shall come into force ten days after its publication in conformity with the forms prescribed by the laws of the High Contracting Parties. It may be terminated by either of the High Contracting Parties by a notice not exceeding one year, and not less than six months.

It shall be ratified, after receiving the approval of the Congress of the Republic of Chile, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Santiago as soon as possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and affixed thereto their respective seals.

Done at Santiago the 26th day of January, in the year 1897.

And whereas the ratifications of the said Treaty were exchanged at Santiago on the 14th day of April, 1898.

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to her by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the [*] day , 1898, the said Acts shall apply in the case of Chile, and of the said Treaty with the President of the Republic of Chile.

Provided always that the operation of the said Acts shall be and remain suspended within the dominion of Canada so long as an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the extradition of Fugitive Criminals," shall continue in force there, and no longer.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, July 20, 1898.

Mutual protection of British and French trade-marks in China.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying papers relating to a proposal made by the French Government for the mutual protection of British and French trade-marks in China.

It will be seen from M. Geoffray's note of the 20th April (Paper A), that the French Government wish to follow the precedent of the arrangement made as regards trade-marks in Morocco in 1895, which was notified in the "London Gazette" (Paper D).

The Board of Trade in a letter dated the 21st June (Paper C), have suggested that British subjects should register their marks in France, and so obtain protection in the French Consular Courts in China, whilst French nationals should in like manner obtain the protection of the British Consular Courts.

It appears, however, to Lord Salisbury that in cases of conflict between British and French marks there might be some difficulty in obtaining a remedy in the French Consular Courts, and his Lordship is therefore inclined to think that it would be preferable to deal with the matter in the same way as was done in Morocco.

I am to call attention to the Memorandum attached to Paper A, which shows that there is some doubt as to whether special provision must be made by Order in Council to enable British Consular Courts in China to enforce the British Acts for the protection of trade-marks, and I am to request you to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on this point.

His Lordship would also be glad to receive any observations or suggestions which you may have to offer in regard to the means of carrying out the arrangement proposed by the French Government.

I am, &c.

Report.

In the absence of an arrangement for a common Registry of trade-marks to be recognized by the Courts of both countries, we think that the British Consular Courts should enforce only British trade-marks, and French Courts French trade-marks. It is difficult to see how the Courts of either country can satisfactorily administer the law of the other.

We therefore think that the arrangement proposed by the Board of Trade would be likely to work best.

At the same time we must add that it is extremely difficult to make out what is the system in force in Morocco as between Great Britain and France. The extract from the "Gazette" is very obscure.

An Order in Council would certainly be wanted to carry out any such arrangement as we conceive to be indicated.

Order in Council for appointment of Registrar to Supreme Court for China and Japan.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the draft of an Order in Council which has been drawn up by Mr. Albert Gray for the purpose of relieving the Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court for China and Japan of the duties of Registrar, and in order to provide for the appointment to that office of the present Chief Clerk, and hereafter of some other properly qualified person. By section 3 of the draft Order in Council, Article 53, of "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1865," is applied to the Registrar in like manner as to the Supreme Court and every other Court; and by section 4, sub-Article (2) of Article 4 of "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1878," is revoked.

I am also to transmit to you the correspondence noted in the accompanying list, and to request that you will take the papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the draft Order in Council may properly be submitted to Her Majesty for approval.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by Treaty, capitulation, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has jurisdiction in China and Japan.

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in Her Majesty vested, is pleased by and with the advice of the Privy Council to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. The Registrar of Her Majesty's Supreme Court for China and Japan shall be appointed by Her Majesty.

He shall be either a member of the Bar of England, Scotland, or Ireland, or a solicitor of the Supreme Court in England or Ireland, or a writer to Her Majesty's Signet, or a solicitor in the Supreme Courts of Scotland.

He may also, with the approval of the Secretary of State, hold the office of Chief Clerk of the Supreme Court.

In case of the absence or illness of the Registrar, or during a vacancy in the office of Registrar, or during the employment of the Registrar, in another capacity, or on emergency, the Chief Justice may, by writing under his hand and the Seal of the Supreme Court, appoint any fit person to act as Registrar for the time therein mentioned, or until the appointment is revoked by the Chief Justice or disapproved by the Secretary of State.

2. The Registrar shall, subject to any directions of the Supreme Court, hear and determine in a summary way such criminal cases as may, under the Orders in Council relating to China and Japan, be so heard and determined, and for that purpose shall have the jurisdiction, power, and authority of the Supreme Court.

3. The Registrar shall, subject to any directions of the Supreme Court, have and discharge within the district of the Consulate-General of Shanghae all the powers, rights, and duties appertaining to the office of Coroner in England; and Article 53 of "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1865," shall apply to the Registrar in like manner, as to the Supreme Court and every other Court.

4. On the commencement of this Order, the Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court shall cease to be the Registrar of that Court; and the existing Chief Clerk shall be the first Registrar under the provisions of this Order.

Sub-Article (2) of Article 4 of "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1878," is hereby revoked.

5. This Order shall come into force on the day on which it is first exhibited in the public office of Her Majesty's Consulate-General of Shanghae, and that day is in this Order referred to as the commencement of this Order.

6. This Order may be cited as "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1898."

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, August 11, 1898.

Gentlemen,

Shan-hai-kwan–Newchwang Railway Loan. Exclusion of British Syndicate.

THE Director-General of Northern Railways in China, acting under the authority of the Emperor, and with the knowledge of the Chinese Government, concluded, on the 7th June last, a Preliminary Agreement with a British Syndicate, represented by the Hong Kong and Shanghae Bank, for an advance of money for the construction of a railway. The projected railway was to be the continuation of an existing line (Tientsin–Shan-hai-kwan) and was to terminate at the Treaty port of Newchwang, in the Gulf of Liaotung. The advance was to be secured by a mortgage on the line, and the railway was to be constructed by a European and native staff under the direction of an English engineer in the service of the Chinese Government.

On the 6th instant Her Majesty's Minister at Peking reported that the Chinese Government had addressed to him a despatch saying that by an Agreement with the Russian Chargé d'Affaires "they can only give permission for Shan-hai-kwan–Newchwang Railway on condition that there is no mortgage on the line and no European control."

The Agreement referred to is probably that of the 7th May, of which a copy, secretly obtained, is inclosed in Sir Claude MacDonald's despatch No. 131, Confidential, of the 24th June (herewith transmitted), Section III of which provides as follows:—

"Article III.—The Russian Government consents that the terminus of the branch line connecting the Siberian Railway with the Liaotung Peninsula shall be at Port Arthur and Talienwan, and no other port in the said peninsula.

"It is further agreed in common that railway privileges in districts traversed by this branch line shall not be given to the subjects of other Powers. As regards the railway which China shall herself build hereafter from Shan-hai-kwan in extension to a point as near as possible to this branch line, Russia agrees that she has nothing to do with it."

I transmit herewith a despatch from Sir C. MacDonald (No. 129, of the 23rd June), which incloses the Preliminary Agreement between the Hong Kong and Shanghae Bank and the Chinese Director-General, and some correspondence showing the objections raised by the Russian Chargé d'Affaires, and I am directed by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to call your attention to Article LIV of the Treaty of Tien-tsin (p. 31 of the accompanying volume), and I am to request that you will advise him at your earliest convenience whether the plea put forward by the Chinese Government of their inability to carry out the Preliminary Agreement is not contrary to the engagement undertaken by China under the Article of the Tien-tsin Treaty to which I have called your attention, and whether a protest can be made against it, both at St. Petersburgh and Peking, on that ground, bearing in mind that Her Majesty's Government have no official cognizance of the Agreement of 7th May, on which the objections of Russia to the loan are supposed to be based.

Treaties with China (Hertslet), vol. 1.

Report.

It appears that the railway from Shan-hai-kwan to Newchwang can in no sense be considered as competing with the Manchurian Railway from Kirin to Port Arthur. It is therefore in no way inconsistent with the concession granted for the latter railway, and apparently it is not pretended that Russia has any interest in the proposed railway from Shan-hai-kwan to Newchwang.

It would therefore appear that the Russian contention is, that they have a contract with China, in virtue of which China is bound to refuse any offer from an English Syndicate in respect of this proposed railway.

It is not asserted that Russia is herself entitled to the concession, but the contention would appear to be that any English financiers are to be excluded by reason of their nationality. It is true that M. Pavloff states that his objection is to such a contract with any foreign Syndicate. But this would not, we presume, include a Russian Syndicate, and in substance we think that the objection is directed against English influence.

If this be the Russian contention, it appears to us that the Chinese Government would be violating Article LIV of the Treaty of Tien-tsin if they gave effect to it. They are, it is true, under no obligation to enter into this or any other specific contract with Englishmen. It is open to them to make or not to make such contracts as they please, but it is not open to them to accept as a principle of their action that Englishmen, as such, shall be under any disability with reference to obtaining this or any other contract.

We cannot help thinking that in substance this is what the position taken up by Russia comes to, and, if so, Article LIV of the Treaty of Tien-tsin may fairly be invoked by Her Majesty's Government by representations both at Peking and St. Petersburgh.

Her Majesty's Government are also entitled to object to the course which China is being urged by Russia to take in this matter, on the broader ground that as Russian interests are not involved Russia has no right to interfere between China and English contractors, and that China ought not to give way to pressure of this kind. But further, we have to observe that the Russian Government may very fairly be asked to produce the Agreement with China on which they base their pretensions to interfere with regard to this contract. If the document shown to us as a translation of this Agreement is at all accurate, it would appear that there is no colour for the Russian contention. Russia admits by Article III that she has nothing to do with this railway which China proposes to construct. We cannot understand how it can be seriously asserted that China was bound to construct this railway out of her own resources without borrowing money, and that she is not at liberty to give the capitalists who find the money a charge upon the railway, and the necessary powers of administration.

If this Agreement be produced it will therefore appear that Russia, without any colour of right, is claiming to compel the Chinese Government to refuse ratification of the contract in question because the contractors are Englishmen.

Upon the whole we think that Her Majesty's Government are justified in making remonstrances upon this subject, both at Peking and St. Petersburgh.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, September 22, 1898.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the sinking of the British steam-ship "Kow-shing" by the Japanese man-of-war "Naniwa," on the 25th July, 1894.

Sinking of "Kow-shing"; claim on Chinese Government for compensation.

The Memorandum which was approved by the Law Officers of the Crown in their Report dated the 17th June, 1896 (Paper A), was duly communicated to the Chinese Minister on the 25th of that month, and by him referred to the Chinese Government. A reply has now been received from Loh-Fêng-luh (Paper B), and contains the refusal of his Government to entertain the claim for compensation, chiefly on the ground that a state of war, imposing neutral duties on the subjects of third Powers cannot be held to exist until formal notification of the fact of war has been made by one or both of the belligerents to the Governments of such Powers.

L.O.R. 1896 (Conf. 6918), p. 30.

In the present instance this notification was only made on the 1st August, whereas the sinking of the "Kow-shing" took place on the 25th July.

Before replying to the Chinese Minister's note, Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your observations as to the terms in which the answer should be drawn up both on this and the other points raised in the Minister's note.

It appears to his Lordship that the only prospect of settling the case is that it should be referred to arbitration, and he proposes in replying to Loh Fêng-luh to recommend this course again to the consideration of the Chinese Government.

Report.

It should, we think, be pointed out that the passages cited in the Chinese Minister's note have no bearing on the case of the "Kow-shing." Their irrelevance is very clearly shown by the note appended by Hall in his International Law, p. 597, to one of the passages cited by the Chinese Minister in support of his contention that until neutrals are affected with knowledge of the existence of war, their liabilities and duties as neutrals do not arise. That note is as follows:—

"What is said above as to the moment from which States, and therefore their subjects, become affected by the consequences of non-neutral actions does not apply to cases in which neutral persons are engaged knowingly, or even ignorantly, in carrying out a naval or military operation for an intending belligerent."

The "Kow-shing" was engaged in such an operation. She was carrying Chinese troops to Corea, and had been chartered to the Chinese Government with the knowledge that war with Japan was probable. The Japanese were entitled to treat her as a Chinese transport, and when she resisted to use force. Her resistance was entirely the act of the Chinese officers and soldiers on board.

There is no analogy between the case of a vessel engaged in such an expedition, and the case of the "Tatsuta," to which the doctrine of the extracts cited by the Chinese Minister would be applicable. Moreover, in the case of the "Tatsuta," the vessel was actually stopped at Aden as soon as the British Government had information of the facts.

It would serve no useful purpose to discuss the various abstract propositions on International Law, which are put forward in the note of the Chinese Minister; they have no bearing on the present case.

We think the claim against the Chinese Government is well-founded, and that it may properly be pressed.

Gentlemen,

Order in Council for Mutual Protection of British and French trade-marks in China.

WITH reference to your Report of the 9th August last, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the draft of an Order in Council, prepared by Mr. Albert Gray, for carrying into effect the proposed mutual arrangement between Great Britain and France for the protection of British and French trade-marks in China.

The papers which accompanied the reference made to you on the 20th July, together with your Report thereon, are returned for convenience of reference.

As regards the system in force in Morocco as between Great Britain and France, to which allusion is made in your Report of the 9th August, the arrangement is recorded as follows in a note, dated the 4th June, 1894, from Count d'Aubigny, the French Minister in Morocco, to Her Majesty's Minister there:—

"Vous avez bien voulu faire savoir au Chargé d'Affaires de France que l'autorité Consulaire Française avait droit de poursuivre au Maroc devant l'autorité Consulaire Britannique, toute personne contrefaisant les marques de fabriques Françaises ou les recevant à la condition—

"1. Que le dépôt de la marque Française aurait été effectué en Angleterre conformément au 'Merchandize Marks Act, 1887.'

"2. Que la protection dans les mêmes conditions serait assurée, au Maroc, par l'autorité Française aux fabricants Anglais."

It will be seen that this arrangement is practically identical with that suggested in the last paragraph of the letter of the 21st June from the Board of Trade, effect to which would be given as regards China by the proposed new Order.

Mr. Gray states that the present Order has been limited to China and Corea, as he apprehends that it is unnecessary to extend it to Japan, having regard to the impending withdrawal (viz., in July next) of Her Majesty's jurisdiction in that country.

From a practical standpoint this no doubt is so; but it seems nevertheless necessary to consider whether, from a technical point of view, it would not be more strictly accurate, pending the actual cesser of Her Majesty's extra-territorial jurisdiction in Japan and the consequent continued application to Japan of the various Orders in Council for China, Japan, and Corea which are now in force, to expressly include Japan within the scope of the operation of the draft Order.

I am to request that you will take the draft Order into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether it may properly be submitted in its present form to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval, or, if not, in what manner its terms may be advantageously modified or altered.

His Lordship would be glad at the same time to be favoured with any observations of a general nature which you may desire to offer on the subject.

As altered and initialled by us, we approve of the draft Order in Council.

We think that the Order should also apply to Japan, although the Consular Courts there will soon cease.

On reference to section 103 of "The Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883," it will appear that the scheme recommended by us in our Report of the 9th August, 1898, is the same as that proposed by the Board of Trade.

A foreign patent or trade-mark, when granted or registered pursuant to an arrangement made under that section, becomes, for the purposes of a British Court, a British patent or trade-mark, as the case may be.

China, Japan, and Corea.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has power and jurisdiction in China. Japan, and Corea:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," and otherwise, in her vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of the Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. Any act which, if done in the United Kingdom or in a British possession, would be an offence against any of the following Statutes of the Imperial Parliament or Orders in Council, that is to say:—

"The Merchandize Marks Act, 1887."

"The Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Acts, 1883 to 1888."

Any Act, Statute, or Order in Council, for the time being in force, relating to copyright or to inventions, designs, or trade-marks; or

Any Statute amending or substituted for any of the above-mentioned Statutes shall, if done by a British subject in China, Japan, or Corea, be an offence against this Order, whether such act is done in relation to any property or right of a British subject, or of a foreigner or otherwise:

Provided—

(1.) That a copy of any such Statute or Order in Council shall be published in the public offices of the Consulates-General of Shanghae, Tôkiô, and Seoul respectively, and shall be there open for inspection by any person at all reasonable times; and a person shall not be punished under this Order for anything done before the expiration of one month after such publication, unless the person offending is proved to have had express notice of the Statute or Order.

(2.) That a prosecution by or on behalf of a prosecutor who is not a British subject shall not be entertained without the consent in writing of Her Majesty's Minister or Chargé d'Affaires, who may withhold such consent, unless he is satisfied that effectual provision exists for the punishment in Consular or other Courts in China, Japan, or Corea (as the case may be), of similar acts committed by the subjects of the State or Power of which such prosecutor is a subject, in relation to or affecting the interests of British subjects.

2. An offence against this Order shall be punishable with imprisonment for any period not exceeding three months, or fine not exceeding 100*l*., or both.

3. This Order may be cited as "The China, Japan, and Corea (Patents, &c.) Order in Council, 1898."

And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Salisbury, K.G., one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein.

Gentlemen,

Proposed expropriation of British Mission Property in Madagascar by French.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Secretary of State, the following correspondence relating to the proposed expropriation by the French Government of Mission property in Madagascar.

On the 25th May last a despatch (Paper A) was received from Mr. Sauzier, the Acting British Consul at Tamatave, inclosing a copy of a Circular letter addressed by General Gallieni, the French Resident-General, to the representatives of the various Missions in Madagascar respecting the terms on which religious buildings in that island were held.

In this communication the General stated that all religious buildings—whoever might be the persons or the Societies which had contributed to their erection—were, according to French law, the property of the State.

Search was made in the archives of this Department for the Law to which General Gallieni referred, but from the inclosed Memorandum (Paper B), which was drawn up by the Librarian of the Foreign Office, it will be seen that it cannot be identified.

The papers were therefore referred to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, and his Excellency thereupon took the opinion of Mr. Sewell, who acts as solicitor to the British Embassy in that capital. It appears from Mr. Gosselin's despatch No. 191, Africa, of the 24th June last (Paper C), that Mr. Sewell has been unable to discover the text of any Law which supports General Gallieni's view, and considers the statement made in the General's Circular to be unfounded.

In these circumstances, Mr. Gosselin suggested that M^e^ Clunet, the eminent French advocate, should be consulted, and his suggestion was adopted.

On the 16th ultimo Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris sent home the opinion with which M^e^ Clunet had, on consultation, furnished the Embassy. (Paper D.)

From this opinion it appears, with regard to the question of ownership, that by the law of Madagascar as it stood prior to the annexation of that island by France (vide Article 85 of the Malagasy Code of 1881, quoted at p. 5 of M^e^ Clunet's consultation), it was absolutely forbidden to sell or mortgage land to foreigners under pain of imprisonment for life; and in the event of such a sale being made, the purchase-money was not recoverable, and the land reverted to the Government.

In support of this contention M^e^ Clunet quotes from the text of several concessions made by the Malagasy Government. In each of these the Queen's sole right of ownership in the ground and buildings is expressly asserted.

Among the documents cited are the Malagasy Code of 1881 already referred to, and the Royal Decree of the 27th June, 1865, granting a Mission-house to the London Missionary Society.

In the Decree the following clause is to be found:—

"Néanmoins la Société reconnaît que toutes les églises précitées appartiennent à la Reine de Madagascar, et qu'elle n'aura aucun droit de réclamation sur les dits immeubles qui appartiennent éternellement* à la Reine."

A similar reservation is made in the concession with two English Missions for the building of the English hospital at Antananarivo.

In 1896 the rights of the Malagasy Government were transferred in virtue of the Law of the 6th June of that year to France, which country thus became the sovereign owner of the lands and buildings in question.

With regard to the matter of expropriation of religious buildings under French law, M^e^ Clunet explains at some length that inasmuch as buildings in France cannot be devoted to religious purposes without the sanction of Government, it follows that it is in reality the State that appropriates buildings to such uses, and that, as a natural consequence, the State has the right to undo what it has done, and to "expropriate."

These Regulations form part of the Municipal Law, and are in force ipso facto as well in the French Colonies as in the mother country, and, therefore, M^e^ Clunet is of opinion that General Gallieni is entitled, in his capacity of Resident General, to proceed to the expropriation of any religious buildings within the limits of his jurisdiction. Such measure can, however, only be taken by the General himself, who under the terms of Article 1 of the Decree of the 11th December, 1895, which defines his authority, is the depositary of the powers of the French Republic in the Island of Madagascar and its dependencies.

I am to observe, with reference to this opinion, that whatever may be the technical rights of the French Government according to French law, it seems to Lord Salisbury that the fact that the original Agreement was made at a time when Malagasy, and not French law, governed the matter, was of importance, and that the French Government might, under the circumstances, fairly be expected to consider themselves at any rate under a moral obligation not to derogate from the terms of the Queen of Madagascar's grant so long as the grantees of the concession strictly observed the conditions laid down in the grant, unless, of course, on the terms of giving the grantees suitable compensation.

I am also to transmit (Paper E), as bearing on this matter, a communication relating to the Mission hospital at Antananarivo, which has been recently left at this Office by Mr. Clark, of the Friends Foreign Mission.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to the rights of British subjects in the special circumstances of this case, and with any general observations which you may have to offer thereon.

I have, &c.

Report.

We have perused the opinion of M^{e} Clunet. With reference to the first part of it we have to observe, without differing from him on the subject of the Malagasy law as to the title to real property, that the terms of the grants made by the Malagasy Queen for hospital purposes—while reserving to the Queen the title to the land—amount in substance to a contract that so long as it was used for the purposes mentioned in the grant, the holders would not be disturbed. On this point we refer to our Report of the 22nd March, 1897.

It appears to us that the French Government inherit this obligation, and that it would be a breach of contract if the holders of land under such grants were evicted, unless the land were wanted for public purposes and adequate compensation was paid.

The terms of the grants for Mission purposes are, we gather, similar to those employed when the land was granted for hospital purposes.

With regard to the second part of M^{e} Clunet's opinion, we have some difficulty in following his reasoning. We assume that, as a matter of French law, the sanction of the State is necessary for the appropriation of any building to religious purposes, but we cannot see that it follows, as M^{e} Clunet says, that this sanction, once given, may be withdrawn at the pleasure of the Government. A large amount of capital may have been invested in the erection of a building for religious purposes on the faith of the sanction granted by the Government, and this building might become almost valueless if the sanction were withdrawn. We are, however, of course not prepared to express dissent from M^{e} Clunet on a point which is purely one of French law, but we must observe that the application of this principle of French law to the case of Mission buildings erected in Madagascar would work intolerable hardship. These buildings had been erected before the French had conquered the island, and not in view of the French law on this subject.

Under these circumstances, to refuse to permit such edifices to be used for religious purposes would, in our opinion, be an act of a very oppressive character, even if it be justified by the technicalities of French law, affording legitimate ground for diplomatic remonstrance. But we must observe that the Circular of General Gallieni does not appear to us to announce that it is the intention of the French Government either to confiscate these buildings, or to prevent their further use for religious purposes. It is true that he says that, by the law of France, all religious edifices are the property of the State—a proposition which finds no support in M^{e} Clunet's opinion, and which would appear to be erroneous; but all that he intimates his intention of doing is to prevent, for the present, any change in the destination for which these edifices are appropriated. It is quite consistent with General Gallieni's Circular that these buildings may continue to be appropriated to the religious purposes for which they have been erected. We do not see that this Circular can conveniently be made the subject of diplomatic representation. Of course, if General Gallieni proceeded to confiscate the Mission buildings, or to forbid their use for religious purposes, very different considerations would arise.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, January 28, 1898.

Arrest of French courier in Lagos Hinterland.

WITH reference to your Report of the 2nd November, 1897, as regards the answer to be made by the Governor of Lagos to the Governor of Dahomey respecting a French messenger who, while carrying official and other letters, had been stopped by British Colonial authorities, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you a printed copy of that Report (Document A), together with other papers relating to the case, and noted on the accompanying list.

Full reports on the subject have now been received from the Governor of Lagos (Documents B, C, and D), from which it appears that the more important points connected with it are briefly as follows:—

Two French valises are in the possession of Her Majesty's Government. One was given up voluntarily on the 21st September, 1897, by the courier at Meko (see Document B, and Inclosure 7 therein). Meko is south of the 9th parallel of north latitude, and therefore in territory reserved, so far as concerns France, to Great Britain by the Agreement of the 10th August, 1889 (Document X).

This valise contained a letter from Lieutenant Brot to the Governor of Dahomey, dated Saki, the 14th September, giving an account of movements in contemplation against Kiama (Inclosure 2 in Document B). Kiama lies north of the 9th parallel, but in the Hinterland of Lagos, and is claimed as part of the Niger Company's territories. This valise also contained two other letters, without date, written by Lieutenant Brot (Inclosures 5 and 6 in Document B) at Kishi, as to the position of which place a statement will be made later on in this letter.

The other valise was taken on the 28th September, 1897, by Captain Neal, an officer in the service of the Government of Lagos, from an armed French soldier at Sepeti, a place between Saki and Bohu, and therefore south of the 9th parallel, and, like Meko, in territory reserved, as far as France is concerned, to Great Britain (see Document C). It contained letters from the following places and persons, bearing the dates shown against each:—

Lieutenant Bretonnet from Kiama (north of 9°), 24th September.
Lieutenant Bretonnet from Beria (north of 9°), 21st September.
Lieutenant Bretonnet from Beria (north of 9°), 21st September.
Lieutenant Bretonnet from Mossé (situation not known), 20th September.
Lieutenant Brot from Kishi (south of 9°, according to the British authorities), 24th September.
Lieutenant Carron from Kiama (north of 9°), 29th September. (This date should probably be the 25th September.)

all of which places are claimed by Great Britain to be part of the Niger Company's territories.

The soldier-messenger, who was a British-protected person, had himself formed part of a French expedition which had passed through and thus violated territory reserved to Great Britain by the Agreement of 1889; but the letters or despatches which he carried were all from places beyond that territory, except those from Kishi, which place lies, according to French official maps, north of 9°, but which is placed by the British authorities south of that parallel.

But the violation of British territory reserved to Great Britain by the Agreement of 1889, except as regards Kishi (held by Her Majesty's Government to be in that territory), was not continuing at the time the messenger was stopped.

The terrritory south of 9°, where the valises came into the possession of the British authorities, is under British protection, and Her Majesty's Government claim that the several places north of that parallel, from which the letters were written, and which were then, and probably still are, occupied by France, are also under British protection, though this is disputed by France.

Copies of some of the letters seized are given as inclosures in Document (C), and it will be seen that they inform the Governor of Dahomey of hostile military operations undertaken, or about to be undertaken, against places and persons held by Her Majesty's Government to be under British protection, and that they were calculated to facilitate such operations by so informing the superior French authorities of such operations.

The bearer of the despatches seized by Captain Neal was sent to Lagos, and was given his freedom to proceed to Dahomey if he chose; but he did not choose so to do (see Inclosure 2 in Document D).

The official correspondence seized is still retained by Her Majesty's Government, but the private letters in the valises were sent to the French Government to be forwarded to their destination.

In reply to an inquiry from the French Minister at this Court, a note was on the 18th November, 1897, addressed to the French Ambassador (Document E) in the sense of the telegram sent to the Governor of Lagos, in accordance with the advice given in your above-mentioned Report of the 2nd of that month (Document A). The French Minister (who in the absence of Baron de Courcel is now in charge of the Embassy) has now addressed to Lord Salisbury a note (Document F), stating that the French Government, for the reasons therein stated, do not accept as satisfactory the explanations given in his Lordship's note of the 18th November, 1897. The French note urges that the messenger should not have been stopped, that the despatches seized should be handed to the French Government, and that Her Majesty's Government should have followed the principle that, in territory in dispute between two countries, the Government of neither should perform any act of sovereignty. The note contrasts the treatment of the French messenger stopped by the authorities of the Colony of Lagos with that accorded to a British soldier-messenger who was found in the French territory of Dahomey. The incident referred to is probably that mentioned in a letter from the Governor of Lagos to the Governor of Dahomey, which forms Inclosure 3 in the letter of the 13th ultimo from the Colonial Office (Document G).

A draft of a note has been prepared in this Department in reply to M. Geoffray's note of the 4th instant, and is herewith transmitted to you, marked (H).

The terms of the draft note have been submitted to and have the concurrence of the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

I have the honour to request you to take the papers sent herewith into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury, at your earliest convenience, with your opinion as to whether the terms of the note are satisfactory as they stand, or, if not, in what manner and to what extent they may advantageously be modified or amended.

I also have the honour to request you to favour his Lordship with such further observations of a more general nature as you may desire to offer on the case.

A map is inclosed (Document I) showing the several territories and places mentioned in this letter.

In our opinion the terms of the note are satisfactory.

The only suggestions we have to make are embodied in red ink on the draft.

Those on pp. 3 and 4 are purely verbal; that on p. 11 involves the omission of a sentence, and we suggest this omission lest the statement that France is actually exercising all the functions of sovereignty in the disputed districts, should be afterwards utilized by France as an admission that French sovereignty in these districts is of a settled character.

Annex.

Draft of Letter to Baron de Courcel.

Your Excellency,
Foreign Office, February , 1898.

I HAVE the honour to reply to the note of the 4th ultimo, in which M. Geoffray informed me that M. Hanotaux has carefully examined the considerations put forward in my note of the 18th November last respecting the interception of a French courier by British authorities in West Africa.

M. Geoffray stated that his Excellency cannot concur in the view taken of the matter by Her Majesty's Government, and went on to observe that, if Her Majesty's Government considered their rights to have been insufficiently respected by an official French Mission, and British-protected persons to have been ill-treated, the regular procedure would have been to address a complaint through the diplomatic channel to the French Government.

M. Geoffray further remarked that the ownership of the region to which the incident relates is in dispute between France and Great Britain, and that the two Governments are now seeking a solution of the matter, and that, consequently, the principle of law applicable in this connection is that neither of the parties interested should perform any act of sovereignty in territory thus in dispute between two countries.

M. Geoffray said that in the present case no act of the sort had been done by France, the case at issue being only the passage of a single person, and such passage not amounting to a taking possession of territory.

I must, in the first place, protest against the assumption that the territory in which the courier, who was an armed French soldier, was intercepted is in any sense whatever in dispute between the two Governments, or now forms the subject of any negotiations between them.

The Agreement of the 10th August, 1889, provides that a certain boundary-line shall be fixed between the British and French territories on the Slave Coast as far northward as the 9th parallel of latitude, and that Her Majesty's Government shall have full liberty of political action to the east of the boundary thus fixed.

The soldier referred to was intercepted between Saki and Bohu (that is, in territory reserved to Great Britain by the Agreement in question). He was, as I have stated in my note of the 18th November, assisting and conveying despatches from an armed force, which, in spite of the remonstrances of British officers, had violated British-protected territory, and had subsequently attacked British allies and protected natives, and unlawfully occupied territory under British protection. He was, moreover, a British-protected person, being a native of Ijesa, within the territory reserved to Great Britain by the Agreement of 1889.

Her Majesty's Government are surprised to learn from M. Geoffray's note that, in M. Hanotaux' opinion, in territory in dispute between two countries, as is now a large extent of West Africa, neither should perform any act of sovereignty, and that no act of this nature has been performed by France. It has long been known to the French Government that the whole Hinterland of Lagos and of the Gold Coast and other adjacent territories are claimed by this country in virtue of Treaties concluded with the various native Rulers. These territories, or a large part of them, are now in dispute between Great Britain and France, and are the subject of negotiation between the two countries.

But France, far from herself following the principle the adoption of which is urged on Great Britain by M. Hanotaux, and far from abstaining, in deference to that principle, from performing any act of sovereignty in the disputed territory, has occupied largely by force every portion of it that she has been able to reach, and French forces have, in order the more easily to do so, violated, as stated above, territory reserved to Great Britain by a Convention with France, and this after due warning not to do so given by a properly constituted officer of Her Majesty's Government. ~~France is actually exercising all the functions of sovereignty in the disputed districts, which she has occupied. Such occupation is in itself an act of sovereignty.~~

Bussa is being fortified; the King of Nikki was kept a close prisoner till his death; a new Ruler has been installed in Mossi, and the whole of the territory which France has been able to occupy is treated as though it were indisputably French, and neither claimed by any other Power nor the subject of negotiation.

Her Majesty's Government would have been glad if France had abided by the principle urged by M. Hanotaux, or would even now adopt it as her rule of conduct.

Her Majesty's Government cannot in any case consent to British territory, or territory under British protection, being made use of by France for facilitating operations and acts of sovereignty in territory claimed by Great Britain.

The private correspondence carried by the messenger referred to in M. Geoffray's note was forwarded to the French Government because it could be assumed that it had not for its object (as was the case with the official correspondence) to facilitate acts of the nature of which I have complained.

I may add that no French courier is now under detention by any British official, and that, as the Governor of Lagos informed the Governor of Dahomey on the 29th October, 1897, the French courier referred to was perfectly free to proceed to Dahomey. He was lodged and maintained at the Government expense, and given every freedom, but he fled to the bush, leaving his uniform behind him.

As regards the case of the British soldier, who, it is stated, was carrying a letter to a British Agent, and who was hospitably treated by the French authorities, I am not able, by the slight details given, positively to identify the case, but it is possibly that of a soldier mentioned in a letter of the 20th October, 1897, from the Governor of Dahomey to the Governor of Lagos. If so, the cases are not analogous, for the letter carried by the British soldier was not from or to any British officer who had violated French rights.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, February 28, 1898.

Status of British Companies in France.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the inclosed list respecting the bearing of a recent decision of the French Cour de Cassation on the status of British Companies in France as secured by the Anglo-French Convention of 1862 (Paper A).

The following is a summary of the case dealt with by the Cour de Cassation (Papers B, C, D, and E).

A Company called "La Construction (Limited)" was registered as a British Company in May 1888. It was formed by seven Englishmen, who, for the purposes of effecting the registration of the Company in this country, under the provisions of the Companies Act, became holders of one share each. The returns made by the Company show that these seven persons never had any substantial interest in it, but that, on the other hand, no less than 1,770 shares were held by eight Frenchmen, only one of whom had an English address.

The Company bought land and erected a casino at Cap Martin with money advanced by one of the French directors, who was repaid by the allotment of a certain number of fully-paid shares to his nominees.

Meanwhile, a private creditor of the French director who had advanced the money to the Company obtained a Judgment against him, and, as is permitted by French law, registered this Judgment as a general mortgage against any real property the debtor might possess. This creditor then applied to the local Court to have the Company declared null and void, as being English only in form, but, in reality, fraudulently constituted out of France by his debtor in order to evade the requirements of French law in respect of the debt owing to him—the creditor. The local Court did not take this view, but, on appeal, the Court of Aix held that the Company was a fictitious one. The result was to hand over the Company's assets to the private creditors of one of the directors, and the Company was declared null and void from its formation.

The Cour de Cassation, the highest French Tribunal, which was asked to reverse this decision, upheld it in the following Judgment (see translation as given in the "Monthly Circular," No. 36, for December 1897, of the British Chamber of Commerce in Paris, Paper D), which was as follows:—

"As to the violation of the Treaty with England of the 17th May, 1862, and the false application of the Law of the 24th July, 1867:

"Whereas, if the nationality of a Company depends upon the place of its corporate" (i.e., registered) "office, and upon its principal establishment, in whatever country are carried on the operations from which its speculations are derived, it is on the condition that this corporate office be of an effective and serious character, and has not been transferred abroad in a purely fictitious manner for the purpose of escaping the rules of public order prescribed by French law for the creation and working of Companies:

"Whereas the Judgment appealed against states, as a matter of fact, that the pretended Company had purposely in England only a nominal and fictitious office where its administration had never been centralized; that it kept there only a secretary without initiative, receiving the balance-sheets and the decisions from Paris, where alone the directors met; that it had no interest whatever in England, and never exercised its activity" (i.e., transacted business) "there; that the creation of the appearance of" (i.e., what was ostensibly) "a principal office in London was only suggested by its principal founder in order to withdraw a perfectly French establishment from the protective formalities of our laws, of which he feared the application; that in concluding from these circumstances, decided upon in the last resort that the said Company was not a foreign one, had assumed no legal form in France, and should, therefore, be declared null and void, the Court of Appeal has violated no law.

"Rejects the appeal," &c.

It is contended by Mr. Thomas Barclay, who is a member of the English and French bars, and a jurist of some repute, resident and practising at Paris, and whose views on the points involved are indorsed and accepted by the British Chamber of Commerce, that this Judgment, when resolved into its legal elements, rests on the two following propositions (Paper E):—

1. Companies constituted according to British law are not necessarily British Companies. Their nationality depends on the place of their corporate office and upon their principal establishment. It depends also upon the corporate office being of an effective and serious character.

2. A Company constituted according to British law is not entitled to exercise its rights in France if formed to escape the rules of public order prescribed by French law for the creation and working of Companies.

Article I of the Anglo-French Convention of 1862 runs as follows (Paper A):—

"The High Contracting Parties declare that they mutually grant to all Companies and other associations, commercial, industrial, or financial, constituted, and authorized in conformity with the laws in force in either of the two countries, the power of exercising all their rights, and of appearing before the Tribunals, whether for the purpose of bringing an action or for defending the same, throughout the dominions and possessions of the other Power, subject to the sole condition of conforming to the laws of such dominions and possessions."

It is, therefore, contended that the French law, as expounded by the Cour de Cassation, renders to some extent nugatory the provisions of this Article, according to which all Companies constituted and authorized in conformity with the laws in force in either of the two countries are granted the power of exercising all their rights throughout the dominions of the other Power.

The French law, moreover, seems to qualify very materially the stipulation of the Article—

1. By laying down that the nationality of a Company depends on the place of its corporate office and its principal establishment;

2. By excepting Companies whose corporate office is not of an "effective and serious character;"

3. And by making their validity depend upon the intentions of the promoters.

The facts of this case were first brought to the notice of Her Majesty's Government by the British Chamber of Commerce in Paris early in 1897 (Paper B), and again recently by Mr. Bevan (Paper E).

The Board of Trade were consulted, and have furnished a Memorandum on the subject compiled by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies (Paper C).

After careful consideration, Lord Salisbury decided that the case was not one upon which any representation could properly be based (Papers F and G), for although, no doubt, technically every Company registered under the English Companies Act comes within the terms of the Convention of 1862, yet substantial justice seems to have been awarded by the French Courts in this particular instance.

It is, nevertheless, possible that bonâ fide cases might arise which, in view of the state of the French law, might involve great hardship to British subjects, and it therefore seems desirable to consider whether some protest of a general character might not advantageously be lodged with the French Government.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the circumstances would justify his Lordship in instructing Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris to represent to the French Government that the conditions of the French law, as expounded by the Cour de Cassation, seems to run counter in some respects to the provisions of the Convention of 1862, and to suggest to the French Government the propriety of modifying the law so as to bring it into conformity with that instrument.

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to offer on the question.

I have, &c.

We do not advise that any representation should be made to the French Government as to this Judgment.

The Cour de Cassation does not appear to us to have laid down any principle except that when a Company is purely colourable its registration under the English law is unavailing in France. This is not, in our opinion, in any way inconsistent with the terms of the Treaty.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, May 11, 1898.

Jurisdiction over natives in New Hebrides.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Bertram Cox's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by you to transmit, for our consideration, a despatch from the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific,* respecting the case of certain natives of the New Hebrides Group who were accused of the murder of a naturalized British subject at Aoba, one of the islands of that group.

That the present political position of those islands was defined by the Convention between England and France of the 16th November, 1887, and the Declaration (with Regulations appended thereto) of the 26th January, 1888.

That the natives of those islands were savages of a low type, without Chiefs or any recognized native authority capable of exercising jurisdiction, or from whom a concession of jurisdiction could be obtained.

That by Article II of the Convention of the 16th November, 1887, it would be seen that a Joint Naval Commission was agreed to be constituted, composed of British and French naval officers on the Pacific Station, charged with the duty of maintaining order, and of protecting the lives and property of British subjects and French citizens in the New Hebrides.

That the terms of that Article appeared to imply a claim on the part of Her Majesty and the Government of the French Republic to exercise criminal jurisdiction over the natives of the group, but that in the Regulations for the guidance of the Joint Naval Commission, appended to the Declaration of the 26th January, 1888, it would be seen that the only action contemplated was repressive action in the nature of an act of war.

That it appeared, however, from paragraph 4 of Sir G. O'Brien's despatch, that the Commission had been in the habit, apart from its exercise of acts of war, of inflicting punishments judicially by way of fines and imprisonment, and that the French authorities in the neighbouring French settlement of New Caledonia recognized and gave effect to such sentences of imprisonment, in cases where the outrages or offences perpetrated had been against French subjects.

That it appeared to you that there could be no question that in such proceedings the Naval Commission was acting beyond its powers as defined in the Regulations appended to the Declaration of 1888.

That in those circumstances, as the French authorities were apparently prepared to overlook any informality in the action of the Commission in assuming judicial powers, while the Government of Fiji rightly declined to do so, the protection of the lives and property of British subjects in the New Hebrides would be much less effective than that afforded to French citizens, and the extension of French influence in the group would be facilitated, a result which, from a political point of view, it was important to avoid.

The copies of previous opinions* of the Law Officers bearing upon this question were inclosed with Mr. Bertram Cox's letter.

That in those circumstances Mr. Bertram Cox was to request us to be good enough to consider:—

1. Whether, in entering into the Convention of 1887, Her Majesty and the Government of the French Republic have not asserted a claim to jurisdiction over the natives of the New Hebrides Group.

2. Whether, in the case of Her Majesty, it can be properly held that the jurisdiction so claimed is a jurisdiction held by "usage, sufferance, and other lawful means," as specified in the Foreign Jurisdiction Act of 1890, and for the exercise of which Her Majesty may make provision under section 5 of that Act.

3. If so, whether it would be proper for Her Majesty by Order in Council, after an agreement, express or implied, with France, to empower the Joint Commission to exercise such jurisdiction in ordinary cases of offences against the lives or property of British subjects, and in more serious cases, such as murder, to remit them for trial by the High Commission Court in Fiji, and, further to empower that Court to hear and decide such cases.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

In our opinion, there is no claim to jurisdiction over the natives within the New Hebrides Group within the meaning of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act. That Act refers to cases in which Her Majesty has jurisdiction in foreign parts. In the present case what we have to deal with is an agreement between Her Majesty and the French Republic jointly to exercise such force as may be necessary for the protection of the subjects of the two countries in the New Hebrides.

We do not think that any Order in Council can be made under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act. If it is found necessary to deal with the matter, the proper course would, in our opinion, be to pass an Act of Parliament of the Imperial Legislature providing that the sentences passed by the Joint Commission might be enforced in Her Majesty's dominions.

We have, &c.

Search of Muscat slave-dhows flying French flag.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, July 12, 1898.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you a collection of papers in print (marked A), which relate to the question of the protection afforded by France to dhow-owners who are natives of Muscat, and who apply, under certain conditions, for the right to fly the French flag at sea.

The point to which the papers in question are chiefly directed is the immunity from search conferred by the system upon vessels engaged in the transport of slaves for sale, but they also refer to the more general question of the claim of any one State to extend its protection to the subjects of another, without the assent of such other State, and the letter from the India Office of the 23rd May (marked B) shows the effect of the pretension in the case of vessels of the Muscat State in the Persian Gulf and waters of the Indian Ocean adjacent to India.

The status of Muscat towards Great Britain is somewhat peculiar, for, on the one hand, its geographical and historical position bring it completely within the sphere of British interests, and, on the other hand, its independence has been guaranteed by Great Britain and France by the Declaration of the 10th March, 1862, inclosed herein, and marked (C).

France, moreover, by her Treaty with Muscat, signed at Zanzibar on the 17th November, 1844 (Paper D), enjoys certain rights in Muscat, amongst which are those of extra-territorial jurisdiction within that Sultanate (see Article VI), and the immunity of French domiciles from entry or visit, except with the consent of the occupier, unless with the intervention of the French Consul (see Article III).

The French Government contend that this exemption applies to all vessels flying the French flag in the territorial waters of Muscat. They have also persistently refused to allow such vessels to be searched for slaves or other purposes when in the territorial waters of Muscat, not only by foreign men-of-war, but even by the authorities of the territorial Sovereign.

Correspondence on this subject is sent herewith (Paper E), as elucidating the general position claimed by France in such matters, although it does not directly bear upon the point on which Lord Salisbury is desirous of obtaining your opinion. That point is whether there is any justification under the general law of nations, or through the special Agreements of France with this country and Muscat for the claim of France to confer the right of flying her flag, with its attendant immunities, upon subjects of the Sultan of Muscat who have qualified under French law for French protection, and to protect such persons in the territorial waters of Muscat or on the high seas against interference by the Sultan of Muscat or by British men-of-war.

The Memorandum marked (F) contains references which may assist you in forming an opinion on the subject dealt with in this letter.

Report.

The right to use the flag of a country is one that has been left to be regulated by the laws of that country; but this has rested on the assumption that this right will not be abused, and that permission to use the national flag will be granted only to vessels which can fairly be considered as national.

From the papers before us it would appear that a practice has prevailed of granting the use of the French flag to vessels which cannot be considered as, in any sense, French vessels.

The Arab slave-traders, to whom these permits are granted, do not become French subjects, and the allegation that they become French-protected persons is, it would appear, merely colourable. It is possible that they acquire this character by French law, but in order to validate the claim to fly the French flag from the point of view of international law, they should be so in reality.

The subject is one on which there is an almost entire absence of authority, but the claim of the French Government seems to us to be unsustainable on principle.

We cannot suppose that the French Government will fail to put a stop to so flagrant an abuse. If it fails to do so, and if it is considered expedient to resort to so extreme a step, the vessels may be treated, even on the high seas, as not entitled to the protection of the French flag.

The XXXIInd Article of the Treaty of Brussels may be referred to in any remonstrance that may be addressed to the French Government. In territorial waters, the vessels may clearly be searched and proceeded against for slave-trading, even if they are entitled to fly the French flag. Every Government has the right to police its own territorial waters. We cannot read the French Treaty with Muscat as in any way interfering with this right.

Canadian Alien Act.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, March 28, 1898.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to transmit to you herewith the accompanying list of papers which refer to an Act passed by the Parliament of Canada in 1897, and entitled "An Act to restrict the Importation and Employment of Aliens."

This measure is, it appears, in fact though not specifically, directed against immigrants from the United States, and was, it is stated, passed in retaliation for the enforcement against Canadians of the United States' Statute forbidding the immigration of contract labour.

In this connection, I am to direct your attention to section 9 of the Act, which provides that the Act shall only apply to such foreign countries as have enacted and retained in force, or as enact and retain in force, Laws or Ordinances applying to Canada of a character similar to this Act.

Section 1 of the Act makes it unlawful for any person, Company, partnership, or Corporation, in any manner to prepay the transportation, or in any way to assist or encourage the importation or immigration of any alien or foreigner into Canada under contract or agreement, parole or special, express or implied, made previous to the importation or immigration of such alien or foreigner, to perform labour or service of any kind in Canada; and section 3 imposes penalties for the violation of these provisions.

By section 4 of the Act, it is further constituted an indictable offence for the Master of any vessel knowingly to bring into Canada on such vessel, and to land, or permit to be landed, from any foreign port or place any such alien, labourer, mechanic, or artisan, under contract to perform labour or service in Canada.

Section 6 further provides for the compulsory return of immigrants under certain circumstances to the countries whence they came.

In view of the stipulations contained in many of the Commercial Treaties between this country and foreign Powers, in respect of the freedom of individuals to enter and reside in the respective countries, the question arises whether the provisions of the Act conflict with such Treaty stipulations as accord most-favoured-nation treatment in this respect.

A Parliamentary Return of most-favoured-nation clauses in existing Treaties of Commerce and Navigation is inclosed, and also Memoranda showing the views of this Department on the bearing of these on the case under discussion. I am to point out that the stipulations in regard "to freedom to enter and reside" are in some instances absolute, as for instance is the case in the Treaties with Austria,* Colombia,* Germany,* &c. (see marked passages at pp. 2, 10, and 20 of the Blue Book), and are in other instances limited by the words "subject always to the Laws and Statutes of the two countries respectively," or words to this effect. Such is the case in the Treaties with Bolivia,* Costa Rica,* Mexico, and Russia,* &c. (see marked passages at pp. 4, 11, 31, and 44).

The Treaty with the United States is of the latter character, but as its stipulations do not apply to British Colonies, it is not directly pertinent to the question at issue.

Of the Treaties above mentioned, those marked with an asterisk apply to Canada.

A separate and complete list of all the Treaties containing most-favoured-nation clauses applicable to Canada is also inclosed.

Lord Salisbury is disposed to think that, as the Act does not place any restriction on the individual alien immigrator, but only on persons, &c., whether foreigners or natives, already within Canadian jurisdiction, who enter into contracts or arrangements to introduce aliens into the Dominion, it can scarcely be held to contravene or to conflict with the stipulations of existing Treaties with foreign Powers.

As, however, the matter is not entirely free from doubt, especially in the case specially dealt with in section 4 of the Act, I am to request that you will take the papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the point above submitted, and also with any general observations which you may be disposed to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.

Return of Treaties, containing most-favoured-nation clauses, applicable to Canada.

Report.

Apart from section 6, this Act cannot infringe any Treaty.

Canada is at liberty to restrict the engagement of foreign labour by persons residing in Canada, and it is to such residents only that the Act, except sections 4 and 6, applies, and section 4 applies to all masters of vessels of any nationality.

Section 6 might conceivably involve a breach of a most-favoured-nation clause in favour of a country which had not itself infringed the most-favoured-nation clause in question. Such a country might have passed a law containing all the provisions of this Act, except section 6, and then this Act would apply to natives of that country who might be deported under section 6.

The chance, however, of this contingency occurring is so remote that we do not on this ground advise the rejection of the measure, and its obvious futility is probably no reason for disallowing it.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 27, 1898.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith the papers marked in the accompanying list, which refer to certain clauses of the Architects Registration Bill (Paper B) introduced into Parliament during the present Session. Architects Registration Bill.

The clauses in question, Nos. 38, 39, 40, and 41, to which attention has been called by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, deal with the registration of foreign practitioners. The first three of these clauses appear to be unobjectionable, from the point of view of this Department, and it is only with reference to the last-named clause (No. 41) that some doubt is felt, and I am therefore specially to request your attention to its wording.

"Her Majesty may from time to time, by Order in Council, declare that this part of this Act shall be deemed, on and after a day to be named in such Order, to apply to any British possession or foreign country which, in the opinion of Her Majesty, affords to the registered practitioners of the United Kingdom such privileges of practising in the said British possession or foreign country as to Her Majesty may seem just: and from and after the day named in such Order in Council, such British possession or foreign country shall be deemed to be a British possession or foreign country to which this Act applies within the meaning of this part thereof; but, until such Order in Council has been made in respect of any British possession or foreign country, this part of this Act shall not be deemed to apply to any such possession or country; and the expression 'on and after the passing of this Act' as used in this part of this Act, means, as respects any British possession or foreign country, the day on and after which this part of this Act is declared, by Order in Council, to apply to such British possession or foreign country.

"(1.) Her Majesty may from time to time, by Order in Council, revoke and renew any Order made in pursuance of this section, and on the revocation of such Order, as respecting any British possession or foreign country, such possession or foreign country shall cease to be a possession or foreign country to which this part of this Act applies, without prejudice, however, to the right of any persons whose names have been already entered on the register."

Upon this the question arises whether the provisions which confer upon Her Majesty power to apply, by Order in Council, or to revoke the application of the benefits of the Act in regard to any foreign country which may not be held to afford reciprocal privileges to British subjects, conflict with or contravene in any degree the stipulations contained in some of the Treaties between this country and foreign Powers, which concede either national or most-favoured-nation treatment to the subjects of such Powers in matters of commerce, industry, &c.

As an example of stipulations granting national treatment in this respect, Article XIII. paragraph 4, of the Treaty with Italy of the 15th June, 1883 (Paper C), may be cited.

1898

"ARTICLE XIII.

"The subjects of each of the High Contracting Parties who shall conform to the laws of the country:—

"1. Shall have full liberty with their families to enter, travel, or reside in any part of the dominions and possessions of the other High Contracting Party.

"2. They shall be permitted to hire or possess the houses, manufactories, warehouses, shops, and premises which may be necessary for them.

"3. They may carry on their commerce either in person or by any Agents whom they may think fit to employ.

"4. They shall not be subject in respect of their person or property, or in respect of passports, nor in respect of their commerce or industry to any taxes, whether general or local, or to imposts or obligations of any kind whatever other or greater than those which are or may be imposed upon native subjects."

It is not clear that the obligation to show reciprocity would contravene the stipulations of paragraph 4, and it might be held that the national treatment stipulations of that Article would not be infringed by the provisions of the Bill.

Any person, whether a British subject or a foreigner, who complies with the requirements of clauses 19 and 22 of the Bill (which relate to apprenticeship, examination, &c.), is entitled to registration as an architect; but if a foreigner or a British subject wishes to obtain registration by reason of his possessing a foreign diploma, and without complying with the requirements to which persons having no such foreign diploma are subjected, he must, under clause 41 of the Bill, be the subject of a country giving reciprocity in this respect.

With regard to the question of most-favoured-nation treatment, however, as it is understood in this country, the case appears to be somewhat doubtful, and as an instance of stipulations granting most-favoured-nation treatment in matters of industry, profession, &c., Article I of the Treaty with France of the 28th February, 1882 (Paper D), may be quoted.

Article I runs as follows:—

"ARTICLE I.

"The Customs Tariff for goods the produce or manufacture of the United Kingdom on their importation into France and Algeria, and for goods the produce or manufacture of France or Algeria on their importation into the United Kingdom, being from henceforth regulated by the internal legislation of each of the two States, the High Contracting Parties guarantee to each other reciprocally in the United Kingdom and in France and Algeria in all other matters the treatment of the most favoured nation.

"It is therefore understood that, with the exception above stated, each of the High Contracting Parties engages to give the other immediately and unconditionally the benefit of every favour, immunity, or privilege in matters of commerce or industry which have been or may be conceded by one of the High Contracting Parties to any third nation whatsoever, whether within or beyond Europe.

"It is likewise understood that in all that relates to transit, warehousing, exportation, re-exportation, local dues, brokerage, customs formalities, samples, and likewise in all matters relating to the exercise of commerce and industry, and in respect to residence, whether temporary or permanent, the exercise of any calling or profession, the payment of taxes or other impositions, and the enjoyment of all legal rights and privileges, including the acquiring, holding, and power of disposing of property, British subjects in France or in Algeria, and French in the United Kingdom, shall enjoy the treatment of the most favoured nation."

The principle laid down in clause 41 of the Bill is by no means unusual, but Lord Salisbury would, nevertheless, be glad to be informed whether, in the opinion of the Law Officers, it can in strictness be held to contravene stipulations of the nature of those above quoted.

For instance, "The Medical Act, 1886" (Paper E), section 17, declares that Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, apply portions of it to any British possession or foreign country which, in the opinion of Her Majesty, affords to the registered medical practitioners of the United Kingdom such privileges of practising in the said British possession or foreign country as to Her Majesty may seem just.

In the same manner, under "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894" (Paper F), Orders in Council are issued admitting foreign countries, where the British system of tonnage measurement is adopted, to privileges with respect to the tonnage certificates of their vessels.

In such cases, although conditions are imposed by Act of Parliament which are perhaps not in entire harmony with the principle of unconditional most-favoured-nation treatment, no inconvenience would appear to have hitherto arisen in carrying these conditions into effect.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration and favour his Lordship with your opinion on the points raised in this letter, viz., whether the provisions of the Bill contravene Articles in Treaties guaranteeing:—

1. National treatment;
2. Most-favoured-nation treatment; and with any observations of a more general nature which you may be disposed to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion the provisions of this Bill do not contravene Treaties guaranteeing national treatment.

The same conditions are imposed on British subjects and on foreigners with regard to registration, except that with regard to foreign diplomas the conditions are slightly more stringent in the case of British subjects (clause 38 (2).

No Treaty contains any clause that foreign diplomas shall be as valid as British diplomas.

Nor do the provisions of this Bill contravene Treaties guaranteeing most-favoured-nation treatment. Such Treaties guarantee for the subjects of the Power treatment as favourable as that accorded to the subjects of the most favoured nation. This Bill treats all foreigners alike. The power given to Her Majesty in Council by clause 41 is merely to decide what are the countries whose diplomas may be recognized, and we do not think that its exercise could be held to infringe any most-favoured-nation clause.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 12, 1898.

Right of foreign vessels to trawl in the Firth of Clyde.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying letter from the Scottish Office respecting the question of trawling by foreign vessels in the Firth of Clyde.

Since the passage of the Herring Fishery for Scotland Act of 1889, the Firth of Clyde has been closed to British trawlers, and foreign trawlers have not hitherto been observed therein, but on the 20th ultimo the Danish trawler "Dania" was seen trawling in those waters off the coast of Ayrshire.

In view of the fact that the Firth of Clyde is nearly land-locked, and is no where wider than 30 miles in breadth, the Secretary for Scotland inquires whether, if the doctrine of the "King's Chambers" has now any legal weight, it could be applied in the present instance, in order to exclude foreign trawlers from the Firth.

Lord Balfour draws a distinction between the present case and that of the Moray Firth, which is frequented by foreign trawlers, in view of the much narrower and more restricted limits of the Clyde waters, and of the fact that they are closed in virtue of an Act of Parliament, whereas the Moray Firth is only closed to British trawlers by a bye-law of the Fishery Board for Scotland, which, however, gives no power to exclude foreign trawlers.

The contention which Lord Balfour suggests raising with regard to the Firth of Clyde could hardly be advanced on behalf of the Moray Firth, which is 80 miles wide at its entrance, and which embraces an area of nearly 2,500 square miles.

A somewhat similar point was recently raised in connection with the question of trawling in Icelandic waters, and I have therefore the honour also to inclose a despatch from Sir C. Scott, Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen (Paper (B)), reporting a conversation which he held in October last with M. Vedel respecting the claim of the Danish Government to extend the maritime jurisdiction of Denmark to a distance of 3 miles outside a line drawn between headlands not further apart than 10 miles.

The reply returned by Lord Salisbury to this despatch is also inclosed (Paper (C)), in which it was pointed out that the doctrine of the 10-mile limit for bays could not, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, be regarded as one of universal acceptance or even of general application; and that although the rule had been adopted in certain specific cases for special objects and with local limitations, these arrangements were insufficient to prove that general consensus, which is the necessary foundation of a rule of international law.

Sir C. Scott was instructed to inform the Danish Minister for Foreign Affairs in this sense, and to state that Her Majesty's Government did not admit the rule as a general principle which they could accept without reserve, either in respect of their own possession or as a part of international law.

In these circumstances the question arises whether, in view of the attitude already adopted in the instance above quoted, Her Majesty's Government would, in consideration of the special features of the case and of the importance attached to the protection of the fishing interests of a large section of Her Majesty's Scotch subjects, be justified in applying the doctrine of the "King's Chambers" in the particular case of the Firth of Clyde and in excluding foreign trawlers therefrom.

I am accordingly to request that you will take the papers submitted herewith into your consideration and favour his Lordship with your opinion on the point thus raised, as well as with any general observations you may have to offer on the question.

Report.

There is no definite rule of international law on this subject, and every case must be decided on its own special circumstances.

There is no general rule as to a width of 10 miles, though this has been adopted in the North Sea Convention and other Treaties.

Where the Gulf is very deep the waters may be territorial even if the mouth be of a width which would exclude the idea of territoriality in the case of a shallower gulf.

In the present case we think that to the south of the Island of Arran the waters should not be claimed as territorial, but should be regarded as on the same footing as the Irish Sea. The distance from the Mull of Cantire to Corsewall Point in the county of Wigtown is nearly three times as great as from the Mull to the Irish coast.

But when the latitude of the south end of Arran is reached the case seems to us to be different. At this point the distance from Arran to Cantire is a little under 10 miles, and from Arran to Ayrshire a little over 10 miles, while the Firth of Clyde, with its arms, extends to the north for a distance of over 60 miles. We think that from this point northward the Firth of Clyde may fairly and properly be claimed as territorial water. There is no positive rule of international law to exclude what appears to us to be the natural inference to this effect from the very peculiar geography of this arm of the sea.

Before, however, this claim be asserted it must be ascertained that there are no Treaties with which it would be inconsistent. Would it clash with any clause in the Fishery Convention with France?

Subject to this consideration, we think that Her Majesty's Government may claim the right to exclude foreign trawlers from these waters.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 16, 1898.

Protection of Foreign Diplomats in England. I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith, for your consideration, a Circular despatch addressed by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at Paris to the French Diplomatic Representatives at this and the various other Courts, which was lately communicated by Baron de Courcel to Lord Salisbury, and in which a request is made for information with regard to the protection afforded by English law to Diplomatic Representatives of foreign States at this Court in respect of offences committed against them, including defamatory libels published regarding them in the press or otherwise.

I am also to inclose the draft of the reply which, if you should concur in it, Lord Salisbury proposes to return to this communication; his Lordship would, however, before dispatching the note, be glad to be informed, at your early convenience, whether its terms are, in your opinion, right and proper in the circumstances.

Annex.

Draft of Letter to M. Cambon.

Your Excellency, Foreign Office, December , 1898.

ON the 30th ultimo his Excellency Baron de Courcel communicated to me a despatch which he had received from the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs, requesting information with regard to the protection afforded by the provisions of English law to Diplomatic Representatives of foreign States at this Court in respect of offences committed against them, including defamatory libels published regarding them in the press or otherwise,

In this connection the French Ministry for Foreign Affairs was specially desirous of obtaining answers to three questions which were embodied in the Circular despatch above alluded to.

Although it is practically impossible to return categorical answers to the three questions put to Baron de Courcel, the following statement will, I trust, afford, so far as the position in the United Kingdom, of the Ambassadors of the French Republic at this Court is concerned, such information as is required by the French Ministry for Foreign Affairs.

The only Statutory enactment which exists in this country with regard to the protection of foreign Diplomatic ~~Ministers from outrages, &c.,~~ Ministers and their suites, is the Act of 7 Anne, cap. 12 (1708), a copy of which I have the honour to inclose.

By this Act not only are the persons of Ambassadors and other public Ministers ~~inviolable~~ exempt from process of law in civil cases, but all writs and processes whereby "their goods and chattels may be distrained, seized, or attacked," are "utterly null and void;" and all concerned in obtaining such writs or processes are subject to severe punishment.

The Statute protects also those in the service of the Ambassadors or Ministers.

This Act, ~~which has always been considered to be in precise conformity with the law of nations, was intended to be declaratory of the "jus gentium" on the subject, and to embody the doctrines of that law in the provisions of the municipal law of this country~~ was really declaratory of the common law of this country, and declared the embodiment in our municipal law of the principles of international law.

According to this Act, the Ambassador or Minister, and his domestics or domestic servants are the only persons entitled to privilege. With regard to persons in the service of the Ambassador or Minister, the Act makes no distinction between foreigners and British subjects, the condition being that such persons must be the domestics or domestic servants of the Ambassador or Minister.

I may add that Her Majesty's Government decline to receive any British subject in the capacity of Diplomatic Agent of a foreign Power, and that although, strictly speaking, an Ambassador or Minister can legally claim diplomatic privilege only for persons forming bonâ fide a part of his family, and not for persons not actually domesticated with him or resident in his house, yet it is, in practice, allowed in the case of persons who, for the convenience of the Ambassador or Minister, reside elsewhere than in his house, provided they pass the principal part of their time there, occupied as domestics or domestic servants, and are engaged in no other occupation whatever.

Any claim to diplomatic privileges on the part of persons alleged to belong to the family or establishment of a foreign Ambassador or Minister would, however, if contested, have to be decided by the competent Courts of Justice in this country.

It is the practice for foreign Ambassadors and Ministers in this country to furnish a list of the suites and servants ~~sent~~ respectively to this Department ~~by foreign Ambassadors and Ministers in this country~~ to the police authorities. This list is communicated through the Secretary of State for the Home Department, who, in the event of any person named in the list being arrested, would, ~~on finding his name on the list,~~ at once release him.

With regard to other offences, libels, &c., against foreign Diplomatic Agents, the latter ~~would appear to~~ have the same legal remedies as British subjects, or other residents in this country, but having regard to the special position of Ambassadors, ~~as it is the bounden duty of every State to make reparation for injuries inflicted upon the Ambassador of any foreign Power residing at its Court,~~ Her Majesty's Government would no doubt, as an act of courtesy, on the matter being brought to their attention by the Ambassador or Minister concerned, at once obtain the advice of the Law Officers of the Crown for the time being, and if, after consideration of their advice, a prosecution should be thought ~~necessary or~~ advisable, would give instruct*ions* ~~them to conduct it~~ for its institution.

According to the Criminal Law of England, it is a misdemeanour for any one to publish any libel tending to degrade, revile, or expose to hatred and contempt, any foreign Prince or Potentate, Ambassador, or other foreign dignitary, with intent to disturb peace and friendship between the United Kingdom and the country to which any such person belongs; and ~~it is probable that,~~ in any ~~suitable~~ proper case, Her Majesty's Attorney-General would, on the matter being brought ~~coming~~ to his notice, at once institute proceedings against any person so offending ~~of his own instance, file an "ex officio" information in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice against the person so offending.~~

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 16, 1897.

Claims of British subjects for losses through burning of Ngami by Germans.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the claims of certain British subjects to compensation from the German Government in respect of certain property which was destroyed at the burning of the town of Ngami, in Togoland, on the 16th December, 1894.

The earlier correspondence on the subject is summarized in the Memorandum (Document A) of the 11th November, 1896, and the facts of the case are briefly as follows:—

In February 1894 a Convention was concluded between this country and Germany, establishing a Customs Union between the Gold Coast east of the River Volta and Togoland, by which it was stipulated that the British possessions on the Gold and Slave Coasts lying to the east of the River Volta, and the German possessions on the Gold and Slave Coasts, should form a single Customs sphere, without any intervening Customs barrier, in such a manner that one and the same rate of customs duty should be levied within them, and that goods having paid customs duty on the frontier of the one territory might be imported into, and thus circulate freely throughout the other without additional payment.

A map (Document B) is inclosed, showing the relative situation of the territories to which this Agreement relates.

Many complaints were, however, made of the spirit in which this arrangement was carried out by the German authorities, who insisted on treating as smugglers all persons crossing from British into German territory who could not prove that their wares had paid duty—an impossible demand in the case of petty traders.

The Customs documents showing that duty had been paid at a British Custom-house on the frontier of the common Customs sphere would generally relate to rather large parcels, and it is evident that each purchaser of a portion of the parcel could not in these circumstances produce Customs papers relating to his individual portion of the original parcel.

At length, in December, 1894, the German authorities set fire to, and destroyed, as a punitive measure, Ngami, or Nkami, a town situated, indeed, within German territory, but inhabited for the most part by natives of the Gold Coast, it being alleged that the place was a centre of smuggling.

The German authorities assert that the residents fled with their property on the approach of the punitive expedition, but the result of a careful inquiry by one of Her Majesty's Judges for the Gold Coast Colony has been to show that there are substantial claims by British subjects amounting to nearly 3,000*l.* for property destroyed in the town (see Colonial Office, 30th August, 1897, Document C).

The question arises whether, in these circumstances, there is good ground for making a representation to the German Government with a view to obtaining compensation for the British subjects who suffered loss on the occasion.

Lord Salisbury is not aware of any case where British subjects have claimed compensation for loss occasioned by the destruction, as a punitive measure, of a town by the authorities of a country to which that town belonged; but somewhat similar claims were made after the bombardment of Hickory Town by the Germans in 1885, and of Minengani by the Portuguese in 1888, and copies of the Reports of the then Law Officers of the Crown on the cases submitted to them on those occasions respectively are inclosed for convenience of reference (Documents D and E).

I am to request that you will take into your consideration the papers which are transmitted herewith, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the question submitted in this letter, and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

Report.

The information before us does not disclose sufficient ground for the presentation of a formal claim against the German Government.

In the absence of facts, showing that the action of the authorities in sending a punitive expedition was reckless, or uncalled for, or that consistently with the sending of such an expedition notice might have been sent to British subjects to remove their goods, there do not appear to us to be any special circumstances upon which a formal demand for compensation could be based.

The ground on which the German Government refused to entertain the claim was apparently that they denied the destruction of the property in question. The investigation by Mr. Justice Smith (though we must observe that it was necessarily ex parte) may afford an opportunity for again bringing this matter forward by way of friendly remonstrance, asking for consideration of, and compensation for, the losses sustained; and the German Government might be informed that formal judicial investigation has shown that the property was, in fact, destroyed, and that therefore the question of compensation should be favourably considered.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, March 5, 1898.

Petition for free pardon for Mrs. Carew convicted of murder in H.M.'s. Court for Japan.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the accompanying Petition, with the papers thereto annexed, which has been handed to his Lordship for submission to the Queen. The prayer of this Petition is for the grant of Her Majesty's free pardon to Edith May Hallowell Carew, who, on the 1st February, 1897, was convicted in Her Majesty's Court for Japan on the charge of the wilful murder of her husband, and sentenced to death, but whose sentence was subsequently commuted to one of imprisonment with hard labour for life.

The material facts of the case are set out fully and in chronological order in Part I of the "Statement in support of the Petition" (Paper marked B). The principal events may be briefly summarized as follows:—

Mr. Carew died at Yokohama on the 22nd October, 1896. An inquest was opened before Mr. Hall, the Acting British Consul at that port, sitting as Coroner, and a jury of five. It terminated on the 6th November, 1896, with the following verdict returned by the jury:—

"We find that W. R. H. Carew died on the 22nd October, 1896, at the Royal Naval Hospital from the effects of arsenic, but by whom the poison was administered there is no direct evidence to show."

On the 11th November Her Majesty's Crown Prosecutor in Japan appeared before the Assistant Judge of Her Majesty's Court for Japan, to ask for the arrest of Mrs. Carew on the charge of the wilful murder of her husband. After proceedings extending over several days, Mrs. Carew was, on the 18th November, 1896, committed for trial. The trial opened on the 5th January, 1897, in the Court for Japan, before Mr. Mowat, then Judge of that Court, and a jury composed of five British subjects resident at Yokohama. It lasted twenty-one days in all. On the 1st February the jury returned a verdict of guilty, and sentence of death was thereupon passed upon the prisoner.

This sentence, which, under the provisions of Article 69 of "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1865" (copy annexed, Paper M), could not be carried into execution without the special directions of Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô, given in writing under his hand, was by him, and in virtue of the power vested in him under the said Article of the Order in Council, commuted to a sentence of imprisonment with hard labour for life. Full reports of the proceedings at the inquest, the Magisterial inquiry, and the trial, as published by the "Japan Gazette," will be found in the printed volume accompanying the Petition (Paper C).

Mrs. Carew was at first imprisoned in the British consular gaol at Yokohama, but was subsequently removed to Hong Kong, under the provisions of Article 79 of the above-mentioned Order in Council (Paper M), as modified by Article 7 (2) of "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1878" (Paper N). From Hong Kong the convict was finally brought to England, in accordance with the provisions of "The Colonial Prisoners Removal Act, 1884," and she is now serving her term of imprisonment in this country.

In the meantime a Petition was lodged in the Privy Council Office on behalf of Mrs. Carew, for special leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council against the sentence of the Court for Japan. This Petition was heard on the 14th July, 1897. A record of the proceedings before the Judicial Committee will be found in the Law Reports (Appeal Cases, 1897, Part V, p. 719). It was submitted on behalf of the petitioner, "that, by the laws of England, no natural-born British subject can be tried or convicted of any capital or other felony in any of Her Majesty's Courts except by the verdict of twelve men." The contention, therefore, was, "that the verdict of five men was null and void, and that the verdict and sentence in the present case ought to be set aside and quashed." It was at the same time submitted "that there had been misdirection and misreception of evidence."

Leave to appeal was refused by the Judicial Committee. In delivering the Committee's judgment, the Lord Chancellor declared that Her Majesty had full jurisdiction to constitute the Court with a jury of five. With regard to the other questions which Counsel for the petitioner had attempted to argue, the Committee held that no case had been made out before them of a nature to show that by a disregard of the forms of legal process, or by some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice had been done.

The circumstances in which the Petition to the Queen for a free pardon was drawn up and signed are explained in a letter addressed to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs on the 24th January last by Messrs. Bridges, Sawtell, and Co., the solicitors acting for Mrs. Carew, which forms Annex (D) to my present letter. Attention is therein called to the limits within which the proceedings before the Judicial Committee above referred to were necessarily confined, stress being laid on the fact that the merits of Mrs. Carew's case itself "were not then argued at all, and that the decision" (of the Judicial Committee) "had no relation to them." Whilst this view, stated in such categorical terms, is not perhaps entirely borne out by the recorded Judgment of the Committee, which distinctly refers to "the other questions" raised by petitioner's counsel (i e., presumably, the questions of misdirection and misreception of evidence), the contention that the main question before the Committee was that of the validity of a verdict given by a jury of five would appear to be substantially correct.

The grounds on which the signatories of the present Petition base their prayer for the grant of a free pardon can best be stated in their own words. The petitioners submit "that there has been a miscarriage of justice, that the verdict of the jury was against the evidence, and that Mrs. Carew did not obtain a fair trial" on the following grounds, which are thus set out in paragraphs 3–17 inclusive of the Petition:—

"3. The charge, and the only charge, laid by the prosecution against Mrs. Carew was that she had poisoned her husband by administering to him arsenic in the form of Fowler's solution of arsenic. The prosecution expressly admitted that she did not administer to him any poison other than arsenic or any arsenic other than in the form of Fowler's solution.

"4. A chemical examination of portions of the deceased's viscera was made by one Edwin Devers, M.D., and by him alone, and he stated on oath at the trial that he found therein traces of lead, and that lead undoubtedly contributed to Mr. Carew's death. No examination was, however, made of those organs, which in cases of death by lead poisoning are most affected, nor did Dr. Devers ascertain what quantity of lead was contained in the organs which he did examine. Under these circumstances it was not possible to say how far death was due to lead poisoning, and it may be that Mr. Carew's death, if due to poison at all, was due to lead poisoning alone. By the admission of the prosecution Mrs. Carew did not administer any lead poison to her husband.

"5. Dr. Devers, in his examination of the deceased's viscera, discovered also traces of arsenic In a $\frac{1}{9}$th of the liver he discovered $\frac{1}{54}$th of a grain of arsenic, and in the other organs which he examined, the stomach, intestines, and abdominal fluid, he discovered a still smaller quantity, which he did not think it worth while to weigh, and did not in fact weigh. It is clear, therefore, that, although owing to unfortunate incompleteness of Dr. Devers' examination, it is impossible to ascertain exactly how much arsenic was in Mr. Carew's body at the time of his death, yet there could not possibly have been more than $\frac{18}{54}$ths or $\frac{1}{3}$rd of a grain of arsenic, and probably the quantity was much less. The smallest fatal dose of arsenic was said at the trial to be 2 grains, and books of authority give 3 or 4 grains as the smallest fatal dose. Under these circumstances it is necessary, in order to support the case for the prosecution that Mr. Carew's death was due to arsenic, to suppose that a very large quantity of arsenic was taken by Mr. Carew, and was eliminated from his system before his death. Such powerful elimination, especially in view of the fact that the kidneys, the chief organs of elimination, were probably diseased, is highly improbable, if not impossible, and further in this case, the presence of lead would be sufficient to account for death, so that there is no occasion to adopt the theory of elimination at all.

"6. Some of the arsenic found by Dr. Devers in Mr. Carew's stomach was in the form of white or solid arsenic, and must have been taken by the deceased in that form, and was therefore by the admission of the prosecution not administered by Mrs. Carew. The prosecution, while admitting that Mrs. Carew had not administered this arsenic, were unable even to suggest how Mr. Carew came to take this arsenic, viz., whether he took it himself, or whether it was administered to him by another. But in either case it would not be proper or safe for a jury to convict.

"7. It further appeared not only that some of the arsenic found in Mr. Carew's body must have been taken by him in the form of white arsenic, but it may be that every trace of arsenic which was so found was taken by him in that form, and that it was merely a matter of speculation whether Mr. Carew had in fact taken any arsenic at all in the form—and the only form—in which the prosecution alleged that Mrs. Carew had administered it to him, viz., the form of Fowler's solution of arsenic.

"8. The Judge told the jury it was impossible to discover any motive for the crime. It is quite incredible that a wife, being sane, would without motive murder her husband, and it is scarcely less incredible that the motive, if motive there were, could be concealed.

"9. It was proved at the trial by no less than nine witnesses that Mr. Carew since the year 1880 had been in the habit of taking arsenic, sometimes as a nerve tonic, and sometimes to relieve pain caused by bladder complaint, and it was also proved that at the time of his death he was suffering from the pain, from which he used to obtain relief by the use of arsenic. It also appeared that arsenic used in excess would cause pain very similar to that caused by the bladder complaint, so that Mr. Carew may have mistaken the pain caused by the arsenic for the pain from which he used to obtain relief by the use of arsenic. Under these circumstances it is more than probable that at the time of his death Mr. Carew was himself taking arsenic to relieve the pain caused by bladder complaint, from which he was unquestionably suffering at that time, and that if his death was really due to excessive doses of arsenic, such excessive doses were taken by him because he mistook the pain caused by the arsenic for the pain from which he hoped to obtain relief by use of arsenic.

"10. The case being one of circumstantial evidence the Judge ought to have told the jury that they could not find Mrs. Carew guilty unless they were satisfied that the circumstances were not only consistent with her guilt, but were also inconsistent with any other rational explanation. As a matter of fact, the circumstances proved at the trial were consistent with death being due not to arsenic but to lead poisoning: they were consistent with death being due (if to arsenic at all) to white arsenic: they were consistent with death being due (if to arsenic at all) to arsenic taken by the deceased himself, and further since the prosecution could give no explanation of how the deceased came to take white arsenic, beyond admitting that Mrs. Carew had not administered it, the circumstances were consistent with some person other than Mrs. Carew having feloniously administered arsenic to the deceased. While, therefore, the circumstances were obviously consistent with several rational, and indeed probable, conclusions other than that of Mrs. Carew's guilt, it further appears that the circumstances were to a great extent inconsistent with her guilt. No motive could be shown for the crime. Mrs. Carew was able to explain fully and satisfactorily why she had obtained any Fowler's solution of arsenic, and what she had done with such arsenic as she did obtain. She obtained such arsenic quite openly, she herself writing for it. She was most solicitous about her husband's illness, and on three separate occasions at least she unnecessarily summoned the doctor to see him, when if the case for the prosecution were true she knew he was suffering from the effects of arsenic administered by herself.

"11. For the reasons above set out, your petitioners most humbly submit that there has been a miscarriage of justice, and that the verdict was against the evidence.

"12. For the reasons hereinafter appearing, your petitioners most humbly submit that Mrs. Carew did not obtain a fair trial. The trial lasted four weeks, and its length was due to the fact that the prosecution called a mass of evidence which, though wholly irrelevant with regard to the issues in the case, was calculated to excite prejudice against the prisoner, and which the Judge directed the jury to disregard. Apart from the unfairness of placing such evidence before the jury at all, the mere length of the trial caused thereby was such as to prevent the jury from grasping the true issues and the facts bearing on those issues, and to hinder a fair trial.

"13. In the middle of the trial a charge of murdering Mr. Carew was preferred against a certain Miss Jacob, and in consequence of such charge being preferred the issue before the jury became in fact changed from 'Does the evidence prove that Mrs. Carew murdered her husband?' to 'Admitting murder was done, is it more probable that Mrs. Carew or Miss Jacob is the guilty person?'

"14. The jury consisted of five persons only drawn from among the residents at Yokohama, who before entering the jury-box must have been familiar not only with all the details of the case, but also with all the scandal and gossip and loose rumours which had for the previous two months been circulating throughout Yokohama. The prosecution ought to have caused Mrs. Carew to be tried either in Hong Kong or in this country.

"15. The evidence of Miss Jacob was admitted without cross-examination, and she went to the jury as a perfectly honest and truthful witness. As a matter of fact she is not a witness to whom credit ought to be given; but since the Judge admitted her evidence, and refused to allow her to be cross-examined, the jury were left in ignorance of her past life and character. It is very probable that knowledge of her life and character would have had great influence on the verdict of the jury.

"16. The Judge misdirected the jury. Firstly, he told them that it was not necessary for the prosecution to prove that death was actually due to the poison which Mrs. Carew was accused of administering. Secondly, he gave no direction to the jury as to the effect which the admission by the prosecution, that the white arsenic found in Mr. Carew's body was not administered by Mrs. Carew. ought to have had on their verdict. He merely mentioned incidentally that the charge of administering white arsenic had been abandoned by the prosecution, but obviously the fact that at the time of his death the deceased was himself taking the very poison which the prisoner was accused of administering, or some person other than the prisoner was administering to him, was of the very greatest importance.

"17. Thirdly, he told the jury that there was no evidence of the use of arsenic by the deceased since October 1894, a statement which is clearly contrary to the facts as proved at the trial."

The petitioners finally refer to the statement sent with their Petition, in which the above reasons and arguments are more fully set out (Paper B).

I am directed to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to—

1. Whether on any, and, if so, on which, of the grounds mentioned in the Petition its prayer should be recommended to Her Majesty's merciful consideration, with a view to the grant of a free pardon to Mrs. Carew; and

2. Whether, if you should be satisfied that the case is not one in which the grant of a free pardon could properly be recommended to Her Majesty, any, and if so what, mitigation or remission of the sentence which Mrs. Carew is now undergoing might with propriety be granted.

Lord Salisbury will at the same time be glad to be favoured with any observations of a more general nature which you may be good enough to offer on the case.

Report.

In our opinion the summing-up of the learned Judge was not satisfactory. We think that he failed sufficiently to explain to the jury what he meant by the expression "conduced to the death," and that he did not correctly state the question as to the symptoms of the deceased being consistent only with arsenical poisoning; but before we finally report on the case, we think it desirable to have the views of some competent expert upon the medical and chemical questions which arose on the trial.

We would suggest that, for this purpose, the assistance of the Home Office might be asked. If the papers were submitted to the Home Secretary he would be able to get such assistance on these points as he would get if he had to consider a Petition for pardon in a case tried in this country.

Without limiting the points which the medical expert should consider, we should be glad to have his assistance upon the questions—

(c.) Whether the sequence of the symptoms, when and as they occurred, are consistent with the administration of Fowler's solution to a quantity of from 3 to 4 ozs. distributed over four days, i.e., between the 17th and 22nd October.

(d.) Whether the death of Mr. Carew could, under the circumstances, have been the result of the administration of, say, 3½ ozs. of Fowler's solution.

Navigation in territorial waters of Mexico and British Honduras.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 10, 1898.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the inclosed papers relating to questions of navigation in the territorial waters of Mexico and British Honduras.

The geographical position will be seen on the map which accompanies the Treaty between Great Britain and Mexico (Paper A), and the approaches to the Rio Hondo, which forms the boundary between British and Mexican soil, are more clearly shown in the map inclosed in the letter from the Colonial Office of the 16th February last (Paper H).

Questions of navigation and jurisdiction arise at two points. In the first place, it is desired to regulate the conditions under which Mexican vessels can make use of the territorial waters of British Honduras, between Ambergris Cay and the mainland of the Colony, at the entrance to the Bay of Chetumal; and, secondly, there are doubts as to the jurisdiction to be exercised by the Mexican authorities over British vessels proceeding through Mexican waters at the mouth of the Rio Hondo.

With regard to the questions in the first category, I am to call attention to the Additional Article of the Treaty referred to above, by which "Her Britannic Majesty guarantees to Mexican merchant-vessels in perpetuity the absolute liberty as at present enjoyed of navigating the Strait opening to the south of Ambergris Cay, between this cay and the mainland, as well as of navigating the territorial waters of British Honduras." The negotiations which preceded the signing of this Article are summarized in the Memorandum by the Librarian of this Department (Paper L), from which it will be seen that the Article related solely to merchant-vessels, and that the proposal to include ships of war was distinctly and expressly refused by Her Majesty's Government. Sir H. Dering, Her Majesty's Minister at Mexico, was, moreover, instructed to explain to the Mexican Government that, although Her Majesty's Government had no wish to place obstacles in the way of boná fide revenue cruisers employed in the preventive service of the Mexican Government, it should, nevertheless, be remembered that passage through British territorial waters was granted to such vessels as a matter of courtesy and not of right; and he was also to intimate in friendly terms that this privilege must not be abused.

On the other hand, it must be borne in mind that in the not improbable event of the Mexican Government sending an expedition against the Santa Cruz Indians, the Colonial Government are anxious that the attack should be made from the south, i.e., by sea, in order to drive the Indians away from the Colony, because, if attacked from the eastern or land side, it is feared that large numbers of Indians would take refuge in British Honduras.

As regards the entrance to the Rio Hondo, it need only be explained that British vessels going to and fro are obliged, owing to the shallows, to pass through Mexican waters, and that the Mexican Customs authorities have established a floating station near the mouth of the river.

The following are the questions to which answers are requested by the Governor of British Honduras, and on which Lord Salisbury desires to be favoured with your opinion:—

1. Whether the Mexican authorities may lawfully carry through British waters to the west and south of Ambergris Cay British subjects and British ships seized in Mexican territory or Mexican waters for an alleged breach of Mexican Customs or revenue law.

2. Whether British subjects and British ships so seized may be detained on board or in the vicinity of the floating station for an indefinite time without being taken before some Mexican Tribunal for trial or condemnation.

3. How far British vessels proceeding to places on the British side of the Hondo, and without any intention of stopping at any place in Mexican territory, but having of necessity in the course of their voyage to pass through Mexican waters in consequence of the fact that the channel leading to and through the bar of the Hondo River is situated in Mexican waters, are liable to be stopped and searched by Mexican authorities in Mexican waters?

4. How far such vessels are bound to comply with Mexican Regulations in respect of the papers which they should carry?

5. How far every such vessel so provided is liable to be searched in spite of the fact that it is provided with the papers required by the Mexican authorities?

6. In the event of the Mexican Government, with the object of subjugating the Indians, sending transports and ships of war and military stores through the territorial waters of British Honduras, what attitude is to be taken by the Government of the Colony?

7. Are such vessels to be allowed to pass at all through the territorial waters of the Colony?

8. If so, are they to be allowed to pass unquestioned, and as a matter of course, or should they be formally called upon to ask permission?

9. In the event of such vessels being allowed themselves to pass through the territorial waters of the Colony, what steps, if any, should be taken if such vessels have on board Santa Cruz Indians who have been taken prisoners by the Mexican troops?

I am to add that his Lordship will also be glad to receive any general observations which you may wish to offer on the points submitted to you.

I have, &c.

Report.

1. The Mexican authorities may not lawfully carry through British waters British subjects or ships seized in Mexican territories or waters for breach of Mexican Customs or revenue law. This can be done, if at all, only by arrangement with the British Government.

The British Government would be entitled to demand, and enforce, the release of any British subjects or vessels carried through British waters without the consent of Her Majesty's Government.

A difficulty might arise in the case of British subjects carried as prisoners on board of a Mexican revenue-cutter, but this may be met by granting permission to such vessels to pass only on the terms that no attempt is made to carry British subjects on board as prisoners.

2. Such indefinite detention would be legitimate ground for diplomatic remonstrance. The Mexicans ought to have a Court capable of dealing with such cases accessible without passing through British territorial waters if they desire to exercise their right of seizure.

3. Such British vessels are liable to be stopped and searched by Mexican authorities in Mexican waters. As the left bank of the Rio Hondo belongs to Mexico, the Mexican authorities are entitled to take reasonable measures in Mexican waters to insure that British vessels proceeding to the Rio Hondo are bound for the right bank, or are not engaged in any trade on the left bank contrary to Mexican law.

4. Such vessels are bound to comply with any reasonable Mexican Regulations on this head.

5. The Mexican authorities are not bound to treat such papers as conclusive, but may reasonably exercise the right of search to satisfy themselves of the facts. This right, however, must not be used vexatiously, and if it be so used, diplomatic remonstrances may be addressed to the Mexican Government.

6. It should be distinctly stated that the passage of transports, ships of war, and military stores through British territorial waters can take place only by permission of Her Majesty's Government, and is not a matter of right.

7. Permission for this purpose may be allowed, if it be thought desirable.

8. They should in every case be formally called upon to ask permission.

9. Her Majesty's Government may, of course, if they please, impose as a condition of such passage that prisoners should not be carried on board the vessels in question.

We think that the passage of revenue-cutters should be allowed only on the terms of their not carrying on board any British subjects who may have been seized for alleged violations of Mexican Customs law.

We have only to add that we quite agree with the view stated by your Lordship that, while the passage of revenue-cutters should ordinarily be permitted, the Mexican authorities should not be allowed to suppose that this is a matter of right. These vessels are public vessels, and Her Majesty's Government has the same right to exclude them as to exclude men-of-war generally.

In view of the pretensions raised by General Monasterio's letter of the 22nd May, it is important that a clear statement should be made that Mexican public vessels can only be allowed passage by courtesy, and not as of right.

Expedition of Globe Venture Syndicate under Major Spilsbury in "Tourmaline" to Sûs.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, May 25, 1898.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the Papers enumerated in the accompanying list relating to an expedition which was dispatched under the auspices of the Globe Venture Syndicate, and under the command of Honorary Major A. Gybbon-Spilsbury, a Captain in the Thames Division of the Royal Engineers (militia), in the yacht "Tourmaline," to the Sûs districts of Morocco.

The intention of the Syndicate to take this step became known to the Moorish Government in the course of last autumn, and the Grand Vizier at once informed Sir A. Nicolson, Her Majesty's Minister at Tangier, that the inhabitants of the districts in question were under the protection and guardianship of the Government of Morocco, and that they had, therefore, no authority to make agreements such as they were said to have made with the Globe Venture Syndicate without the sanction of the Sultan of Morocco, which, in the present case, had not been given. The Grand Vizier also stated to Sir A. Nicolson that any British subject proceeding to open trade with the Chiefs on the Morocco coast above Wad Nun, without obtaining the permission of the Sultan, would do so at his own risk, that he would be liable to be arrested and handed over to the British Consular authorities at Mogador if he should attempt to land merchandize in the district of Sûs, and that such goods would be seized as contraband.

The decision of the Moorish Government in this matter was communicated to Major Spilsbury, and he was warned that if he insisted on visiting this district he would do so at his own risk, and must not expect any support or assistance from Her Majesty's Government.

The whole state of the case was also fully explained to Sir E. Thornton, one of the Directors of the Syndicate, but notwithstanding these warnings the Syndicate decided to allow the expedition to proceed.

A letter was thereupon addressed to the Syndicate (Paper A) warning them in a formal way against the course of action on which they were about to embark.

A copy of this letter was forwarded to Sir A. Nicolson with instructions to communicate it to the Moorish Government, and to take such further steps as he might consider desirable with a view to make it publicly known that Her Majesty's Government would not countenance or support the enterprise in which the agent of the Globe Venture Sydicate was engaged, unless the consent of the Moorish Government was first obtained.

In December last, Sir F. Plunkett, Her Majesty's Minister at Brussels, reported that he had learnt from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Antwerp that a British yacht, named the "Tourmaline," chartered by Major Spilsbury, was taking in arms and ammunition at Antwep.

Evidence that this was the case, and of the nature of the cargo, will be found in the despatches from Sir F. Plunkett, Nos. 36 and 78 of the 15th February and the 13th April (Papers B and C).

The vessel having taken on board 3,650 rifles, 500,000 rounds of ball cartridge, and other merchandize of a more innocent character, proceeded with Major Spilsbury on board to the coast of Morocco, and Sir A. Nicolson telegraphed on the 17th January last that he had heard from Mogador that that officer had landed at a port in Sûs with arms and ammunition.

The Moorish Government had, however, made preparations to frustrate Major Spilsbury's movements, and Sir A. Nicolson reported, by telegraph, on the 31st of the same month that, by a combined movement of a steamer belonging to the Moorish Government and of the Sultan's troops, the Major's party had been captured, he himself escaping on board the yacht.

It afterwards transpired that six prisoners were taken, viz., a Syrian interpreter, a German, and four British subjects, one of them of Portuguese origin. These men, after repeated demands addressed to the Moorish Government, have now been handed over by the Moorish authorities to Her Majesty's Minister, who has given the German subject up to his Legation, and the other prisoners are lodged in the Consular Prison, and have been charged before the Chief Justice of Gibraltar, who has come to Tangier for the purpose, under the provisions of Article 107 of the Morocco Order in Council, 1889. A copy of this Order in Council is annexed (Paper D).

A complete and thoroughly reliable account of what happened on the Sûs coast on the arrival of the "Tourmaline" can hardly be looked for, but Mr. Siebert, Captain of the Moorish steam-ship "Hassanee," in a Declaration to Her Majesty's Consul at Tangier, and Major Spilsbury, through the Globe Venture Syndicate, have both furnished statements from their different points of view of what took place. These will be found in Papers (E) and (F), and it may be inferred that the agent of the Syndicate disposed of a small quantity of arms to the natives, although the bulk of the weapons were, as will be seen from Paper (C), after the failure of the expedition landed at Antwerp, and the cartridges have been brought on to Gravesend consigned to Major Spilsbury. Those disposed of in Sûs are believed to be now in the hands of the Moorish authorities.

The incident has placed Her Majesty's Government in a very difficult position towards that of Morocco. The Globe Venture Syndicate have constantly denied that they were in any way privy to an attempt to introduce arms and ammunition into Morocco, and declared that their object was the opening of ordinary trade with the Sûs tribes. It seems inexcusable, however, that they should have permitted their agent, Major Spilsbury, to place on board the "Tourmaline" a cargo composed in such large proportions of munitions of war. As matters have turned out no very serious harm has resulted. If, however, Major Spilsbury had succeeded in disposing of the very considerable number of arms on board the "Tourmaline" to the natives of the Sûs district, there is little doubt that these tribes would have given very serious trouble to the Moorish Government.

The view which the Sultan and the Moorish Government take of the proceedings of the Syndicate, and the difficulty which Her Majesty's Minister has consequently encountered in inducing them to consent to the delivery of the prisoners, will be gathered from the various despatches from Sir A. Nicolson, which are bound together in a paper cover, and marked (G).

It will be noted that the Moorish Government have made a large claim for compensation for the expenses to which they have been put by Major Spilsbury's proceedings.

Her Majesty's Government, whilst insisting on an adherence to Treaty stipulations with regard to the surrender of the prisoners, have authorized Sir A. Nicolson to give an assurance to the Sultan that all the parties concerned in the case will undergo prosecution for any infringement of the law which can be supported by proper evidence.

A warrant has been issued by Her Majesty's Consular Court for Morocco against Major Spilsbury, charging him, under Article 107 of the Morocco Order in Council of 1889, with the offence of smuggling into the Moroquine territories. This document has been forwarded by Sir A. Nicolson to this Office in case it should be considered executable, under the provisions of "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881," on Major Spilsbury in this country.

Having regard, however, to the terms of section 9 of that enactment, it seems open to doubt whether the maximum punishment prescribed by the Morocco Order in Council for the offence which is charged in the warrant is sufficient to bring the matter within the scope of the application of Part 1 of the Act; but the Attorney-General for Gibraltar is of opinion, for the reasons given in Sir A. Nicolson's telegram No. 36 of the 15th May (Paper I), that any sentence of imprisonment pronounced by the Court in this case would carry with it some kind of labour, unless such labour were expressly excluded. A separate warrant is ready for execution under Article 108 of the same Order in case of Major Spilsbury's arrival in Morocco.

But the Moorish Government assert that, previous to his escape on board the yacht, Major Spilsbury fired over their steamer and her boats, and hoisted minatory signals, such acts constituting an intention, and amounting to an attempt, to resist by force the measures which the Moorish authorities were taking in their own waters for the prevention of illegal acts. They also lay great stress on their contention that the chief object of the expedition was to arm the tribes, and thus enable them to rebel against the sovereignty of the Sultan.

The charge which is brought by the Moorish Government against Major Spilsbury and his companions amounts to something very different from smuggling. It is practically a charge of levying war against the Sultan of Morocco. In an ordinary case, such offenders would be tried according to the law of the country against which their warlike or rebellious proceedings were directed. But as they are British subjects, and as Her Majesty has extra-territorial jurisdiction in all cases of crime committed by British subjects in Morocco, but has no power to deal with such offences otherwise than as offences against English law, the situation thus created is one of extreme difficulty.

Although at present no satisfactory means of dealing with this dilemma seems to exist, it appears to be very desirable that some efficient check for the future should be provided. At the time the Morocco Order in Council of 1889 was drafted, the possibility of a British subject levying war upon the Sovereign of the country was apparently not foreseen. While, on the one hand, it is not possible to hand over such a British subject to be dealt with by the Sultan according to Moorish law, Her Majesty's Government, on the other, apparently possess no sufficient power under the Order in Council adequately to deal with such an offence, and it is to be feared that through this technical difficulty the offenders may partially or wholly escape justice.

It is, therefore, a matter for consideration as to whether proceedings can be taken in this country against Major Spilsbury, who appears to be more responsible than those of his subordinates who have been captured in Morocco, and whose trial before the Sûs Consular Court is fixed to take place on the 14th proximo.

I am accordingly to request that you will take the Papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury at your earliest convenience with your opinion.

1. Whether any, and if so what, proceedings can be taken against Major Spilsbury in this country.

2. If the answer to the previous question should be in the affirmative, whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case and the nature and character of the evidence obtainable, such proceedings would have a sufficiently reasonable chance of success to render their institution desirable or expedient.

3. Whether the warrant issued by Her Britannic Majesty's Consular Court for Morocco, held at Tangier on the 15th March, 1898, and charging Major Spilsbury with an offence against the provisions of Article 107 of the Morocco Order in Council, is executable under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, in this country having regard to the fact that the maximum punishment prescribed by that Article consists of imprisonment with or without fine, for a term not exceeding one year, and that section 9 of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, applies the provisions of Part 1 of that Act to treason and piracy and to such other offences only as are punishable by imprisonment with hard labour for a term of twelve months or more rigorous imprisonment and any confinement in a prison combined with labour by whatever name it is called being deemed to be, for the purposes of that section, imprisonment with hard labour.

4. If, in your opinion, the warrant is executable in this country, do you consider the point sufficiently free from doubt to make it desirable to proceed at once with its execution.

5. Whether the powers at present possessed by the Queen are sufficient to enable Her Majesty adequately to deal with, and to punish under the provisions of the Morocco Order in Council, crimes and offences of a serious political complexion committed by British subjects against the Sultan and Government of Morocco.

6. And if not, whether you advise the addition of any, and if so what, provisions to the existing Order in Council for the purpose of more effectually dealing with the matter.

Lord Salisbury will at the same time be glad to receive any observations of a more general nature which you may desire to offer on the case.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, no proceedings can be taken against Major Spilsbury in this country with any reasonable prospect of success.

It does not appear that any acts were done in this country which would bring him within the scope of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

What he really intended to do was to supply arms and ammunition to the Susis to enable them to resist the authority of the Sultan in order that the Syndicate might reap the benefit of the concessions it had from these tribesmen. We do not think that the facts sufficiently show the organizing of any expedition within the meaning of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

It is not a common law offence in this country to take part abroad in resisting the authority of the Government of a foreign country.

2. We, therefore, think that no such proceedings are desirable or expedient.

3. In our opinion, the warrant issued by Her Britannic Majesty's Consular Court for Morocco, charging an offence under Article 107 of the Morocco Order in Council cannot properly be executed in this country.

An offence against Article 107 is not made punishable with hard labour, and we do not think that the Prison Regulations can, for this purpose, modify the effect of the Order in Council so as to bring the case within the "Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881," which applies to offences punishable by imprisonment with hard labour for twelve months or more.

There is nothing to show that the imprisonment is "rigorous," so as to bring it within the definition given by section 9 of the Act in question.

4. We, therefore, do not advise the execution by itself of this warrant in this country.

5. We think that the powers, at present possessed by the Queen, are not sufficient to enable Her Majesty to adequately deal with crimes and offences of a serious political complexion committed by British subjects against the Sultan of Morocco. Article 24 (2) incidentally refers to riot as a crime punishable under the Order in Council, but the Order in Council contains no reference to the very serious crime of stirring up rebellion or supplying weapons and ammunition to insurgents.

6. We think that an Article, the terms of which would require very careful consideration, should be added to the Order in Council for the purpose of dealing with offences of this description.

We think that the circumstances detailed in the despatch from the Commander of the "Hassanee," and in Major Spilsbury's own letter to the Syndicate, show that Major Spilsbury was guilty of the offence of riot and assault within the territorial waters of Morocco. He was co-operating with the insurgents on shore, who were firing on the boat's crew dispatched by the "Hassanee." According to his own admission he threatened to fire, and, according to the statement of the Captain of the "Hassanee," he did fire over the "Hassanee." This clearly amounts to participation in a riot, and the use which he made of his guns amounted to an assault by English law.

The penalty for this offence by English law might be twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour, and we could suggest that a warrant might be issued for the arrest of Major Spilsbury, by the Consular Court, for riot and assault. Major Spilsbury might be arrested on this warrant in this country. The offence committed by Major Spilsbury was of great gravity, but the fact that it had a political complexion will not relieve him from responsibility for the riot and assault, of which, on the materials before us, it would appear that he was guilty.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 13th instant, in relation to the recent seizure of arms at Bushire, ex the steam-ship "Beluchistan."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

That we approve of the telegrams in the form proposed.

It appears to us that if it be the fact that the import of arms has practically been allowed on payments to Persian officials, it would not be reasonable that the Persian Government should seize and retain such a consignment of arms.

They are, of course, at liberty to prohibit the importation for the future, but it would not be right that they should appropriate a parcel of arms, which never would have been sent but for the belief, induced by the action of their own officials, that the importation would be permitted.

IMPORTATION of arms.

In a suit brought by Fracis, Times and Company against Insurance Company to recover value of arms seized on board "Beluchistan," the Judge has given decision against Insurance Company on ground that prohibition of importation into Persia was previously merely nominal, and that merchants engaged in the trade had no reason to suppose that it was likely to be enforced. He further held that seizure of arms from "Zulu" in 1895 was merely a question of high duties on transit, not of seizure for illegal importation.

Insurance Companies now ask whether Livingstone, Muir, or Malcolm knew prior to the 7th December, 1897, that the question of enforcing the prohibition was or had been under discussion, whether there was any rumour to that effect amongst those interested in the trade and, if so, at what period the rumour first arose.

They refer to letter addressed by Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bushire to Mr. Zeytoon on the 30th November, which shows that some question of enforcing the prohibition had arisen.

The inclosure in your despatch No. 77 shows that the seizure of arms shipped on board "Zulu" was apprehended.

Request Consul-General at Bushire to telegraph information on these points, and send any evidence in his possession, including full copy of Livingstone, Muir and Company's letter of the 30th October, 1896, and any further correspondence bearing on it.

Gentlemen,

Extradition Agreement between British and Portuguese India.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying papers relating to certain negotiations which have been resumed, and are now in progress, for the conclusion of an Extradition Agreement between British India and Portuguese India, in pursuance of the Protocol attached to the Anglo-Portuguese Treaty of the 17th October, 1892.

The negotiations for this purpose—which were begun in November 1892—were broken off in October 1893 in consequence of the refusal of the Portuguese Government to admit a provision for surrendering persons charged with capital offences, and the draft Agreement now submitted to you has been carefully amended to meet the objections entertained by Portugal on this head.

The list of crimes has been modified to suit the exigencies of Indian law, and special stipulations have been inserted for dealing with the difficulties connected with the question of the non-surrender of nationals, including natives, and the question as to the responsibility for delay in the trial of offenders, to both which points it is understood that the Portuguese Government attach special importance.

I am to draw your special attention to the terms of the amended preamble; to the final paragraph of Article I relating to crimes punishable with death; to Articles II and VIII relating to the above-mentioned points; and I am to explain that the Agreement, in its present form, has been approved by the Government of British India, after consultation with their legal advisers.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether the draft Agreement may be properly submitted to the Portuguese Government, and with any general observations, from a legal point of view, which you may have to offer.

Agreement between the Governors-General of British India and Portuguese India for the Extradition of Criminals.

WHEREAS by a Protocol signed on the 30th November, 1892, attached to a Treaty, dated the 17th October, 1892, the ratifications of which were exchanged on the 13th day of November, 1893, between Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, and His Most Faithful Majesty the King of Portugal and of the Algarves; it is provided that the stipulations of the said Treaty do not apply to extradition between British and Portuguese India, which is left for ulterior negotiation.

In pursuance of the said Protocol, the undersigned Governors-General of British India and Portuguese India, acting respectively on behalf of Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, and His Most Faithful Majesty the King of Portugal and of the Algarves (hereinafter called the Parties or High Contracting Parties), have agreed that—

Any person accused or convicted of a crime or offence committed in the Indian dominions or jurisdiction of the one Party, who shall be found in the Indian dominions or jurisdiction of the other Party, and any person so found who is accused or convicted of a crime or offence committed beyond the Indian dominions of the Party applying for extradition, if such person is a subject of the Party which makes the application, and if the laws of the Party applied to would authorize a prosecution for such offence if committed beyond the Indian dominions of such last-mentioned Party, shall be delivered up under the circumstances and subject to the exceptions and conditions hereinafter stated:—

ARTICLE I.

The crimes or offences (hereinafter called extradition crimes) for which the extradition shall be granted are the following:—

Any act or omission which under the law of the party claiming extradition is punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years or more.

Extradition is also to be granted for abetment of any of the aforesaid crimes, provided such abetment be punishable by the laws of both the Contracting Parties.

Extradition may also be granted, at the discretion of the State applied to, in respect of any other crime for which, according to the laws of both the Contracting Parties for the time being in force, the grant can be made.

The Government of Portuguese India may, in its absolute discretion, refuse to deliver up any person charged with a crime punishable with death, unless, on its part, the Government of British India shall undertake that a sentence of death shall (if passed) be commuted to a sentence o transportation or imprisonment.

ARTICLE II.

The extradition of any British subject shall not be granted by either the Government of British India or the authorities mentioned in Article X, and the extradition of any Portuguese subject shall not be granted by either the Government of Portuguese India or the authorities mentioned in the same Article.

For the purposes of this Article, Indians born in British India of Portuguese Indian fathers domiciled in British India shall be regarded as British and not as Portuguese subjects; and Indians born in Portuguese India of British Indian fathers domiciled in Portuguese India shall be regarded as Portuguese and not as British subjects.

In the case of a naturalized subject, this Article shall be applicable only if the naturalization was obtained previously to the commission of the crime which gave rise to the application for extradition.

ARTICLE III.

If the person claimed is under trial for any other crime, his extradition shall be deferred until the trial is concluded, but the execution of any sentence other than sentence of death therein passed on him shall, if it would interefere with the extradition, be postponed.

If, after extradition of a person on whom sentence, other than sentence of death, has already been passed in the dominions of the Party granting extradition, such person be sentenced to punishment for the crime on account of which his extradition has been granted, the sentences shall be executed according to priority of date.

If, when extradition is applied for, the person claimed should be undergoing sentence under conviction for another crime, his extradition may be deferred till the expiration of his sentence.

ARTICLE IV.

Extradition shall not take place if the person claimed has already been tried and acquitted or punished for the crime for which extradition is sought.

ARTICLE V.

Extradition shall not take place, if subsequently to the commission of the crime or the institution of the penal prosecution or the conviction thereon, exemption from prosecution or punishment has, according to the laws of the Party applied to, been acquired by lapse of time.

ARTICLE VI.

Extradition shall not take place if the offence in respect of which the requisition is made is, in the opinion of the Government or authorities applied to, one of a political character, or if such Government or authorities are satisfied that the requisition has in fact been made with a view to try or punish the person whose surrender is claimed, for an offence of a political character.

ARTICLE VII.

The Party to whom a person has been surrendered shall not keep him in prison or bring him to trial for any crime, or on account of any matters which has or have been committed or taken place before the surrender, other than the crime or matters for which the surrender has been made, until that person has been restored to, or had an opportunity of returning to, the dominions from which the surrender was made.

ARTICLE VIII.

On the requisition of either Party, the other Party shall furnish a statement setting forth the date on which, and the result with which, the trial of any accused person surrendered has terminated. Every such statement shall describe the offence for which any sentence has been passed. Every person surrendered shall be brought to trial, and the trial shall be completed, without unreasonable delay; but this stipulation shall not entail any responsibility on either Party on account of any unavoidable delay which may occur in the course of such trial, nor shall it in any way limit the discretion of the judicial authority concerned. The Party to whom such person is surrendered shall furnish to the Party surrendering him any information regarding the trial of the accused and his sentence that may be required.

ARTICLE IX.

If the person whose extradition is claimed by one of the High Contracting Parties is also claimed by one or more other Governments on account of crimes committed in their respective dominions, he shall, if he is a subject of the High Contracting Party claiming him, be surrendered to that Party. If he is not a subject of that Party, his extradition shall be granted to the Government whose requisition shall have been earliest in date.

ARTICLE X.

The requisition for extradition may be made on behalf of Her Britannic Majesty by the Governor-General of British India or by the Governor of the Presidency of Bombay, and on behalf of His Most Faithful Majesty by the Governor-General of Portuguese India, provided:—

1. That requisition in respect of any extradition crime committed in the Portuguese Settlements of Daman and Diu may be made by the Governors of those Settlements direct to any District Magistrate or Political Agent within whose local jurisdiction the person claimed may be found. Such District Magistrate or Political Agent shall, subject to the exceptions and conditions of this Agreement, comply with such requisition by delivering up the accused, unless the crime charged is one which, by the law of British India, is triable only by a High Court or a Court of Session, or unless he deems reference to higher authority absolutely necessary.

2. That any District Magistrate may make requisition direct to the Government of Portuguese India, and any District Magistrate or Political Agent to the Governors of Daman and Diu respectively, for the extradition of any person in their jurisdictions in respect of any crime committed within the jurisdiction of such District Magistrate or Political Agent for which the maximum punishment under the Portuguese law does not exceed imprisonment for seven years or an equivalent thereto, and such requisition shall, subject to the exceptions and conditions of this Agreement, be complied with by delivering up the person claimed, unless reference to higher authority be deemed absolutely necessary.

3. That the authority receiving a requisition may hold or cause to be held such inquiry as he may deem sufficient for the purpose of ascertaining whether facts sufficient to constitute an extradition crime have been primâ facie proved against the person claimed, and in the absence of such proof may decline to deliver up that person.

ARTICLE XI.

Every requisition shall ordinarily be accompanied by the summons or warrant of arrest, or an authenticated copy thereof, issued by the competent authority of the Party applying, and also by a statement setting forth—

1. Each crime for which requisition is made.
2. The facts constituting the crime.
3. Particulars sufficient for identification of the person claimed.

In cases of urgency, satisfactory proof of the issue by competent authority of a warrant of arrest may be provisionally accepted in support of a requisition.

If the requisition relates to a person already convicted, it must also be accompanied by an authenticated copy of the conviction or of the sentence passed on him by the competent Court of the Party applying.

A sentence passed in contumaciam is not to be deemed a conviction or sentence within the meaning of this Agreement.

ARTICLE XII.

If the person claimed have not already been arrested by the authorities of the Party applied to, they shall at once proceed to arrest him or secure his appearance.

ARTICLE XIII.

Any person accused of an extradition crime, whether a subject of the Party in whose dominions he is found or not, may be arrested by the authorities thereof—

1. On production of a warrant of arrest issued by the competent authority of the other Party; or

2. On advice from such competent authority transmitted by post, telegraph, or other means, stating the existence of such warrant of arrest; or

3. On demand by the Magistrate or Political Agent or Police Officer of such other Party who has pursued the accused across the frontier; or

4. On receipt of advice of the fact of the crime, whether communicated by a private complainant or otherwise, and whether or not the person may have been directly accused by name.

ARTICLE XIV.

All weapons and articles stolen or otherwise obtained by the commission of an extradition crime, or the proceeds of the sale thereof, and all weapons and articles required as evidence of an extradition crime shall be seized, in order to their production before the proper officer, and shall be delivered up with the accused person if surrendered, or on his death or escape. Nothing in this Article shall affect the rights of third persons to any such weapons or articles.

ARTICLE XV.

The Party granting extradition will defray all expenses incurred within the dominions (and as far as the frontier) of such Party, in the arrest, imprisonment, maintenance, and transport of persons surrendered, and the conveyance and custody of articles delivered up. The Party to whom surrender and delivery are made will make due provision for the reception and maintenance of all persons surrendered, and will defray all expenses incurred in the transport and maintenance, whether by sea or within its own dominions, of the persons surrendered, and in the conveyance and custody of articles delivered up.

ARTICLE XVI.

If in any inquiry or trial within the dominions or jurisdiction of one Party the evidence of witnesses resident within the dominions or jurisdiction of the other Party is required, and their personal attendance at such inquiry or trial cannot be procured without unreasonable delay, expense, or inconvenience, the judicial authority requiring the evidence may issue an interrogatory commission direct to any judicial authority having jurisdiction where the witnesses reside or are known to be.

The authority receiving the commission shall forthwith arrange for the examination of the witnesses, and for the record of their evidence in accordance with the local law of procedure, either by himself or by some judicial subordinate appointed by him; and the record or copies thereof, purported to be certified by the authority or by the appointed subordinate, shall be, without unreasonable delay, transmitted direct to the authority who issued the commission, and shall be received in the inquiry or trial as valid evidence.

The actual expenses incurred in complying with any commission so issued shall be defrayed by the Party from whose dominions or jurisdiction it was issued.

The authorities of the one Party shall aid those of the other as far as may be in securing the personal attendance of witnesses; and reasonable time shall be allowed for the production of evidence before the final discharge or conviction of an accused.

ARTICLE XVII.

Before extradition, the law of the dominions or jurisdiction where the accused is found shall govern the procedure as to releasing him on bail or recognizances; after extradition, such procedure shall be governed by the law of the Party to which surrender is made.

ARTICLE XVIII.

An accused person, notice of whose arrest has been given by one Party to the other, may be set at liberty in the following circumstances:—

1. If no requisition, complaint, or application for trial shall have been made within two months after receipt of such notice.
2. If within one month of the day on which he was brought to the frontier or sea-port and there placed at the disposal of the Party which makes the application for extradition, he shall not have been received by the authorities, and dispatched to the dominions of that Party.

ARTICLE XIX.

The Government of British India undertakes to procure the surrender of fugitive criminals taking refuge in the territories of the States in India under the suzerainty of Her Majesty, who if they had taken refuge in British India would have been extraditable under this Agreement; and the authorities of Portuguese India on their part undertake to surrender fugitive criminals from such native States taking refuge in Portuguese India, on receipt of requisitions from the Government of India or from the Government of Bombay, if in the case of British subjects such requisitions could be made and complied with under the terms of this Agreement.

ARTICLE XX.

The present Agreement shall come into operation ten days after its publication in accordance with the forms prescribed by the Laws of the High Contracting Parties, and it shall remain in force until the expiration of six months from the day on which either of the High Contracting Parties may give notice of its intention to terminate it.

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, January 31, 1898.

Gentlemen,

Revision of Siam O. in C. 1889.

REFERRING to your letter of the 6th August, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the inclosed Papers relating to the proposed revision of "The Siam Order in Council, 1889."

The alterations on which your opinion was asked were duly inserted in the draft prepared by Mr. Gray, but, as will be seen from the further reference made to him (Paper F), it was subsequently suggested by Her Majesty's Minister at Bangkok that provisions should be added to enable the Consul to take, subject to certain conditions and limitations which are expressed in the Order, the whole of the judicial work. Mr. Gray has, accordingly, revised the draft Order at Lord Salisbury's request, and I am to ask whether, in your opinion, the draft as it now stands (Paper H) may properly be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

I have, &c.

As altered and initialled by us, the draft Order in Council may properly be submitted for the approval of the Queen in Council.

The object of the alteration is to make it clear that the Consul-General's power is to say what cases shall be so tried; not to control the Consul in the exercise of his judicial duties.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has power and jurisdiction within the dominions and territories of the King of Siam:

And whereas by a Treaty made the 3rd day of September, 1883, between Her Majesty the Queen and His Majesty the King of Siam, it was amongst other things agreed as follows:—

"Article VIII. His Majesty the King of Siam will appoint a proper person or proper persons to be a Commissioner and Judge, or Commissioners and Judges, in Chiengmai for the purposes hereinafter mentioned. Such Judge or Judges shall, subject to the limitations and provisions contained in the present Treaty, exercise civil and criminal jurisdiction in all cases arising in Chiengmai, Lakon, and Lampoonchi, between British subjects, or in which British subjects may be parties as complainants, accused, plaintiffs or defendants according to Siamese law: provided always that in all such cases the Consul or Vice-Consul shall be entitled to be present at the trial, and to be furnished with copies of the proceedings, which, when the defendant or accused is a British subject, shall be supplied free of charge, and to make any suggestions to the Judge or Judges which he may think proper in the interests of justice: provided also that the Consul or Vice-Consul shall have power at any time before judgment, if he shall think proper in the interests of justice, by a written requisition under his hand, directed to the Judge or Judges, to signify his desire that any case in which both parties are British subjects, or in which the accused or defendant is a British subject, be transferred for adjudication to the British Consular Court at Chiengmai, and the case shall thereupon be transferred to such last-mentioned Court accordingly, and be disposed of by the Consul or Vice-Consul, as provided by Article II of the Supplementary Agreement of the 13th May, 1856:"

And whereas in pursuance of the said Treaty His Majesty the King of Siam has from time to time appointed Commissioners or Judges for the purposes mentioned in the said Article, and civil and criminal jurisdiction has been and is exercised in Chiengmai subject to the limitations and provisions contained in the said Treaty:

And whereas, in pursuance of powers reserved in the said Treaty, it has been from time to time agreed between Her Majesty and His Majesty the King of Siam that the limits within which the jurisdiction of the said Commissioners and Judges under, and for the purposes of, the said Treaty shall be extended to the Provinces of Muang Nan, Phre, Muang Thon, Raheng, Sawankaloke, Sukotai, Utaradit, and Pichai:

And whereas such limits of jurisdiction may hereafter be further extended:

And whereas in order to the fulfilment of the said Treaty, and for other purposes, it is expedient to amend "The Siam Order in Council, 1889," hereinafter referred to as "the Principal Order:"

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue, and in exercise of, the powers in this behalf, by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," and otherwise in her vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of the Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as "The Siam Order in Council, 1898."

2. In this Order the expression "the International Court" means the Court of any Commissioners or Judges exercising jurisdiction at Chiengmai in pursuance and under the provisions of the said recited Treaty as modified by any subsequent Agreement, whether made before or after the passing of this Order.

The expression "limits of the International Court" means the provinces and parts of provinces to which the jurisdiction of that Court for the time being extends.

3. With respect to any civil or criminal case arising within the limits of the International Court between British subjects, or in which British subjects may be parties as complainants, accused, plaintiffs or defendants, the principal Order shall not operate or have any effect so long as the said Treaty continues in force, unless and until such case shall have been transferred to the District Court at Chiengmai in manner provided by the said Treaty.

4. Where a case is so transferred, the District Court shall give such directions as seem proper for its determination, having regard to the proceedings (if any) in the International Court.

In a criminal case, if the accused is handed over by the International Court in custody, he may be detained in custody as if on the day on which he is handed over he had been arrested under a warrant of the District Court.

5. The Consul at Bangkok shall, if and so long as he shall be so authorized by the Secretary of State, have and exercise concurrently with the Consul-General all the judicial powers and jurisdiction of the Consul-General under the principal Order throughout Siam; and the provisions of that Order relating to such judicial powers and jurisdiction shall be construed accordingly; provided that

(1) The said powers and jurisdiction shall be exercised by the said Consul subject to any directions which may from time to time be given by the Consul-General specifying the cases which are to be heard and decided by the Consul, and to the power of the Consul-General to direct that any particular case shall be heard and decided by himself.

(2) Nothing in this Article shall operate to confer upon the said Consul any powers or duties of the Consul-General under the principal Order which are in their nature administrative, executive, ministerial, or otherwise not judicial, and all matters required or authorized to be done, by or to the Consul-General other than matters in their nature judicial, shall be done by or to the Consul-General as if this Order had not passed; and

(3) Nothing in this Article shall affect the powers or jurisdiction of the said Consul as a Consular Officer when holding a District Court under the principal Order.

Any Order of the Secretary of State conferring authority upon the said Consul under this Article shall be publicly exhibited in the office of the Consul-General, and be kept exhibited there for one month after the first exhibition thereof.

6. Articles 95 and 96 of the principal Order are hereby repealed as from the commencement of this Order, but this repeal should not prejudice any rights acquired, or affect anything done or suffered before such commencement.

7. This order shall come into force on the day on which a copy thereof is first exhibited in the public office of the Consul-General at Bangkok, and notice of the time of such first exhibition, together with a copy of this Order, shall, as soon thereafter as practicable, be published in every Consular district in Siam, in such manner as the Consul-General directs.

The day on which this Order is first exhibited in the public office of the Consul-General is hereinbefore referred to as the commencement of this Order.

SPAIN.

No. 31.

[April 20, 1898.]

Questions submitted to the Law Officers of the Crown on the 18th April, 1898.

Spanish-American War. Observation of Declaration of Paris by belligerents.

1. WHETHER Spain or the United States were directly or indirectly bound to observe the principles laid down in the Declaration of Paris?

2. Whether the previous practice of either of these two countries has been such as to afford the presumption that it would on this occasion observe any or all of those principles?

3. Whether, in case of either country acting in contravention of any of those principles, Her Majesty's Government would have the right of protesting, or of restricting the facilities to be accorded to that belligerent, and if so, in what cases, and to what extent?

Report.

1. In our opinion neither Spain nor the United States are directly or indirectly bound to this country to observe the principles laid down in the Declaration of Paris.

2. As regards Spain, we are not aware that there can be said to be any previous practice upon which any presumption can be based, and, as far as we know, the only Treaties affecting their rights are those with the United States in 1795 and 1819, but there may be others (Treaties, Conventions, United States, 776–785).

As regards the United States, it appears that they have made Treaties with Prussia, Spain, Peru, Russia, Columbia, Central America, Brazil, Mexico, Chile, Bolivia, Venezuela, France, Netherlands, Sweden, and Italy, by which they have agreed to secure the freedom of enemies goods (other than contraband of war) in the neutral ships of the several Contracting Nations (Wheaton Dana's 8th edition, section 476; "State Papers," vol. lxi, p. 88, 26th February, 1876, Article XIII).

The Declaration made on behalf of the United States in the year 1861, adopted the same principle with reference to the then existing civil war.

Inasmuch as the Treaties are matters of contract, we do not think that it can be said that they establish a practice, but they will impose a practical difficulty in the way of any action by the United States contrary to their provisions, and, coupled with the Declaration of 1861, they will undoubtedly be of use in the event of it being considered necessary or desirable to make any representation to the United States.

3. We think that Great Britain might alone, or in conjunction with other Maritime Powers, make representations to the United States and Spain against any interference with neutral commerce (other than contraband of war) and against privateering so far as it affects such commerce.

Whether such representation should be made by Great Britain alone, or in conjunction with other nations, and whether in anticipation of, or consequent upon, any action Spain or the United States may take is a question of policy.

We do not think the facilities given to national ships of the belligerents can properly be restricted beyond the extent to which they have been on previous occasions; but should privateering be permitted by either nation, and our commerce attacked, we see no reason why all access by privateers to our ports should not be prohibited except possibly in cases of distress.

Foreign Office, April 30, 1898.

Gentlemen,

Use in time of war of neutral telegraph cables by belligerents.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith a copy of a telegram from the Governor of Barbados to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, inquiring, in connection with the present hostilities between Spain and the United States of America, whether any control should be exercised over telegrams sent, either from a man-of-war of one of the belligerents in a British port, or from the Consular Representative of such belligerent.

I am also to inclose a Memorandum, which has been prepared in this Office, together with copies of previous Reports from the Law Officers of the Crown, and the "Case" submitted to them and Mr. C. T. Simpson by the Postmaster-General in 1882, which bear upon this question, and I am to request that you will be so good as to take these papers into your early consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion generally as to the rights of use, in time of war, of neutral telegraph cables by belligerents or their agents, and as to the extent of the control and interference, if any, which a neutral Government should exercise over the dispatch of messages.

And the "Case" submitted to the Law Officers and Mr. C. T. Simpson in 1882 by the Post Office.

Report.

There is little or no authority on the subject of the obligations of a neutral Power with regard to the use of telegraphic lines or cables by belligerents.

It appears to us that such use should be treated on the analogy of the principles applied to the carriage of the despatches of a belligerent. Such despatches are contraband of war, and may be seized by the other belligerent with the further consequence of, in some cases, the forfeiture of the vessel if the despatches were knowingly carried. But there is no obligation on the neutral State to prevent the carriage by its subjects of such despatches; like other contraband of war, they may be carried subject to the risk of capture.

1. We think that there is, therefore, no general obligation by international law on the part of a neutral Government to prevent the transmission by its subjects, or from its territories, of the messages of belligerents by telegraphic lines or cables. Such messages may be carried subject to the risk that the other belligerent may protect himself by cutting the cable on the high seas, or in the enemy's territorial waters.

Upon the whole we think, though the question is one of more difficulty, that for this purpose no distinction should be drawn between cables purely private and cables under the control of a Government Department.

The general rule is, of course, that a neutral Government should not carry contraband of war for one of the belligerents. But where cables or telegraph lines are under the control of a Government Department, which, as a matter of regular business, transmits messages for every one, we cannot think that it is its duty, by international law, to establish a censorship so as to prevent the transmission of belligerents' messages. In practice this would be difficult, or impossible, and we think that the principle on which a neutral Government stepping out of its way to convey contraband of war is held to be guilty of a breach of neutrality has no application to a case in which it merely continues to transmit for all comers, in the ordinary way of business, either letters or telegraphic messages.

Of late years, it has not been the practice for a belligerent to seize or examine mail bags transmitted in the ordinary course of post.

2. We think, however, that, in the case of a belligerent cruiser putting into one of the ports of a neutral Power, there is an exception to the general rule above suggested. It is a term of her admission that she shall not use the neutral port in furtherance of hostile operations. We, therefore, think that the neutral Government should prevent, so far as practicable and authorized by municipal law, the use even of a telegraph worked by a Commercial Company for the transmission from a neutral port, by or on behalf of such a cruiser, of messages in cypher, or of other messages, the object of which is to direct or influence warlike operations.

But we do not think that a neutral Government is bound, even in this case, to object to the transmission of messages which have no relation to the proceedings of the belligerents, or of messages not in cypher, the object of which is to give a narrative of past operations, bonâ fide intended for general publication as news.

The Commander of the cruiser should be informed that it is a condition of being permitted to use the port that he should abstain from transmitting or procuring the transmission of any telegrams relating to the conduct of warlike operations. The Company should also be informed of the views of the Government, and would probably itself establish a censorship in accordance with those views of the telegrams tendered for transmission.

There is, however, no general power on the part of Her Majesty's Government to control private Telegraph Companies; the power is to require belligerent vessels not to use them.

The case of a Consul requires special consideration. Primâ facie he is entitled to the privilege of free communication with his Government, and this could be interfered with only if it were clear that he was abusing this privilege for the purpose of sending messages from a cruiser of his Government which had put into the neutral port. He could not properly be required to send his messages en clair, and if he abused the privilege of sending messages in cypher, to send warlike messages from one of his Government's cruisers in the neutral port, the responsibility for this would rest with him and his Government.

3. The telegram from the United States' Consul at Barbados ought not to have been stopped; Mr. Chamberlain's telegram to Governor Sir J. S. Hay of the 27th April was in answer to Sir J. S. Hay's telegram of the 25th April, and related only to the case put in Sir J. S. Hay's telegram where the Consul was Consul of the Power whose cruiser had put in to the neutral port.

4. In the case put in Lord Tweeddale's letter of the 5th May, we think that the Eastern Company may transmit messages forwarded by the United States' forces from Manila subject to the risk of having their cable cut by the Spaniards, and to the question (which is one on which Her Majesty's Government cannot advise them), whether they are under any contractual obligation to the Spanish Government which forbids such transmission.

We think that if either belligerent sends a despatch-boat to Hong Kong with despatches for telegraphic transmission, Her Majesty's Government should not interfere with their transmission by the Telegraph Company, but of course cannot guarantee the Company against acts of the other belligerent in consequence of such transmission. We do not advise that, except under special circumstances, Her Majesty's Government should impose on a despatch-boat, sent under such circumstances as are mentioned in Lord Tweeddale's letter, the same conditions as to not using the cable which would be properly imposed on a cruiser putting into one of Her Majesty's ports.

5. The whole subject is novel, and cases of great difficulty may arise as to the application of principles to particular cases. No inflexible rule can be laid down, and a good deal of latitude must in practice be left to the Governor or other local authority in dealing with each particular case as it arises.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Mr. Chamberlain.

Royal Courts of Justice, June 10, 1898.

Sir,

Temporary censorship of telegrams by Governor of Barbados.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. H. Bertram Cox's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that, with reference to recent conferences between ourselves and Mr. Cox upon the subject of the censorship of telegrams temporarily put in force by the Governor of Barbados, he was directed by you to transmit to us copies of three despatches (with inclosures) which had been received from Sir James Hay, containing full details of what occurred on the occasion in question.*

That it appeared that the action of the Governor was based on a telegram from the Colonial Office, sent on the 27th April last, in reply to a telegram from him on the 25th April, asking whether a belligerent man-of-war in the port of Bridgetown, or a Consul, could send a telegram without any control. That the reply to that inquiry—which was drafted on our verbal instructions—was to the following effect:—

"Telegraph should be controlled so as to prevent despatches from belligerent man-of-war. Consul is entitled to use telegraph, and can be interfered with only if there be case of abuse for purposes of war."

That a belligerent man-of-war named the "Alphonso XIII" soon afterwards arrived at Bridgetown—a Spanish vessel carrying 10 guns and 547 soldiers. That she entered the port at 5·45 A.M. on the 2nd May, and left again at 3 P.M., taking neither coals nor provisions of any description.

That the Governor, to whom the Secretary of State's instructions had been communicated, as soon as he was apprised of her arrival, decided, upon the advice of the Attorney-General, to put in force a portion of section 15 of the West India and Panamá Telegraph Company's Act (No. 27 of 1890), in order to effectually supervise the dispatch and delivery of any telegrams which might tend to a breach of neutrality. That an order was accordingly issued to the clerk in charge of the telegraph office providing for such supervision. That the censorship was imposed at 9.30 A.M. on the 2nd May, and withdrawn at 3 P.M. on the 3rd, twenty-four hours after the "Alphonso XIII" had left the port.

That during that period the only telegram actually handed in and stopped was a message in cypher from the United States' Consul to the State Department at Washington. That that telegram was stopped by the officer placed in charge of the telegraph office, and was handed to the Governor, who thereupon caused a communication to be addressed to the Consul, expressing his regret that he was unable to forward the telegram. That the Governor, who had observed that the word "Alphonso" occurred in it "in clear," was at a subsequent interview (the events of which were very fully detailed in his despatch No. 79 of the 5th May) apprised by the Consul of the purport of the message, which was stated by the United States' Consul to be to the following effect: "Spanish troopship 'Alphonso XIII' here with troops." That the result of the interview was that the telegram in question was not sent, but that later in the day the Governor gave permission to the Consul to send an open telegram to the State Department at Washington as follows: "Governor, under instructions from Home Government, controls cable office: will not permit messages sent Department relative to movements, American or Spanish."

That in the course of the same day the Colonial Secretary was informed by the Spanish Consul that he was desirous of dispatching two telegrams, one to the Minister at Madrid, and one to the friends of the Commander of the "Alphonso XIII." That the Consul volunteered to show those telegrams in rough, and in the Spanish language, to the Colonial Secretary, who informed him that if handed in they would be submitted to the Governor, and that it would depend on his decision whether they would be allowed to be forwarded or not. That subsequently, however, the Consul informed the Colonial Secretary by telephone that he did not desire to send any telegram.

That the telegram which was prohibited at Barbados was sent by post to Saint Vincent, and was thence forwarded by telegraph to the State Department, the Governor of the Windward Islands having not asked for, or received, any instructions similar to those given to the Governor at Barbados. That the Administrator at Saint Vincent asked the Governor of the Windward Islands whether he should exercise control of telegraphic correspondence with reference to movements of belligerent ships, as they were prohibited at Barbados, but that the Governor replied that he should not do so without special instructions. That he had since more fully explained his action in a despatch.*

That as it seemed highly desirable that some general directions should be given to Colonial Governors to avoid such inconsistencies in procedure as this incident revealed, our further and fuller opinion was requested in a letter from the Under-Secretary of the Foreign Office, and that upon our report then made a Circular despatch was drafted, and after having been settled by us in conference with Mr. Bertram Cox was sent out to all Colonies on the 17th ultimo.†

That Mr. Bertram Cox was directed to request us to take the papers into our consideration, and to favour you with our opinion upon the following points:—

1. Whether the Governor was right in issuing an order under the provisions of the Barbados Act, No. 27, of 1890?

2. Assuming that the Act did not authorize him to issue the order, had he any other power to prevent the sending of telegrams, and, if so, under what law or authority?

3. Whether the Governor acted rightly in declining to allow the telegram of the United States' Consul to be sent?

4. Whether the telegrams of the Spanish Consul, if tendered, should have been refused transmission?

5. What were the means by which the observance of the instructions relating to neutrality in respect of telegrams was to be enforced, if violated by—

   (b.) A Consular officer;
   (c.) A private individual;
   (d.) Generally.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That we think that the Governor ought not to have issued an order under the Barbados Act, No. 27, of 1890. The power conferred by that section should be used only when, in the opinion of the Governor, an emergency has arisen in which it is expedient for the public service that the Government should have control. Such an emergency would arise if circumstances had occurred demanding the paramount use of the cable for Government despatches under direct Government supervision, or if there was reason to believe that the cable might be used for the dispatch of messages prejudicial to Her Majesty's Government or Dominions.

We are far from saying that an emergency such as is contemplated by the section might not arise by reason of the apprehended use of the cable by a belligerent for warlike purposes. Cases may be supposed in which such use might be prejudicial to this country as tending to embroil it with a friendly Power, so that it would be expedient for the public service that control should be assumed. But we think it clear that in the present case no such emergency had arisen. The power is one to be used only in special and exceptional cases, and not to be brought into play merely because a belligerent cruiser has stopped at the port.

2. The Governor had no other power to control the cable.

He had power to make it a term of the admission of the Spanish vessel that the cable should not be used for warlike purposes, and could enforce the performance of this condition by preventing, if necessary, access to the telegraph office by the Captain or his subordinates.

3. We think that the telegram of the United States' Consul ought to have been transmitted. It is only in a clear case of abuse of his privilege by the Consul of the nation—one of whose cruisers is enjoying the hospitality of a British port—that interference might be justifiable on the ground that he was making himself the agent of the Captain for the transmission of warlike messages.

4. Whether the telegrams of the Spanish Consuls should have been transmitted we cannot say definitely without knowing their contents. Under ordinary circumstances, a message to the Captain's family would be unobjectionable.

In answering the third and fourth of the above questions we have, of course, treated the Governor as in control of the cable. Apart from such control there would be no power to prevent the Consul from sending messages.

5. (a.) We have already answered this question. (See answer 2 above.)

(b.) His exequatur may be revoked, and complaint made be made to his Government.

(c.) There is great difficulty in dealing with the case of private individuals unless it appears that, being British subjects, they contravene the Foreign Enlistment Act by taking service for this purpose with a foreign belligerent Power. If the individual in question is a subject of the belligerent Power, his withdrawal from British territory may be demanded.

(d.) We have nothing to add except that it is difficult or impossible, even if control were assumed of the telegraphs, to insure that messages relating to warlike operations shall not be transmitted; and that in our opinion the duties of neutrality do not involve any obligations beyond those indicated in our Report of the 7th May, 1898.

Spanish-American war. Alleged breaches of International Law by United States.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list relating to complaints made by the Spanish Government of alleged breaches of international law on the part of the naval forces of the United States in the conduct of hostile operations against Spain.

The acts, or alleged acts, of the United States' forces which form the basis of the charges preferred against the United States' Government by that of Spain are set forth in a Circular issued by them to the neutral Powers, and communicated to Lord Salisbury on the 9th instant, and are comprised under three heads:—

1. Bombardment of towns without previous notice.
2. Improper use of the Spanish colours.
3. Interruption of the working of submarine telegraph cables.

As regards the first charge, it seems doubtful whether the United States' naval forces have, as a matter of fact, bombarded any towns, though it would appear that in the course of firing upon the fortifications of San Juan de Porto Rico, and possibly in other instances, shot or shell may have fallen into some undefended quarter.

As regards the second complaint, there does not seem to be any evidence that the United States' Naval Commanders or men have exceeded the well known and clearly defined limits within which the use of false colours at sea is, by general consent and long-established custom, permissible.

The third charge, that of interrupting or cutting submarine telegraph cables, relates to a question which, in view of the comparatively recent introduction of this form of communication, has not yet been very precisely determined.

I am accordingly to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether any reply should be made to the Spanish Circular, and, if so, in what terms the answer should be framed.

Lord Salisbury will at the same time be glad to receive any general observations which you may desire to offer on the questions raised in the Circular.

Annex 1.

Minutes.

I think it is quite clear that a belligerent is entitled to cut cables if this operation be required in order to prevent such cables being used as channels of communication with his enemy's forces.

He is not, of course, entitled to go into neutral waters and there to cut a cable, because that is a violation of neutral territorial waters; but he may do so in his own waters, in his enemy's waters, or on the high seas.

Although he is clearly entitled to take this course as a matter of right, the expedient is one which he may reasonably be expected sparingly to use, and not to resort to except in cases of some real necessity.

If he does so wantonly, and without sufficient necessity, a protest might be made, and I think that innocent neutral owners of the injured cable would have an equitable ground for compensation, and that a Government which was satisfied that such neutral owners had taken reasonable precautions to prevent the misuse of their cable, and were in point of fact quite innocent in regard to such misuse by the other belligerent or his agents, would pay compensation to the neutral owners, as an act of grace, though without admitting that such compensation was paid ex debito justitiæ.

Whether the cutting of the cable was a necessary act can only be determined in each case by the special circumstances; but primâ facie the belligerent may be assumed to be the best judge as to the necessity, and it may also, I think, be assumed that a civilized belligerent will only avail himself of his right with reluctance, and because he is convinced that the circumstances require it as the sole means of protecting himself against a serious mischief.

Annex 2.

Memorandum by Mr. Oakes.

The question of the use of false colours during war is discussed by Halleck and by other writers on international law.

At p. 569 of vol i, Halleck says:—

"We will now inquire how far stratagems are allowable at sea, and how far a vessel may act under false colours. 'To sail and chase under false colours,' says Sir William Scott, 'may be an allowable stratagem in war, but firing under false colours is what the maritime law of England does not permit; for it may be attended with very unjust consequences: it may occasion the loss of the lives of persons who, if they were apprised of the real character of the cruiser, might, instead of resisting, implore protection.' It will be noticed that the prohibition to fire under false colours is here put upon the ground of local law, no reference being made to any general rule of international jurisprudence. The subject of employing false colours was much discussed during the 'Alabama' controversy with the United States, that Government frequently pressing the point on the British Government, especially in reference to the 'Oreto' and the 'Alabama.' 'It is a rule of the law of nations,' says Pistoye and Duverdy, 'that on the sea a vessel cannot attack another vessel before having made known its nationality, and having put the vessel which it encounters in a position of declaring its own nationality.'

"The ancient rule of maritime law, as stated by Valin, was that the affirming gun ('coup de semonce, ou d'assurance') could be fired only under the national flag. Such were the provisions of the ancient Ordinances of France. But Article 33 of the Arrêté du 2 Prairial merely prohibited the firing a shot ('tirer à boulet') under a false flag, and and the Law of the 10th April, 1825, Article 3, provided that captains and officers who commit acts of hostility under a flag other than that of the State by which they are commissioned, shall be treated as pirates. Ortolan says that the affirming gun may be fired under false colours, but all acts of hostility must be under the national flag. Massé and Hautefeuille seem to adopt the opinion that the affirming gun ('coup de semonce') should be fired only under national colours. But as such gun is in no respect an act of hostility, we can perceive no good reason why it may not be fired under false colours."

The Case and Counter-Case of the United States, to which Halleck refers in a note, have been examined in connection with this question, but they do not seem to contain anything useful for the present purpose. It is stated, for instance, in the Case, that the "Florida" (or "Oreto") when at Nassau carried confederate flags on board, and that the British Colonial Judge, in deciding the case of that vessel, attached little importance to the circumstance. The Counter-Case shows that the "Florida" resembled in outward appearance a British man-of-war, and in that assumed character, with the British flag flying, she passed the blockading squadron off Mobile, and her real character was not suspected until too late to stop her.

The general view as expressed by Hall and others seems to be that although a vessel is justified in war in hoisting flalse colours for the purpose of escaping or of drawing an enemy into action, &c,, she must hoist her own flag before firing with shot or shell, or committing an act of hostility. (See Hall, pp. 558, 559; Halleck, by Sir S. Baker, vol. i, p. 570, &c.).

If the cutting of a cable is to be regarded as an act of hostility, the United States' ships of war referred to in the telegram from the Spanish Government would, of course, have transgressed the laws of war if they had cut one when under Spanish colours. But they do not appear to have done so, but only to have entered the Bay with the assumed or apparent purpose of cutting the cable, a purpose which, if it existed, they did not carry out.

Under these circumstances they do not seem to have actually committed any breach of the laws of war.

Annex 3.

Memorandum by Mr. Oakes.

Although it does not appear to be incumbent upon a belligerent to give notice before bombarding an armed port of an enemy, it is, nevertheless, more usual, whenever military exigencies permit, to give some such notice.

Calvo, in dealing with the question of bombardments (4th edition, vol. iv, section 2,076), says:—

"Il est un autre usage auquel les Allemands ont dérogé en plus d'une occasion. D'ordinaire le Commandant des assiégeants, toutes les fois qu'il le peut, informe les assiégés de son intention de bombarder la place; c'est une mesure dictée par l'humanité et qui a pour but de mettre les non-combattants, surtout les femmes et les enfants, à même de s'éloigner ou de pourvoir à leur sûreté."

Calvo then proceeds to quote the views of the United States on the subject:—

"§ 2,077. Voici ce que dit à ce sujet l'Instruction pour les Armées en Campagne des Etats-Unis d'Amérique: 'Le Commandant des Assiégeants, toutes les fois qu'il le pourra, indiquera aux assiégés son intention de bombarder la forteresse, afin que les citoyens paisibles, et en particulier les femmes et les enfants, puissent chercher un refuge avant le commencement du bombardement. Cependant il ne faut pas croire que ce soit une violation des lois de la guerre que d'omettre cette formalité. La surprise peut être requise par la nécessité.'"

Article 16 of the proposals of the Brussels Conference of 1874 on the laws of war is thus quoted by Calvo in section 2,078:—

"Si une ville ou place de guerre, agglomération d'habitations ou village, est défendu, le Commandant des troupes assaillants, avant d'entreprendre le bombardement et sauf l'attaque de vive force, devra faire tout ce qui dépend de lui pour en avertir les autorités."

Bluntschli says that notice should be given whenever military operations permit, adding that "c'est seulement dans les cas les plus urgents qu'une attaque subite, combinée avec un bombardement immédiat, peut paraître autorisé à titre de nécessité militaire."

Geffeken, on the other hand, deems that previous notice, though desirable for reasons of humanity, is not essential, inasmuch as the inhabitants of an invested place know what to expect.

Calvo gives the following precedents where notice has been given:—

Antwerp in 1832, Rome in 1849, and Sebastopol in 1855. In the contrary case he mentions Paris (? 1870) and the French town of La Fère (November 1870).

It is stated in Haydn's "Dictionary of Dates" that M. Favre asked Count Bismarck to give notice before bombarding Paris, but that the Count refused the request.

In 1883, when the proceedings of the French Admiral off Madagascar formed the subject of correspondence with this office, the Law Officers, on the 28th August, reported in connection therewith as follows:—

"The bombardment of Fenoarivo without affording any notice to Commander Johnstone (the Senior British Naval Officer) or the inhabitants of the town, appears to deserve grave consideration. No doubt, in one sense, the Commander of a hostile force has the right to regulate the manner in which he will conduct his hostilities, and to call upon him at all times to give notice of his intended operations would be absurd. But when an unarmed town is about to be bombarded, we conceive that humanity has created a practice which ought not to be deviated from to the effect that those residents who are non-belligerents should have an opportunity afforded to them of removing themselves and their property out of the danger created by the warlike operations in which they take no share."

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, August 11, 1898.

Sir,

Limits of British territorial waters in Gibraltar Bay.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Wingfield's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by you to transmit, for our consideration and report, a despatch from the Governor of Gibraltar, requesting instructions as to the limits of British territorial waters in the Bay of Gibraltar, in view of the contingency during the present state of war between the United States and Spain of possible attempts at capture, or other belligerent action, within the waters of the bay, or attempts to violate Her Majesty's Proclamation of Neutrality.

That, on receipt of this despatch, you had caused it to be referred to the Foreign Office, War Office, and Admiralty, pointing out that, as belligerent action anywhere within the bay would involve serious risk to the numerous vessels and coal-hulks in the harbour, you considered that the Governor should treat as British waters, for the purpose of preventing any such action, the full 3 miles around the rock.

That the replies of these Departments were inclosed with Mr. Wingfield's letter, and that on the 24th May the Governor was instructed by telegraph in the sense of the letter from the Admiralty of the 19th May.

That the correspondence of 1879–83, to which reference was made, would be found in the Parliamentary Paper, a copy of which was inclosed, and that Mr. Wingfield was also to inclose a copy of a Foreign Office Memorandum summarizing the voluminous correspondence which had passed with the Spanish Government on the subject of the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of the bay.

That the British Government had always maintained that they were entitled to jurisdiction over an extent of waters extending 3 miles around the rock on every side, and Mr. Wingfield was to call our attention to the despatches of Mr. Canning and Viscount Palmerston, Nos. 3 and 10, in the inclosed Confidential print, in which that view was maintained, and he was also to refer us to a Memorandum by the late Attorney-General of Gibraltar (Inclosure 2 in No. 14 in the Confidential print), and to the Report of our predecessors, No. 15, in the same print.

That it would be seen from the correspondence in the Parliamentary Paper that the effort of Her Majesty's Government to obtain a conventional line of demarcation of jurisdiction in the bay had failed because the Spanish Government refused to acquiesce in any line which conceded to Great Britain jurisdiction over waters which washed Spanish territory, and Her Majesty's Government was, therefore, not bound by the line which they were then prepared to accept.

That Mr. Wingfield was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and advise you whether the instructions sent to the Governor of Gibraltar, based on the Admiralty letter of the 19th May, were proper and sufficient.

In obedience to your commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That we think there is some inconsistency between the first and second paragraphs of the Admiralty despatch of the 19th May, 1898.

We think that a reasonable solution of the difficulties as regards the extent of territorial jurisdiction in the bay is to be found in the medium filum indicated on the plan.

But we cannot see how it can, at the same time, be asserted that the territorial waters of the fortress extend beyond this line for the purpose of preventing any danger to the fortress or shipping. The two propositions are not consistent.

It may well be that there is a right on the part of the Governor of Gibraltar to prevent any action even outside the territorial waters which necessarily constitutes a danger to the fortress or to the shipping in the port, but this must rest not on the doctrine of territorial jurisdiction, but on the right of the neutral to prevent warlike operations, which necessarily involve direct injury to himself.

The questions relating to the safety of the fortress of Gibraltar and the shipping in port are so important and delicate that we think no attempt should at present be made to define exactly the limits within which the Governor may act.

We think it quite right that the Governor should be instructed to enforce the Proclamation of Neutrality only within the line marked in the bay, and up to the 3-mile limit elsewhere, but no admission should be made which might hamper the right of the Governor to take action in any part of the bay which may be essential for preventing injury to the fortress or shipping.

We have, &c.

Foreign Office, December 9, 1898.

Gentlemen,

Attack by Spanish mob on "Lady of Clennell" at Malaga.

I AM directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit to you the papers noted in the inclosed list with reference to an attack made by a Spanish mob at Malaga on the British steam-yacht "Lady of Clennell" while she was lying alongside the quay in the harbour of that port.

According to the account given by the master of the yacht (Paper F), and corroborated by her owner, Mr. Wilkinson, the "Lady of Clennell" left Almeria on the 3rd May last, after hoisting her flags, and on the same day arrived off Malaga, where at 5·45 P.M. she took on board a Spanish pilot, who took charge of the yacht and conducted the mooring operations at West Transverse Mole.

In about an hour the Sanitary doctor boarded the yacht and granted pratique. The Royal Yacht Squadron's agent and a representative of a supply firm, both English, also came alongside, and arrangements were made for watering and clearing for Gibraltar on the following morning. The flags were kept flying till after sundown, with the exception of the quarantine flag, which was hauled down by the doctor's orders; mooring lights were placed in position, and as none of the crew desired to land, all on board, except the watchman, retired to rest early.

At about 10·30 P.M. a large mob assembled near the stern of the yacht, and pelted her with a shower of lumps of granite, which damaged the vessel, injured three of the crew, and was sufficiently serious to endanger the lives of those on board. The mob further cut the yacht's hawsers, and showed evident intentions of attempting to board her; and as no notice was taken by the authorities of the distress signals made from the yacht for forty minutes by bell and steam-whistle, and no assistance was rendered either from the quay or from the guard-ship which was lying close by, steam was got up as quickly as possible, and the yacht left for Gibraltar.

On arrival at that port, the Colonial authorities (Paper A) found the deck of the yacht thickly strewn with stones, which had been thrown with such force as to splinter and indent portions of the deck, bulwarks, and deck-houses.

A detailed account of the damage done to the "Lady of Clennell" has been furnished by Mr. Wilkinson's agents (Paper E), together with an estimate by an expert of the repairs which are considered necessary to restore her to the condition in which she entered Malaga.

Representations addressed to them by Her Majesty's Ambassador at Madrid elicited from the Spanish Government (Paper D) the explanation that the incident had been due to a mistake respecting the nationality of the "Lady of Clennell," which the rioters had believed to be a United States' merchant-vessel. This mistake, it was asserted, would not have occurred if the yacht had flown her national flag.

The Spanish Government also informed Sir H. D. Wolff that the authorities had immediately intervened and broken up the groups of rioters, several of whom had been imprisoned, placed at the disposal of the Civil Governors of the province, and charged in the Law Courts. They, moreover, declared that the yacht had cut her own cables, and that there was no proof of an attempt to board, and they adduced as evidence of the proper conduct of the authorities at the time of the riot the fact that on the following day the British Consul at Malaga had thanked the Governor for the promptitude and efficiency with which the yacht had been protected.

With reference to this last point, I am to invite your special attention to Mr. Finn's explanation (Paper J) of the circumstances which led to his expression of thanks.

The other statements of the Spanish Government having been directly traversed by the master of the "Lady of Clennell" (Paper F), Sir H. D. Wolff was instructed to point out to the Spanish Government that they had been misinformed by the local authorities at Malaga (Paper H).

The Spanish Government, in their reply to this further representation, have not admitted the inaccuracy of the reports furnished by the local authorities, but they have expressed regret at the occurrence of so disagreeable an incident (Paper K).

Mr. Wilkinson, to whom this reply has been communicated, is not satisfied with the reparation thus offered, and he has intimated his intention to press his claim for a more ample apology and for pecuniary compensation (Papers L, M, and N).

I am to request you to take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the case is one in which further reparation should be demanded, and more especially whether, in your judgment, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in putting forward on behalf of Mr. Wilkinson a claim for pecuniary compensation.

In the event of your arriving at a conclusion favourable to the presentation of such a claim, his Lordship would be glad to learn what amount of compensation might, in your opinion, properly be demanded on Mr. Wilkinson's behalf.

I have, &c.

Report.

We do not, on the whole, advise that this claim should be pressed.

The attack on Mr. Wilkinson's yacht was made by a mob who seem to have been under the impression that it was an American vessel. The attack was, of course, in any case quite unjustifiable; but in order to justify a demand of compensation from the Spanish Government, it would be necessary to show that the action of the mob was caused or facilitated by some misconduct or neglect on the part of the Spanish authorities. There appears to be no very clear evidence of this, and the incident, however regrettable, was due to the excited state of public feeling in time of war. The Spanish Government have offered an apology, which is, we think, sufficient, and Mr. Wilkinson ought we think, to regard the apology made to Her Majesty's Government as satisfactory, without further apology to himself personally.

The damages claimed are of a somewhat speculative character, and we cannot advise that Her Majesty's Government should try to enforce payment by diplomatic pressure.

We have only to add that it is a condition precedent to intervention by Her Majesty's Government that recourse to the local Tribunals should be exhausted. No steps appear to have been taken to recover damages in the Spanish Courts, but it may be fairly said on Mr. Wilkinson's behalf that, practically speaking, any such steps would be fruitless. It would be difficult or impossible to identify the individuals who were concerned in the riot, and, even if this could be done, probably none of them could pay any sum which might be awarded. But upon the other grounds above stated, we think this matter should, under all the circumstances, be allowed to rest.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, July 23, 1898.

Messrs. Arabian's claim for losses during disturbances in Anatolia.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which refer to the claim of Messrs. Arabian against the Turkish Government for losses sustained by them during the disturbances in Anatolia in 1895.

On the 25th September of that year, Messrs. Arabian submitted to this Department a claim for 94,420*l.* in respect of losses incurred at Trebizond and other towns of Asia Minor (Paper B).

Mr. Mardiros Arabian's claim to British nationality having previously been established in connection with another matter (see Paper A), Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople was instructed to inquire into this case and endeavour to obtain some evidence in support of the claims to compensation advanced by Messrs. Arabian.

In February last, a despatch was received from Sir P. Currie (Paper C) forwarding a report on the case from Her Majesty's Consul at Trebizond, together with three documents produced by Messrs. Arabian as substantiating their claim in respect of their losses at Trebizond alone, which they estimated at 22,043*l.*

This part of their claim Messrs. Arabian wished Her Majesty's Embassy to present separately to the Turkish Government, but it was thought advisable to consider the claims in their entirety, and the firm were therefore asked to produce evidence with regard to their losses at places other than Trebizond (Paper E). It will be seen from a recent despatch received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires (Paper F), that, in view of this request, Messrs. Arabian have withdrawn the greater part of their claims owing to the impossibility of producing documentary proof of their losses, and they now advance, with certain papers in evidence, a claim for losses at Gurun only, which they estimate at £T. 10,980, in addition to that for losses at Trebizond, making a total claim of 30,010*l.*

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether Messrs. Arabian's claim, or any part of it only (and, if so, which part), is in law sustainable and proper to be put forward by Her Majesty's Government, subject to a final examination of details, items, and amounts; and I am also to request that you will favour his Lordship with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

We think that these claims may be put forward, but only on the terms that there is to be an opportunity of testing and verifying them.

The items as to bills and account books said to be lost, and as to bonds and bills in surrounding villages, require explanation and proof that, owing to the loss of these documents, the amounts due have been lost and could not be recovered. The other items also, the Ottoman Government can hardly be expected to accept without inquiry.

We have no observations of a general nature to add.

Foreign Office, August 31, 1898.

Gentlemen,

Validity of Quaker Marriage in Turkey.

AN application has been received by Mr. Crow, Acting Consul-General at Beirout, for information as to whether the ceremony of marriage between an Englishwoman and an Ottoman subject, both members of the Society of Friends, can be legally performed in the Friends Mission House at Broumana, in Syria, and whether the latter would be able to repudiate the lady, should he at any time afterwards wish to do so. Mr. Crow asks for instructions as to what answer he should return to this application.

In 1891, Mr. Holmwood, Her Majesty's Consul-General at Smyrna, requested permission to register at the Consulate-General a marriage between a British subject and an American citizen solemnized at Smyrna by a Minister of the Scottish Established Church, and the case led to a discussion as to the validity of such a marriage (Minutes on Mr. Holmwood's despatch No. 13 of the 7th March, 1892, marked (A)). It was held that the marriage was not valid by the law of England, inasmuch as English Common Law only recognized marriages solemnized in Turkey by a Minister in Episcopal Orders, while the Scottish Church was organized on the Presbyterian system, and its Ministers were consequently not in Episcopal Orders. It was further considered that such a marriage could not be looked upon as a lex loci marriage (i.e., one accepted by the English Courts merely on the ground that it was valid by the law of Turkey, although the conditions prescribed by English law had not been fulfilled), because the doctrine of recognition of marriages lege loci contractus did not apply in Mahommedan, and, therefore, polygamous countries. For these reasons it was held to be undesirable that British subjects should be married in Turkey, otherwise than under the Foreign Marriage Act or at the Common Law by a clergyman in Episcopal Orders.

In a Report, inclosed herewith and marked (B), which was furnished to the Marquess of Salisbury by your predecessors in 1892 on a somewhat analogous case, a similar opinion was expressed, "except in the case, which they did not imagine to exist, of the law of the foreign country expressly providing that valid marriages might be contracted in the way and according to the forms actually adopted." Inquiry as to the existence in Turkey of such a law having been addressed to Mr. Stavridès, Dragoman to Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople, as an expert in Ottoman jurisprudence, that gentleman reported in the paper, also herewith inclosed and marked (C), "that Christian communities, whether Greek, Armenian, or Catholic, have the right, according to the Sheriat and in virtue of the Berats and Firmans which are invariably granted to their respective Patriarchs and Bishops to solemnize marriages according to their own laws; and that such marriages, which are of course monogamous, are held good by the whole of the Ottoman authorities; in other words, the marriage is valid whenever it is performed, according to the ritual of the community to which the parties belong."

On a previous occasion, in answer to a question as to the nature and provisions of the laws (if any) regulating the marriages of Christians, whether Ottoman subjects or otherwise, in the Ottoman dominions, Mr. Stavridès reported in the Paper inclosed and marked (D) that Ottoman law had nothing to do with foreign subjects, that the moment the marriage of a foreigner was declared valid by his own authorities, it was recognized as valid by Ottoman law, that the marriages of Christians, whether Ottoman or otherwise, were governed by the laws of their respective Churches, and that no distinction was drawn between Christian Ottoman subjects and foreign Christians.

On this statement of the law of Turkey, the Law Officers were asked whether Her Majesty's Consular officers could, under any circumstances, be authorized to attend and register marriages of British subjects as being valid according to the lex loci; and, if so, Whether this authority should apply only to marriages celebrated according to the rites of the Church of England by a clergyman of that Church, or also, without distinction, to those celebrated by the ministers of other Christian religious persuasions according to the ritual of their several Churches. In their reply (Paper E), after expressing the opinion that in Turkey the local law applicable to Christian marriages was not Mahommedan, but the appropriate Christian law, the Law Officers stated that upon the statement of Mr. Stavridès, of the local law, Her Majesty's Consular officers might be authorized to register all marriages rightly solemnized according to local law, as above explained, and that such authority applied not only to marriages celebrated according to the rites of the Church of England, but also and without distinction to marriages solemnized by the ritual of any other Christian religious community.

In 1893, however, Colonel Trotter, Her Majesty's Consul-General at Beirout, reported (Paper F) that a British subject, a member of the Church of England, had been married within the Ottoman dominions to a Christian girl of Ottoman nationality, by a Reformed Presbyterian Minister. Doubts having arisen as to the validity of the marriage, the parties came to Beirout to be remarried at the Consulate-General under the Foreign Marriage Act, and were so remarried. Colonel Trotter asked whether a marriage between a British and an Ottoman subject would be valid without the intervention of the Consular officer, if solemnized by a Wesleyan, Baptist, Presbyterian, or Quaker minister. He stated at the same time that Ottoman law recognized marriage performed under the sanction of the Supreme Ecclesiastical Head of any recognized community, but was unable to say to what extent the Reformed Presbyterian Church was a recognized religious community in Turkey. He therefore thought the validity of the marriage by Ottoman law might be doubted.

According to the decision of the Law Officers on the Smyrna case, such marriages would be valid according to the lex loci and consequently recognized by the English Courts. It will be seen, however, that Colonel Trotter's statement of Ottoman law is not entirely in harmony with those of Mr. Stavridès, on which the opinion of the Law Officers was based, and which it is thought, moreover, may not have been intended to bear the construction which was put upon them. For these reasons it was considered that the marriage in question was of doubtful validity, and Colonel Trotter's action in remarrying the parties was approved (Paper G).

The present case is that of a proposed marriage between an Ottoman subject and an Englishwoman in the Quaker Mission House at Broumana. The doubts which arose in the Beyrout case equally arise now, and the Marquess of Salisbury is anxious that a definite decision should be arrived at. I have therefore the honour to request, by his Lordship's direction, that you will favour him with your opinion as to (1), whether the opinion of the Law Officers of the 18th September, 1892, may be held to be in any way modified by the statements as to Ottoman law contained in Colonel Trotter's despatch; and, if so (2), whether the marriages of British subjects, solemnized in Turkey by Christian ministers of religion not in Episcopal Orders, may be considered valid.

Report.

We think that the statements in Colonel Trotter's despatch make it very doubtful whether the view of the Ottoman law on which the opinion of the Law Officers of the 18th September, 1892, proceeded was in fact correct.

The Report of Mr. Stavridès is couched in somewhat ambiguous terms. It seems clear that the Ottoman law recognizes as valid marriages contracted in accordance with the Ecclesiastical Law of the great Christian communities which are subject to the Porte. But it is to us by no means clear, reading the Report of Mr. Stavridès along with the despatch of Colonel Trotter, that the Ottoman law recognizes as valid any marriage which would be valid according to the Ecclesiastical Law of any sect of foreigners who may be resident in the Turkish dominions, and unless the view taken on this point in the Report of the 18th September, 1892, should be confirmed by experts in Turkish law we do not think that such marriages should be registered under section 18 as marriages valid by the lex loci. We suspect that as regards marriages of foreigners, the Turkish law recognizes as valid only such marriages as would be recognized as valid by the law of the country to which they belong. In an article on this subject in the "Journal du Droit International Privé," vol. xvi, pp. 34–35, M. Salem, Advocate at Salonica, says in terms that the Ottoman law recognizes such marriages of foreigners only because they are recognized by the Consular authorities of the country to which the parties belong. If this view be correct, these marriages are not according to the lex loci, but according to the law which the Consular authorities recognize as applicable in Turkey.

Moreover, many difficulties would arise in practice in applying the view taken in the Law Officers' Report of the 18th September, 1892. It may be that many religious bodies do not affect to have an Ecclesiastical Law defining what constitutes a valid marriage ceremony—they may regard that as a matter for the Civil authority while they add a religious ceremony to the legal contract.

If the view which on the materials before us we are disposed to take of the Ottoman law be correct, these marriages are not marriages by the lex loci to be registered under section 18 of "The Foreign Marriages Act, 1892," but so far as valid they are valid because they are valid according to the British law applicable to British subjects in Turkey. Upon this view section 18 has no application to these marriages, as it relates only to marriages which have been celebrated according to the local law of the foreign country.

We must, however, observe that as this is largely a question of Ottoman law, our opinion must be taken subject to any light which may be thrown on the subject by further Reports by experts in Ottoman law.

2. Upon the materials before us we do not think registration under section 18 applicable to any of these marriages, whether before ministers in Episcopal Orders or not.

The question is not of local law of marriage, but of the British law applicable to British subjects in Turkey.

We observe that in the Papers before us it is assumed that the doctrine of R. v. Millis applies to British subjects in Turkey. We ought to point out that there is high authority for the proposition that R. v. Millis does not apply to marriages out of England and Ireland, or that if it does apply at all its application is subject to qualifications. The question is one of very great importance, and we think it better to express no opinion upon it until it arises in a practical shape.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, April 4, 1898.

Free navigation of Stikine River. Treaty rights of Great Britain to.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying papers relating to the question of the extent and character of the obligations which devolved on the United States' Government in consequence of their purchase of the territory of Alaska from Russia in 1867.

Article VI of the Treaty between this country and Russia of 1825 (Paper A) states:—

"It is understood that the subjects of His Britannic Majesty, from whatever quarter they may arrive, ... shall for ever enjoy the right of navigating freely, and without any hindrance whatever, all the rivers and streams which in their course towards the Pacific Ocean may cross the line of demarcation upon the line of coast described in Article III of the present Convention."

This arrangement was re-enacted by Article XIX of the Treaty of 1859 (Paper B).

When the territory was ceded to the United States by Russia by the Treaty of the 30th March, 1867 (Paper C), the cession was declared (in Article VI) "to be free and unincumbered by any reservations, privileges, franchises, grants, or possessions, by any associated Companies, whether corporate or incorporate, Russian or any other, or by any parties, except merely private individual property-holders," and it was added that "the cession hereby made conveys all the rights, franchises, and privileges now belonging to Russia in the said territory or dominion and appurtenances thereto."

On the 26th December, 1867, the Queen's Advocate having been consulted on the matter, reported that the United States were bound by the Articles from the Treaty of 1825 as regards the limits of the ceded territory, these Articles having been recited in the Treaty of 1867, but that "as regards the other Articles, ... none of the obligations contracted by Russia towards Great Britain under those Articles devolve upon the United States by virtue of the Treaty of Cession."

Subsequently, by Article XXVI of the Treaty of Washington of 1871 (Paper D), between the United States of America and Great Britain, it was provided that "the navigation of the Rivers Yukon, Porcupine, and Stikine, ascending and descending from, to, and into the sea shall for ever remain free and open for the purposes of commerce to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty and to the citizens of the United States, subject to any Laws and Regulations of either country within its own territory, not inconsistent with such privilege of free navigation."

It should be observed that the cases of the Yukon and Porcupine are not covered by the Treaty of 1825, but that the Stikine is among the rivers declared by that Treaty to be for ever free to British subjects. It must also be remembered that Article XXVI of the Treaty of Washington is in the form of a reciprocal Agreement, and that by the first portion of the Article similar advantages were accorded to the citizens of the United States in the River St. Lawrence.

In 1876–77 the question of the right to the free navigation of the Stikine through Alaska was again raised in connexion with the conveyance, in the custody of British colonial constables, of a convicted prisoner, named Peter Martin, from Laketown, in British Columbia, to Victoria in the same Colony. The journey was performed by boat upon the Stikine River, which for some considerable distance between the two places mentioned flows wholly through United States' (Alaska) territory. Peter Martin alleged that he was a United States' citizen, and the United States' Government claimed his surrender on the ground, amongst others, that his conveyance through Alaska was, in such circumstances, illegal.

The papers were referred to the Law Officers of the Crown and to Dr. Deane, Q.C., who, on the 2nd June, 1877, reported that the surrender of Peter Martin should be conceded on the ground that the unauthorized conveyance of a prisoner through the territories of a foreign Power is an infraction of the rights of sovereignty of such Power.

In the course of their Report the Law Officers made the following observations with reference to the rights of Great Britain in regard to the free navigation of the Stikine:—

"1. Whether Great Britain, on the sale of Alaska by Russia to the United States in 1867, lost her rights to the free and unrestricted navigation of the rivers flowing through that territory to the sea, secured to her by the Convention with Russia of 1825, depends upon the construction of the 6th clause of the Convention of 1825.

"That clause gives to British subjects the right of free navigation upon the rivers in question in perpetuity, and Russia could not, in our opinion, voluntarily and without the consent of Great Britain, withdraw this permission.

"By clause 6, however, of the Treaty of the 30th March, 1867, between Russia and the United States, Russia declared the cession of the territory and dominion to be free and unincumbered by any reservation, &c., and, therefore, did virtually revoke the permission she had granted, and by so doing gave Great Britain ground for serious complaint.

"2. Whatever may have been the nature of the right conferred upon Great Britain by the Convention of 1825, we are of opinion that by the subsequent conduct of her Government, especially by the negotiations which led to the Treaty of Washington, and by that Treaty itself, she has lost that right. It may be suggested that the 26th clause of the Treaty of Washington was merely declaratory, but we cannot take this view. We consider that, fairly construed, the stipulations in that clause give new rights, and amount, to that extent and in that sense, to an admission that any former rights were abrogated.

"3. If the rights of free navigation under the Convention of 1825 still existed, we should doubt very much whether the conveying a prisoner through American waters, and still more the landing him in custody upon American territory, would be within the terms of the Convention."

The considerations arising out of these papers are discussed in the correspondence which has recently passed between this Department and the Colonial Office (Papers G and H).

L.O.R. 1897 (Conf. 4216), p. 37.

Mr. Secretary Chamberlain suggests that, in reporting on the case of Peter Martin in 1877, the Law Officers (see Paper F) were probably not in possession of the circumstances in which the Treaty of 1825 was concluded, or of the actual text of the Treaty of 1867, which is quoted in the present letter.

With regard to the Treaty of Washington of 1871, it is urged that Article XXVI does not contain anything which can be construed as waiving the rights of British subjects under the Treaty of 1825 of freely navigating the Lower Stikine.

I am also to inclose a further correspondence between this Department, the Colonial Office, and Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington, respecting the Regulations to be issued by the United States' Government for the navigation of the Stikine.

It will be seen that the Canadian Government have made a contract for the construction of a railway to the goldfields by the Stikine River, and that for the effective use of this route it is very necessary that the Regulations to be issued by the United States under Article XXVI of the Treaty of Washington should permit transhipment at Wrangel.

Sir J. Pauncefote's telegram No. 12 of the 7th March (Paper K) contains a summary of the conditions under which, in the Bill now before the United States' Congress, it is proposed that such transhipment and bonding privileges at Wrangel should be granted.

These conditions, in the opinion of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, are entirely inconsistent with the Treaty rights mutually guaranteed to British subjects and American citizens (Colonial Office letter, 9th March, 1898, Paper L).

It is urged that the Regulations contemplated by Article XXVI of the Treaty are obviously only such as are required for the purposes of safeguarding the revenue, and of preserving law and order, and that the proposals in the Bill can only be described as an attempt to secure from Her Majesty's Government important political concessions under penalty of being otherwise excluded from the enjoyment of rights already secured by Treaty.

On the 17th March Sir J. Pauncefote was accordingly instructed (telegram No. 22, Paper M), should his Excellency consider that the Bill was likely to pass with these conditions, to make representations against the imposition of any restrictions on the exercise of the Treaty right of free navigation, which must be held to include the right of transhipment under proper Regulations.

His Excellency has not yet reported whether he has taken any action on these instructions.

Copies of the Regulations issued by the Dominion Government, under which foreign vessels may navigate the Canadian waters of the Stikine, Porcupine, and Yukon Rivers, subject to the provisions of the Customs Act, are annexed (Colonial Office, the 21st March last, Paper O), as well as a letter which has been received from the Colonial Office, inclosing a Report from the Canadian Minister of Justice stating very fully the view taken by the Canadian Government with regard to the construction of Article XXVI of the Treaty of Washington (Paper P, Colonial Office letter of the 31st March, and inclosure).

I am to request that Lord Salisbury may be favoured with your opinion as to whether, in virtue of the Treaty of 1825 with Russia, as revived by the Treaty of 1859, Her Majesty's Government can still claim from the United States the right of navigating freely, without any hindrance whatever, all the rivers and streams which, in their course towards the Pacific, may cross the line of demarcation upon the strip of coast described in Article III of the former Treaty, and also as to the rights of this country under Article XXVI of the Treaty of Washington in regard to the free navigation of the Stikine, including the right of transhipment at Wrangel.

As the proposed United States' Regulations are already under discussion in Congress, I am to say that the Secretary of State would be glad to receive a reply to this letter at your earliest convenience.

I have, &c.

Report.

The terms of Article XXVI of the Treaty of 1871 make it difficult for Her Majesty's Government to base their claims to tranship goods at Wrangel upon rights given to Great Britain in the River Stikine by virtue of the Treaty of 1825, and for the purposes of that claim it does not appear to us to be material whether any right can be claimed under the latter Treaty.

The rights conferred by the Treaty of 1825 were not, in our view, affected by the cession to the United States, inasmuch as Russia could cede only what she had.

In our opinion, however, the XXVIth Article of the Treaty of 1871 confers on Her Majesty's subjects the right of navigating the Stikine for commercial purposes, and the right of transhipment at Wrangel is an incident to the right of navigation without which it would be useless. The United States can frame Regulations reasonably regulating the exercise of this right, but cannot impose any such conditions as are contained in the Bill before Congress. Free navigation, including transhipment, is a matter of right.

Expulsion of Lieutenant Carranza from Canada

THE following decypher of a telegram which was received from the Governor-General of Canada at 11 P.M. on the 9th June, 1898, having been submitted to the Law Officers, they reported on the 10th instant in the terms given below:—

Lieutenant Ramon Carranza, a Spanish officer, formerly Naval Attaché at Washington, had gone to Canada on the outbreak of hostilities between the United States and Spain; while in Canada, a letter from him to the Minister of Marine in Madrid was intercepted by a Secret Agent of the United States. This letter disclosed the fact that he was engaged in the organization of a spy service, as a result of which the United States' Government represented that his action constituted a flagrant abuse of the protection afforded to him in neutral British territory.

Decypher of a telegram received from the Governor-General of Canada at 11 P.M., June 9, 1898.

Your telegram of the 7th. Do the Law Officers of the Crown advise that we have power to order Carranza out of country? If so, does that power result from the Common Law, or from Imperial legislation?

Canadian Law Officers refer us to debate in House of Lords, February 1842, Creole case. My responsible advisers desire to intimate that there is no Alien Act in force in this country.

Report.

In our opinion, Carranza should be informed that he must at once quit Canada. If he does not go, he should be arrested and sent off to any place he may select.

There is strong ground for contending that such a power exists as a part of the prerogative of the Crown, and we think that in this case it should be exercised.

Spanish-American war. Treatment of U. S. "press vessels" in British ports.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Bertram Cox' letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by you to request our opinion with reference to a question raised by the Governor of Jamaica regarding the treatment to be accorded to certain United States' steamers known as "press vessels," which conveyed newspaper correspondents direct to the seat of war, in the event of their applying for coal at a British port; and that Mr. Cox was to transmit to us copies of the correspondence which had passed upon the subject, as noted in the annexed list of papers.

That it would be seen that, on receipt of the Governor's telegram, an answer was sent to the effect that there seemed no ground, on the statement of circumstances given, for treating these vessels otherwise than as United States' merchant-vessels.

That the further information given in the Governor's despatch having been received, you would be glad if we would advise you whether the vessels in question should be allowed to receive coal as merchant-ships, or should be subject to the Rules as to coaling which applied to belligerent men-of-war.

In obedience to your commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That, on the facts stated, we think that these vessels should not be subjected to the Rules as to coaling which apply to belligerent men-of-war. They should be allowed to receive coal as merchant-ships.

Cutting and reopening of cables of Eastern Extension Telegraph Company during Spanish–American war.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the three accompanying letters from the Eastern Extension Australasia and China Telegraph Company (Limited), with reference to the cutting of their cables by the American naval authorities in the Far East, and to the reopening of their Hong Kong–Manila cable with the consent of the two belligerent States—Spain and America.

With respect to the latter question, I am to transmit to you the inclosed correspondence with the Admiralty and with Sir H. Drummond Wolff, Her Majesty's Ambassador at Madrid.

With respect to the question of compensation, the Marquess of Tweeddale, the Chairman of the Company, states in his annexed letter of the 5th instant that he called the attention of the American Ambassador to the matter, with a view to his Excellency submitting the Company's claim for compensation to the Executive at

Washington, but was advised by Colonel Hay to request Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington to make the necessary representations on the spot.

Lord Tweeddale then addressed a letter to Sir Julian Pauncefote to that effect, and his Excellency, in reply, asked to be favoured with instructions from the Foreign Office.

I am to request that you will take the papers into your consideration, and that you will, at your early convenience, favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the case, (1) for compensation in respect of the injury to the Company's cables; and (2) for reopening communication, is one which Her Majesty's Government can properly represent to the United States' Government; and, if so, on what grounds in each instance such a representation might most advantageously be based.

A copy of your Report of the 7th May, and also the various papers which were then submitted to you, are inclosed, should you desire to refer to them.

I have, &c.

Report.

We do not recommend that any claim as of right should be put forward in this case.

The United States' Admiral does not seem to us to have done more than was reasonable under the circumstances.

Certainly, no claim can be put forward as to reopening, or for loss of custom during the interruption. Neutrals who have property in the enemy's territory (these cables appear to have been interrupted within the territorial waters of Spain) cannot complain if war interrupts their use of their property.

It is not so clear that there may not be a claim for the actual expense of reuniting the cable.

There is no settled rule of law on the subject, but there is some ground for saying that neutrals whose property is taken or destroyed for warlike purposes have a claim to compensation for the damage done them.

But we advise that the matter be brought unofficially before the United States' Government in the interests of the Eastern Telegraph Company generally, and that no formal claim be advanced.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Sir,
Royal Courts of Justice, August 10, 1898.

Expulsion of Mr. Dubosc from Canada.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Lucas' letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed to forward to us the accompanying letter which you had received from Messrs. Hastie, Solicitors, of 65, Lincoln's Inn Fields, who had been consulted by Mr. Dubosc as to the legality of his recent expulsion from Canada by the Government of the Dominion.

That Mr. Lucas was also to inclose a copy of the opinion given by us, after consultation with the Lord Chancellor, as to the course to be pursued by the Canadian Government with regard to Lieutenant Carranza's expulsion, and copies of the telegraphic correspondence which had passed between the Colonial Office and the Governor-General on the subject.

That it would be seen from the telegram dated 7th July, 1898, that that gentleman and his companion, Mr. Dubosc, undertook to leave Canada on Saturday, the 9th ultimo, a formal requisition to that effect having been communicated to them by the Premier on the 30th June, but that Mr. Dubosc, before his departure, recorded a protest against the legality of the action taken by the Government.

That Mr. Lucas was to request us to take these papers into our consideration, and to advise you as to—

1. What answer should be given to Messrs. Hastie's communication; and
2. What instructions (if any) should be sent to the Governor-General in view of the prospect of Mr. Dubosc's returning to Canada.

In obedience to your commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That we advise that Messrs. Hastie should be informed that their request for an apology and compensation cannot be entertained. They should also be informed that Mr. Dubosc can, during the war, be permitted to enter Canada only on assurances satisfactory to Her Majesty's Government that his residence in that country will not be utilized for any purpose of hostile operations against a friendly Power.

The Governor-General should be informed that Mr. Dubosc should not be permitted to enter Canada till instructions to that effect are sent to the Governor-General by Her Majesty's Government. Such instructions should be sent only if the Colonial Secretary be reasonably satisfied that Mr. Dubosc proposes to return to Canada merely for the purposes of private business.

Messrs. Hastie to Mr. Chamberlain..

Sir,
65, Lincoln's Inn Fields, London, August 1, 1898.

WE have been consulted by Señor Dubosc as to the legality of the recent action of the Canadian Government towards him, an action which was, we understand, admittedly prompted by yourself.

Señor Dubosc took some legal advice before leaving Canada, and he was advised, as we understand, to defy the wholly illegal order and request which had been addressed to him, and to remain there. Remembering, however, that he is a diplomatist who might be at any time accredited to this country, he preferred to adopt the course which seemed least likely to embarrass the British Government, and he has accordingly come over here and placed himself in our hands.

The case from your point of view is, as we understand, this: that Señor Dubosc, being an alien in British territory, plotted against a foreign Government.

Even if these were the facts, and we will presently show you that they are not, they give no warrant for the action of the Government.

Even when there has been an Aliens Act in force, it would be hard to find a parallel (the solitary case of M. Georges is certainly not one) for the action of the Government in the present case, but there has been no Alien Act in force since the Statute of 1848, and that was never once acted upon. Even assuming that the Government are right in their facts, it would be necessary to go back to the reign of Her late Majesty Queen Elizabeth to find a single precedent for the course which has been adopted, and we will presently show that even the precedents of that period do not apply. The present law on the subject is perfectly clear. If Señor Dubosc were a foreign criminal, neither the Crown nor any servant of the Crown has power (except under Extradition Acts) to expel him from the country or to surrender him to his own Government for trial. If, on the other hand, he has offended against the laws of Canada, he must there be tried for his offence, and cannot be arbitrarily expelled the country. Where an Alien Act is in force the law provides for the removal of aliens for the safety of England, and not for the satisfaction of other States. It is not enough that the presence or acts of a foreigner may be displeasing to a foreign Power, and every act of such foreigner, not prohibited by law, however distasteful to foreign States, is entitled to protection. Having now pointed out to you that, even if the facts were as you supposed, and even if there had, in addition, been an Alien Act in force, the action of the Government is wholly unjustifiable, we will tell you what, as we are instructed, the facts really are:—

1. Señor Dubosc being compelled, on the outbreak of war, to leave Washington, betook himself to the nearest British territory, where he could conveniently wind up various matters of business, and in no way infringed the laws of neutrality.

2. Señor Dubosc may be technically described as what is known as a statutory alien, but he is a natural-born British subject, born in Edinburgh, educated first at a private school, and afterwards at Harrow, in England, and, therefore, peculiarly a person to whom the greatest consideration should be shown by the British Government.

If the Government make any attempt to justify the expulsion at all, we suppose that they will endeavour to allege that it was an exercise of the Royal prerogative. If so, the latest cases in the text-books are the three cases in 1571, 1574, and 1575, which are stated in several of the text-books to be cases where the Royal prerogative was exercised, but we believe that a careful examination of these cases will show that, even at that time, no such exercise of the Royal prerogative was admitted, for the excellent reason that, if such prerogative ever existed at all, it was expressly given up by Magna Charta, section 42, which gives to everyone but prisoners, outlaws, and alien enemies the right to leave England and return at will, and that the expulsions really took place, not as exercises of the Royal prerogative, but under the powers contained in the Statutes of Henry VIII and Acts incorporated with them. The question of whether the Royal prerogative existed or not was raised, as you will doubtless know, in 1793. It was strongly contended at that time (more than 100 years ago) that, whether it had existed or not, it had certainly fallen into desuetude, and, as the result, it was not thought safe to rely upon any supposed Royal prerogative, and Alien Acts were then passed. If a Power, the existence of which was disputed successfully more than 100 years ago, and which has not been exercised since Tudor times by any Government, good, bad, or indifferent, were to be exercised now, it would be a monstrous thing, and it would, moreover, be improperly exercised, since it is manifestly being exercised not for the safety of the Kingdom, but to please a foreign State.

We make no doubt that we have said sufficient to convince both the Law Officers of the Crown and yourself that a serious mistake has occurred, which might lead to very serious consequences if Señor Dubosc were inclined to deal with the matter in a hostile spirit. He asks, however, nothing more than an expression of apology and regret from those responsible for the mistake which has been made, and such fair compensation as may be proper in the circumstances.

It is, in our view, of great importance to him (in what is, we trust, the unlikely event of a denial of his rights) that he should at once proceed to Canada for the double purpose of raising again the question of his right to remain there, and of pursuing his remedies for what has happened. The Government acted with great expedition in requiring him to leave Canada, and it will not be unfair to expect it to use equal dispatch in repairing the mistake, and we shall therefore advise Señor Dubosc to sail for Canada in a fortnight should the action or inaction of the Government unfortunately render such a step necessary. Señor Dubosc has, however, the most sincere wish to give no needless trouble, but to secure the admission of his rights as quickly and quietly as may be.

We have advised him that the Government have plainly exceeded their powers in the matter, and that he will also certainly not lack public sympathy, for he is contending for that right of safe asylum to aliens which our nation has always proudly maintained, and which everyone would particularly desire to see insisted upon in the case of a gentleman who was born and bred in our own country.

We shall be glad to give you any further information in our power, or to see either yourself or one of the Law Officers of the Crown, if you consider that such a course will facilitate the settlement of the mistake.

We have, &c.

Draft of Despatch from the Marquess of Salisbury to Mr. Haggard.

(No. .)
Sir,
Foreign Office, May , 1898.

Your despatch No. 28 of the 22nd February was duly received at this Office, and the note from the Venezuelan Government respecting the Acarabisci incident, of which you inclosed a translation, has been considered by Her Majesty's Government.

You should remind the Venezuelan Government in the first instance that Mr. Harrison was arrested while carrying out the orders of Her Majesty's Government in territory which, although in dispute, was de facto under British authority. Their statement that the arrest was not an act of aggression cannot, therefore, be admitted. You should point out that, if Mr. Harrison rendered himself liable to arrest, as stated by Señor Rojas, by continuing a work within territory where Venezuelan employés had already made explorations, it might be said with equal justice that the Venezuelan officers should have been arrested for attempting to interfere with the work of British officials which was actually in progress.

As regards Mr. Harrison's state of health at the time, it may be observed that the fact that he was already in a precarious condition does not, at any rate, mitigate the action of the Venezuelan officers in removing him to the El Dorado station, and detaining him there from the 15th to the 26th June.

Her Majesty's Government have from the outset acknowledged the prompt action taken by the Venezuelan Government in sending orders for Mr. Harrison's release, and they are aware that the orders, which did not arrive from Carácas till the 2nd July, were delayed owing to causes beyond the control of the Venezuelan authorities.

It was this circumstance which led Her Majesty's Government to hope that the Venezuelan Government would not hesitate to disavow the conduct of their officers, and to express their regret for what had occurred.

Señor Rojas refers in his note to the warning given to the Government of British Guiana by the Venezuelan Consul at Georgetown, but it appears to Her Majesty's Government that, if the Venezuelan Government had reason to fear a collision between the employés of the Republic and the Colonial officials, the duty of taking steps to prevent any aggressive action on the part of the Venezuelans rested with the Central Government, whose responsibility in the matter is rather confirmed than diminished by his Excellency's observations.

Pecuniary compensation was claimed by Her Majesty's Government on behalf of Mr. Harrison and the other persons concerned, and the grounds for this demand were clearly stated in Viscount Gough's note to Señor Andrade of the 13th September, 1896.

* Private letter of which no copy was kept.

1898

Her Majesty's Government consider that the arrest of an officer who was doing his duty on territory in the occupation of another Power is a matter which only differs in degree from an armed invasion intended to put a stop to all administration upon such territory, and you should press the Venezuelan Government to deliver to you without further delay the sum of 1,000*l.* already demanded, and also to express their regret at the incident, and their disapproval of the conduct of their officers on the spot.

Expulsion of M. Dubosc from Canada.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Bertram Cox's letter of the 13th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 10th August in which we advised as to the answer to be returned to the communication received from Messrs. Hasties on the subject of the expulsion of M. Dubosc from Canada, he was directed to transmit to us copy of a further letter which had been received from those gentlemen, in which they offered to submit M. Dubosc's case to arbitration.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was also to inclose a copy of the letter from the Colonial Office of the 19th August, to which that letter was a reply, and to explain that, in consequence of the cessation of hostilities between Spain and the United States, it was not thought to be necessary, as advised by us, to inform Messrs. Hasties that M. Dubosc would not be allowed to land in Canada during the continuance of the war.

That you were disposed to regard the question raised by M. Dubose as one involving important matters of principle, and that it was extremely desirable that the power of directing aliens to leave Her Majesty's dominions, when their continued residence might give rise to international difficulties, should as far as possible be maintained.

That you would be glad to receive our advice as to the reply which should be made to Messrs. Hasties' offer to submit the matter to arbitration.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, it is not expedient to agree to arbitration on such a point.

M. Dubosc should be left to take proceedings at law if he is so advised.

Messrs. Hasties' proposal should be declined.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, February 19, 1898.

Arrest at Zanzibar of native of Comoro by French Consul.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list, which relate to the arrest at Zanzibar, by order of the French Consul, of a native of the Comoro Islands, which are either under the Protectorate of France, or as being a dependency of Madagascar, have been annexed with that island by the French Republic.

The circumstances of the case, so far as they are known from the telegrams (Documents A and B) received from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar, are briefly as follows:—

and made good his escape to Zanzibar. The French Consul at Zanzibar appears to have either invited or inveigled him into the French Consulate and to have there arrested him.

Article VI of the Treaty of 1844 between France and Muscat (Document C), which is in force at Zanzibar, is as follows: "Les autorités de Son Altesse le Sultan de Mascate n'interviendront point dans les contestations entre Français." Other Articles of the Treaty, and the provision of the Treaty between Great Britain and Zanzibar (Document D), the benefit of which can be claimed by France under the most-favoured-nation clause of her own Treaty, appear to invest the French Government with full extra-territorial authority over a French citizen against whom any charge may be brought by another French citizen, or by the French Government.

It will probably be contended by the French Government, in the event of Her Majesty's Government feeling it incumbent on them to protest against the action of the French Consul at Zanzibar in the present case, that the territorial Government (i.e. that of the Sultan of Zanzibar), has no right to investigate the nature or validity of a charge thus made, nor, indeed, to ascertain whether, in the case of the arrest at Zanzibar of a French citizen, any charge at all is made against the French citizen so arrested, nor to inquire into the manner of the arrest, the prisoner being entitled to appeal only to such remedies as French law may provide, and being no more able to make an appeal, valid in international law, to the Sultan of Zanzibar than if he had been arrested in Paris itself; in short, it would no doubt be contended that the whole jurisdiction of the Sultan ceases on it being established that the man arrested is, in fact, a French citizen.

The man whose arrest forms the subject of the present reference, is, as already stated, a Comoro Chief.

The protectorate of France over the Comoro Islands is acknowledged by Her Majesty's Government on behalf of that of Zanzibar, and the precise political status of the islands seems to be immaterial so far as regards the present case, because Her Majesty's Government admit that in Zanzibar a person validly under the protection of a civilized Power, is, in jurisdictional matters, assimilated to a subject, or citizen, as the case may be, of the Power in question.

It is not known whether the French authorities contemplate removing the Comoro Chief from Zanzibar, but it is not unlikely that they will do so, and Her Majesty's Government desire to consider in anticipation a position which they should take up in such an eventuality.

I have the honour to request you to take the papers sent herewith into your consideration and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to—

1. Whether Her Majesty's Government, acting on behalf of the Government of Zanzibar, have any ground for remonstrating with the French Government against either the fact or the manner of the arrest of the Comoro Chief; and

2. Whether they would have any ground for endeavouring to prevent the French authorities from removing the Chief from Zanzibar, should these authorities endeavour to do so.

I also have the honour to request you to favour his Lordship with such other observations on the papers generally as will, in your judgment, be of assistance to him in dealing with the case.

I have, &c.

Treaty, France and Muscat, 1844 (Hertslet's Map of Africa, p. 927).

Report.

If the arrest of the Comoro Chief was made bonâ fide with a view to, or in the course of proceedings intended to be taken against him either in the French Consular Court at Zanzibar, or in French Courts elsewhere, there is, in our opinion, no grounds for remonstrating against the arrest, or for endeavouring to prevent his removal from Zanzibar.

He is, we are to assume, a French citizen.

The French Consular authorities have exclusive jurisdiction, both in civil and criminal matters over French citizens. This is not a mere privilege conferred on the individual which he can waive if he pleases—it is the right of the French Government. French citizens in Zanzibar are as much subject to their own Tribunals there as if they were in France. The fact that the offence is political makes, in our opinion, no difference.

Unless, however, the proceedings were taken bonâ fide with a view to the enforcement of French law, neither the exterritoriality granted by the Treaty, nor any other of the provisions justify the action of the French Consul. The Treaties contemplate the exercise by the Consuls in such matters of judicial functions, and do not, of themselves, give any powers of arbitrary arrest and detention.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, March 5, 1898.

Case of Salim-bin-Abdurrahman. French protection of a Zanzibari.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list, which relate to the case of Salim-bin-Abdurrahman, of Zanzibar, one aspect of which formed the subject of your Report of the 21st August last (Document B).

The facts and considerations connected with the further aspects of the case on which your opinion is now sought are briefly as follows:—

The late Sultan of Zanzibar had retained Salim-bin-Abdurrahman, who was a Lamu Arab, as a member of his household, and His Highness subsequently requested the French Consul at Zanzibar to give Salim an appointment at the French Consulate. The circumstances in which this request was made and complied with are stated in Sir A. Hardinge's despatch No. 60 of the 27th March, 1897 (Document A), in which he states his grounds for believing that Salim was not bonâ fide in the service of the French Consul, but, at the request of the Sultan, was attached nominally to the Staff of the Consulate for the express purpose of placing him and his property beyond the control of any future Sultan or of the paramount Power at Zanzibar, namely, Great Britain.

In your Report of the 21st August last (Document B) you stated that, in your opinion, the privilege of protection enuring under Article IV of the Treaty of 1844 between France and Muscat (Document C) to persons in the service of French citizens could not properly be claimed by a person in the circumstances of Salim, as it was plain that in his case there was a mere pretence of service set up for the purpose of obtaining French protection. You expressed the further opinion that the matter was not one which concerned the French Government only, as the question of the application of the Treaty was one to be settled by both parties to the Treaty, and could not be determined by the mere assertion of the French Government that the case provided for by the Treaty had arisen.

No action was taken by Lord Salisbury on your Report because there was reason to believe that the French Government was on the point of giving up their extra-territorial rights and jurisdiction in Zanzibar. But it now appears that considerable time must elapse before they do so. The French Ambassador at this Court has lately brought the case of Salim verbally to the notice of the Secretary of State, and it cannot be left indefinitely in abeyance.

It is, unfortunately, not in the least likely that the French Government will on any representation from Her Majesty's Government recede from the position taken up in Baron de Courcel's note of the 5th July last (Document D) that Salim is entitled to French protection under the Treaty between France and Muscat, and it becomes necessary to consider whether, and, if so, with what probable result, the case can be left to be settled by the Courts of Law at Zanzibar.

According to Sir A. Hardinge's despatch No. 60 of the 27th March last (Document A), the matter which has raised the question of the validity of the French Consul's claim to extend French protection to Salim is the claim of the latter to a portion of certain property given to him by the late Sultan and subsequently leased to a German Club. Salim alleges that the property includes an adjacent burial-place, once used by the extinct Mahommedan family of Mwenye Mkuu, the representatives (through the female line) of which family claim that the burial-place is "Wakf," or religious land, and therefore inalienable.

The representatives of the Mwenye Mkuu family therefore instituted proceedings in the Sultan's Court against Salim for unlawfully taking possession of the burial-place, but when the case came on for hearing Salim did not appear, but fled to the French Consulate, where, as is believed, he still remains.

The French Consul claims that the case must, as Salim is under French protection, be tried in the French Consular Court and in accordance with French law.

Two principal questions arise in this connection:—

1. Supposing the French protection granted to Salim to be valid, and to place him, for legal purposes, in the position of a French citizen, and supposing, further, the question of his right to the ownership of land at Zanzibar to be within the jurisdiction of the French Consular Court, should the question of his ownership be decided in accordance with French law or in accordance with Zanzibar law, that is, in accordance with the law of the place where the land is situated? and

2. To what extent does French protection extended to a Zanzibari in Zanzibar assimilate for legal purposes the man protected to a French citizen; and does it, in particular, withdraw from the jurisdiction of the Sultan's Courts of Law questions affecting the man's ownership of land in Zanzibar?

As regards the first of these questions, it was at first thought in this Department that the law applying to land—real property or immovables—at Zanzibar must necessarily be the lex loci rei sitæ, and that the ownership, &c., of such property must necessarily be regulated by one and the same system irrespective of the nationality or domicil of the owner. It was thought that a system under which the French law of real property would govern the devolution of real property in the case of French citizens in Zanzibar, while English, Scottish, British Indian, British Colonial, or other variety of British law, would apply to land held by British subjects, and Mahommedan or Zanzibar law to land held by Zanzibaris, would be illogical and practically unworkable.

The difficulty of such a system would at once appear if a Zanzibari, for instance, were to bring an action of ejectment against two joint tenants who were of British and of French nationality respectively.

But Sir John Kirk, who was for many years Her Majesty's Consul-General at Zanzibar, and who has therefore great knowledge of the practice of the British and other extra-territorial Courts there, had, in a Memorandum of the 10th October last (Document E), on another case, expressed the opinion that all questions relating to real property owned by British subjects in the Zanzibar dominions were governed by English—or other variety of British—law.

The French Government is entitled under the most-favoured-nation clause of their Treaty with Muscat, to claim the benefit of the stipulations contained in the British Treaty, and as the latter is the most explicit of the Treaties between Zanzibar and other Powers, it will be convenient to consider the question of the law applying to real property owned by foreigners in Zanzibar from the point of view of the provisions of the British Treaty.

Sir John Kirk was asked to furnish a full statement of his opinion on this question, and did so in his Memorandum of the 18th January (Document F) and in a subsequent letter of the 31st January (Document G). This Memorandum was referred to Mr. de Sausmarez, then on leave in this country, who was for several years Assistant Judge in Her Majesty's Consular Court at Zanzibar. His views will be found expressed in his letter of the 1st ultimo (Document H). Sir John Kirk has seen Mr. de Sausmarez' letter, and has commented on it in his own letter of the 11th instant (Document I).

These several papers set out the matter so fully that it does not appear to be necessary to add anything to them, except perhaps to submit to your consideration that it is possible that the British and other Courts of extra-territorial jurisdiction at Zanzibar may have applied to real property in the Sultan's dominions the laws of their respective countries in error, and that it is an accident that no case has as yet arisen of such a nature as to make the error and the unworkable nature of a system founded on it evident to the Courts in question.

As regards the practice of the British Consular Court in applying one of the varities of British law to real property owned by British subjects in Zanzibar, it may be observed that that Court has exercised jurisdiction under Orders of the Queen in Council (Documents J to N), which are issued under the provisions of the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts (Documents O to T), and it does not appear that these documents contemplate the application of English, or of any other variety of British, law to real property in places where Her Majesty has extra-territorial jurisdiction.

In this connection, I am to refer you to your Report of the 28th September last respecting the application of the recent Finance Act to real property in the British Central Africa Protectorate (Document U).

p. 29.

But the consideration of the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts and of the Orders in Council issued under them is perhaps of small importance in connection with the question of the application of French, or other non-British foreign, law to real property in Zanzibar, because it is conceivable that the Sovereign of Zanzibar should, notwithstanding the inconvenience of the system so created, have authorized foreign Powers represented in his dominions to apply their own respective laws to real property owned by their respective subjects in the Zanzibar dominions, and yet that the British Government might have abstained from authorizing their Extra-territorial Courts and their subjects from making use of the authorization in question, while other Powers might have acted on the authorization, and have directed their Courts to apply their respective laws to real property owned by their subjects in the Sultanate.

As regards the second question, namely, the jurisdictional effect of the grant of French protection to a Zanzibari on account of his being in the service of a French citizen, I am to refer you to the paragraph marked (a) in Sir J. Kirk's Memorandum of the 18th January (Document F) and to the last paragraph in Mr. de Sausmarez' Memorandum of the 1st ultimo (Document H).

Mr. de Sausmarez points out an important distinction between the privileges in Zanzibar of a French citizen and those of a Zanzibari enjoying French protection by reason of his being in the service of a French citizen. The latter, and no doubt his property, does not, like the former and his property, enjoy the privilege of "extra-territoriality." He is entitled only to the same "protection" as a French citizen.

Both Sir J. Kirk and Mr. de Sausmarez draw the conclusion that a Zanzibari in the service of a French citizen is not withdrawn, as regards either his person or his property, from the jurisdiction of his natural Sovereign the Sultan of Zanzibar.

I am to observe that in the case of Charlesworth and others connected with the compulsory acquisition of land at Mombasa for the purposes of the Uganda Railway, which is referred to in the inclosed papers by Sir J. Kirk and Mr. de Sausmarez, the Judicial Officer of the East Africa Protectorate who heard the case in the Court of First Instance at Mombasa, held that the lex loci must apply to real property in the Zanzibar dominions, even though such property were in the possession of British subjects.

Notice of an appeal against the Judgment of the Court at Mombasa has been entered in the High Court of Bombay, but it is not known whether the appeal will be prosecuted, nor whether the High Court of Bombay has power to hear it, nor yet whether the question of the law applicable to real property in Zanzibar will be raised before or decided by that Court.

Should you advise that Salim and his property have not been withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Sultan—and such advice is to be foreseen from the last paragraph of your Report of the 21st August last (Document B)—it will be unnecessary, so far as concerns Salim's case itself, to trouble you with the consideration of the wider question of the law applicable to real property held by British and other foreign subjects in Zanzibar. But Lord Salisbury is in any event desirous of obtaining, for his assistance and guidance, your advice on that wider question, which is one of great importance, and with which Her Majesty's Government must be prepared to deal when it arises, as it may do at any moment, in a practical form. This question would, indeed, have been referred to you in a letter separate form that dealing with that of Salim had it not been that the two questions have been treated together in most of the papers now submitted to you.

Lord Salisbury has not failed to remark that your Report of the 21st August last expresses the opinion that Salim-bin-Abdurrahman is not, in the circumstances of the case, entitled to French protection; but, although his Lordship does not doubt that this view is in the abstract correct, he fears that it is in the highest degree improbable that the French Government will admit such a contention on its being presented to them by Her Majesty's Government.

His Lordship would, therefore, be glad if you will take into your consideration the papers herewith transmitted to you, and will favour him with your opinion as to—

1. Whether assuming that Salim is entitled, as being in the service of a French citizen, to French protection, he is, or is not, withdrawn as regards his person and his property from the jurisdiction from the Courts of the Sultan of Zanzibar.

In the event of your being of opinion that Salim and his property are, even on the supposition stated above, subject to the jurisdiction of the Sultan's Courts, Lord Salisbury would be glad to receive a statement of the grounds on which your opinion is founded; and also to be favoured with your advice as to whether the suit against Salim should be allowed to proceed, notwithstanding the protest which in that event will certainly be made by the French Government.

2. As to the law applicable to real property owned in Zanzibar by British or other foreign subjects entitled to the benefits of the Treaty of 1886 between Great Britain and Zanzibar.

Finally, I am to request you to be good enough to offer any general observations on the papers now submitted to you which you think may be of assistance to the Secretary of State in dealing with the questions arising on them.

I have, &c.

Report.

1. Assuming that Salim is entitled as being in the service of a French citizen to French protection, we are of opinion that, as he is entitled to the benefit of the provisions contained in the Treaty of 1886 between Great Britain and Zanzibar, he is withdrawn as regards his person and property from the jurisdiction of the Sultan of Zanzibar, although, as stated in the 4th paragraph of our Report of August last, the Treaty between France and Muscat of 1844 did not confer such extensive privileges.

In the British Treaty of 1886 the Article conferring a protection on the servants of British subjects follows immediately upon Article XVI which deals with the question of jurisdiction, and makes British subjects only amenable to the Consular Court, and confers upon them the privilege of exterritoriality. We do not think that this Treaty of 1886 can be construed in such a way as to exclude from the protection afforded to the servants of British subjects the right to be sued in the British Court, and as we have pointed out, by virtue of the most-favoured-nation clause, it is on the construction of the Treaty of 1886 that the rights of the servants of French subjects must be determined.

We do not think that the Treaty of 1886 can be confined as suggested by Mr. de Sausmarez and Sir John Kirk. In our opinion, therefore, the immunity for person and property enjoyed by the servants of French citizens exempts them from proceedings in the Zanzibar Court, except as mentioned in Article XVII.

2. Real property in Zanzibar owned by British or other foreign subjects entitled to the benefits of the Treaty of 1886 is, in our opinion, governed partly by the law of Zanzibar and partly by the law of the foreign subject.

In respect of all questions which relate to the character of the land, and the easements which it enjoys, or is subject to in respect of neighbouring properties, it appears to us that the law of Zanzibar must prevail. The foreign subject has acquired the land from a subject of Zanzibar, and if in the hands of the subject of Zanzibar the land itself was incapable of being applied to secular purposes, or was subject to easements, the foreign subject can take only what the subject of Zanzibar had to give. In the present case, for instance, it seems to us clear that the law of Zanzibar must be appealed to in order to determine whether the land is Wakf, and so incapable of being applied to ordinary purposes.

As regards transmission on bankruptcy or on death, by the terms of the Treaty, the law of the foreign subject must apply.

As regards the mode of transfer inter vivos between foreign subjects of the same nationality the foreign law will apply if their Government has so provided.

3. Generally. We are, therefore, of opinion that the question raised in the case of Salim-bin-Abdurrahman must be determined by the law of Zanzibar. We observe that the lessees of the property express their willingness to acquiesce in the decision of the Zanzibar Court. The jurisdiction of that Court over Salim-bin-Abdurrahman depends upon the fact that his service to the French Consul is merely colourable. For the prosecution of the suit no interference with the person of Salim-bin-Abdurrahman, and no invasion of the French Consulate are necessary. We would therefore suggest that the suit should be allowed to proceed in the Zanzibar Court. If it terminates in favour of the plaintiff an injunction will be granted which the lessees are willing to respect. If Salim-bin-Abdurrahman should himself infringe the injunction it would raise the question whether he is entitled to immunity as a servant of the French Consul. The decision of this question, of course, does not rest with the French Government only, but must also depend on the view which Her Majesty's Government take of the facts, and would have to be settled by negotiation.

Gentlemen,

Selim-bin-Seif, sentenced at Zanzibar and claimed by French as "protected person."

WITH reference to my letter of the 12th ultimo, relating to the question of the protection afforded by France to natives of Muscat, and especially to the correspondence marked (E), which was inclosed therein, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you a despatch from Her Majesty's Agent in Zanzibar, inclosing a correspondence with the French Consul at that place respecting the case of Selim-bin-Seif, who has been sentenced by a Zanzibar Court to a term of imprisonment on a charge of slave-trading, and who is claimed by the French Consul as a French-protected person.

The paper marked (B) contains the history of cases in which the French Government have claimed to exercise protection over Zanzibar subjects, and shows the grounds on which Her Majesty's Government have contested the claim. Lord Salisbury requests that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and favour him with your opinion as to whether the case of Selim-bin-Seif is one in which the French claim can be contested, and if so, on what grounds the British arguments should be based.

Report.

We are unable to see any ground for the contention of the French Consul that Selim-bin-Seif is amenable only to French jurisdiction.

The French Consul cannot, by registering a subject of Zanzibar, as a French-protected person, withdraw him from the jurisdiction of the Tribunals of Zanzibar.

Selim-bin-Seif is a subject of Zanzibar, and there appears to be absolutely no ground for the assertion of any right to treat him as a person under French protection. The fact that he has sailed in vessels which were allowed, with what justification does not appear, to fly the French flag, certainly does not justify any such contention.

We advise that Selim-bin-Seif should serve the term of imprisonment to which he has been sentenced. The French Consul or Government should be informed that he is a subject of Zanzibar, and that the facts alleged in no way cancel his allegiance to the Government of that country.

[October 10, 1898.]

Foreign Office, September 10, 1898.

Gentlemen,

Right of Sultan of Zanzibar to expel foreigners.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the question whether the Sultan of Zanzibar has the right to expel from his dominions a person under the extra-territorial jurisdiction of a foreign Power.

A copy of the British Treaty with Zanzibar, Document (A), which is the fullest of the Treaties made by foreign Powers with Zanzibar, is inclosed, and copies of the French and German Treaties, Documents (B) and (C), are also inclosed, in case you wish to refer to them.

The extent to which a foreigner is free from the jurisdiction of the local Sovereign in a country where the Sovereign of that foreigner has extra-territorial jurisdiction, depends, as his Lordship conceives, on the terms of the Treaties creating the extra-territorial jurisdiction in question, and on custom, so far as it is sufficiently continuous and sufficiently well recognized to form beyond doubt a part of the jurisprudence of the country where it exists.

There may, therefore, be a certain diversity of law in different countries where extra-territoriality obtains in regard to the expulsion of foreigners enjoying extra-territoriality.

Nevertheless, the body of law and custom regulating extra-territoriality in any one country "hors Chrétienté" is so similar to that prevailing in the others that cases occurring in one may be used to illustrate those occurring in others.

The particular question now referred to you is raised in the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General in Zanzibar, Document (D), and in Mr. Davidson's Minutes thereon. The matter of the expulsion of persons under extra-territorial jurisdiction in that Sultanate does not appear to have been discussed on any previous occasion, but it has often been raised in the Ottoman dominions, and I am to inclose a Memorandum by Sir E. Hertslet, Document (E), late the Librarian of this Department, giving an account of several cases, none of which appear, however, to show to what extent the right of expulsion exists. The paragraph of the Memorandum explanatory of the manner in which a person under British protection may be expelled by the action of the British authorities will not be to the point with regard to the present reference, because the provisions therein referred to may well not exist in the legislation of other Powers having extra-territorial jurisdiction in Turkey or other countries.

The Memorandum concludes by stating that no case appeared to be recorded in which a British subject had been expelled without the assent of the British Representative.

The papers on the case of Mr. Lillie, who was recently expelled from Siam by the Siamese authorities, but with the concurrence of the British Representative, are also inclosed, Documents (F), (G), (H), (I), and (K).

The Bulgarian case, alluded to by Sir A. Hardinge as that of M. Charnand, cannot be identified, but it is probable that he had in mind the case of M. Chadourne, a journalist under French protection. The inclosures in Mr. O'Conor's despatch No. 2 of the 1st January, 1892, given at p. 6 of the accompanying volume of Confidential Print, Document (L), contain a statement of the case, which Mr. O'Conor characterizes as "sober and accurate" The Memorandum shows that M. Chadourne had tried the patience of the Bulgarian Government beyond endurance; that its intention to expel him was made known to the French Consul, who might have prevented the necessity of the measure.

At p. 22 of the same volume, Document (L), will be found the draft of a note from the Bulgarian Minister for Foreign Affairs to the French Acting Consul at Sophia, expressing the Minister's regret that the Decree for the expulsion of M. Chadourne had not been communicated to the Consulate, and undertaking that similar Decrees would be so communicated in future, but adding that, if the person against whom the Decree of Expulsion was directed had not left the territory by the date specified in the Decree, the Bulgarian authorities would proceed to expel him. Mr. O'Conor's despatch No. 17 of the 1st February, 1892, at p. 34 of the volume, Document (L), shows that the French Government took no direct exception to the terms of this note; but, on the other hand, the note of the 1st February, 1892, from the French Ambassador at Constantinople to the Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs, printed at p. 39 of the volume, Document (L), states that, without entering into any discussion on the point of law touched in the Bulgarian note, the incident of the expulsion of M. Chadourne was considered closed.

The view taken by Her Majesty's Government of the Chadourne case may be gathered from Lord Salisbury's telegram No. 3 of the 12th January, 1892, to Mr. O'Conor (p. 15 of the volume, Document L).

The opinions of the German, of the Italian, and of the Austro-Hungarian Governments will be found stated shortly in the telegrams numbered 24, 25, and 27 on pp. 16 and 17 of the printed volume (Document L).

I have the honour to request you to take into your consideration the papers sent herewith, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your advice—

1. As to whether the Government of Zanzibar has the right to expel a person whose presence is detrimental to public peace or order, but who is under the protection of a foreign Power having extra-territorial jurisdiction in Zanzibar;

2. If so, what conditions should be observed, and what procedure should be followed in expulsion; and finally

3. I have the honour to request you to favour his Lordship with general observations which may occur to you in connection with the question.

I have, &c.

Report.

We are of opinion that the Government of Zanzibar has the right to expel a person whose presence is detrimental to public peace or order, though he is under the protection of a foreign Power having extra-territorial jurisdiction in Zanzibar.

We do not think that the permission to reside and carry on business in Zanzibar excludes the exercise of such a power. This permission must be taken to be subject to the condition that the foreigner does not act in a manner detrimental to public peace or order, nor do we think that such a Power is excluded by the stipulation that the foreigner shall be subject only to the jurisdiction of his Consular Courts. Such expulsion is not by way of punishment, but is an executive act for the protection of the State.

In the absence of any words surrendering this right expressly it must, we think, be taken still to exist.

2. We think that as a matter of comity written notice should be sent to the Representative of the foreign Power, and, unless in the most extreme cases, in which immediate action might be necessary, he should be requested to withdraw protection, or himself expel the individual, or consent to his expulsion.

But any such request should not be couched in terms which might appear to imply any waiver of the right of the Zanzibar Government to expel even without consent.

3. We think that the right of expulsion should be exercised as regards such foreigners, only in very strong cases and with the utmost circumspection. There is no general agreement of nations on the point; and Her Majesty's Government would appear from Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum at one time to have taken the view that consent was necessary.

It is obvious that grave complications might arise from the exercise of this right of expulsion, and we would suggest, that, while it should not be surrendered, it should be used sparingly, only in urgent cases, and when all diplomatic methods for obtaining expulsion have failed.

AFRICA.

The Marquess of Salisbury to the Lord Chancellor.

Restitution o slaves in the East Africa Protectorate.

THE Marquess of Salisbury presents his compliments to the Lord Chancellor and transmits to his Lordship the papers, noted in the inclosed list, relating to the question of the obligations of British subjects serving in the Administration of the East Africa Protectorate, in connection with the restitution of slaves to their owners.

The circumstances in which the question arises were set out as accurately and as fully as the information in the Foreign Office permitted, in the reference of the 20th September 189 ~~last~~ to the Law Officers of the Crown, a copy of which is inclosed (Paper A). Their Report in reply, dated the 29th November, is also inclosed (Paper B).

That Report was communicated to Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General in the Protectorate for his information and guidance.

No legislative measures have been adopted in the Protectorate since the date of the reference to the Law Officers of 189 ~~last year~~, and the position generally remains what it then was. At the beginning of September last Mr. Brewin and Mr. Duckworth, writing to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, called attention to the case of a girl named Kombo, and of her father and mother, which appeared to bear in a very direct manner upon the opinion expressed in the House of Commons by Her Majesty's Attorney-General, as to the illegality of a British subject taking part in the restoration of a slave to his owner.

The details of the case were not made clear in the letters from Messrs. Brewin and Duckworth (Papers C and D) to Mr. Chamberlain, which are alluded to above, and Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General was therefore instructed to report on it. His report has not yet been received; but meanwhile the accompanying letter (Paper E) has been received from the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, the inclosure in which contains several letters on the case, which will, perhaps, enable the Lord Chancellor to form a sufficiently clear idea of what took place.

In a telegram of the 2nd instant (Paper F), Sir A. Hardinge reports that the return of the girl Kombo and of her parents to their owner was pre-arranged; but this information does not appear to bear on the legal point now under consideration as it seems from Mr. Craufurd's letter of the 21st June, printed at page 7 of the inclosure in the letter from the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, that the owner chose to deal with the matter through the Courts of Law, in order that his ownership in the slaves might be judicially declared.

The case will evidently be brought forward in Parliament, and Lord Salisbury would, therefore, be much obliged if the Lord Chancellor would consider it, and express his opinion on the point of law which is involved in it, namely, whether a British subject acting as an Officer of the Administration of that part of the East Africa Protectorate wherein the status of slavery is recognized by the territorial law is bound to assist, within the scope of his official duties, in carrying out that law, although he be thus taking part in restoring a slave to his owner; and, if so, in what way he should protect himself against the law which, according to the opinion expressed in the House of Commons by Her Majesty's Attorney-General, he would be breaking in so doing.

Lord Salisbury would be much obliged if the Lord Chancellor would also be good enough to make any general observations which may occur to him in connection with the case, and which his Lordship may consider as likely to be of assistance to the Secretary of State in dealing with the conflict of law which appears to exist.

The matter is of some urgency, as Mr. Brodrick is receiving a deputation of the Anti-Slavery Committee of the Society of Friends on the 13th instant, and the question is likely to be raised in the House of Commons as soon as it reassembles, in the debate on the Address.

The correspondence forwarded in the letter from the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society mentions also the case of a girl named Heri Karibu. The judgment delivered in this case by Mr. Craufurd, Her Majesty's Sub-Commissioner at Mombasa, sitting as Judge of the Native Provincial Court of the East Africa Protectorate, will be found at page 4 of the accompaning number of the "Zanzibar Gazette" for 4th May last (Paper G). This judgment is sent to the Lord Chancellor, as it contains a reference to the opinion expressed in the House by the Attorney-General, and showing the view which has been taken of it by Mr. Craufurd in his judicial capacity.

Report.

I think the opinion of the Law Officers of the 29th ~~September~~ November, 1897, is accurate, in so far as it states the question of law.

The speech of the Attorney-General and of Sir Robert Reid, if I am to understand what they said as applicable to the mere administration of the law existing in Zanzibar, is, I think, quite inaccurate, and, indeed, not consistent with the opinion in question; but the difficulty of dealing with either of the speeches arises from the vagueness and generality of the propositions laid down. It is quite true, as Sir Robert Reid said, that there are many Statutes binding upon British subjects wherever they are—e.g., Acts prohibiting slave-trading; and I quite agree that for a British subject to buy or sell a slave would, under a Statute, be a crime in him wherever the sale was effected.

But no one, so far as I can judge from the papers, has been guilty of any such crime. Then we must inquire what has in fact been done, and what Statute has made it an offence. I am not aware of any Statute upon the subject, and to make an offence of it there must be a Statute.

To say that it is contrary to the Common Law, as is said in the third page (A) of the letter of Mr. Allen, and also by Bishop Tucker, is simply ridiculous, and exhibits a total ignorance of the history of the slave question.

I should have thought, after the Judgment of Lord Stowell in the Grose case, concurred in as it was by that great American Judge, Story, no one could be found to maintain so untenable a proposition, and if that proposition is as wholly baseless, as in my opinion it is, then it is obvious to ask what Statute has made it illegal in a British subject to administer the law of a foreign State which admits slavery as one of its institutions.

As I have said, it is quite out of the question to argue the illegality of either slavery, or even slave-trading, as contrary to the Common Law. The British Legislature has repeatedly recognized the legality of both. An Act of George II actually made negroes in the plantations seizable in execution for debt, and the great Statute of 1833 recited the right of the owners to their slaves, and gave the compensation for their manumission of them in return for the right which that Statute took away.

I would suggest that the Law Officers should themselves be asked what act herein referred to is a breach of British law, and, if so, of what law.

I concur in Mr. Craufurd's reasoning so far as this particular question is concerned; but I am bound to add that I am not quite satisfied that his elaborate Judgment for the liberation of the slave, Karibu, is one which would be supported upon the grounds on which he relies.

So far, I have advised simply upon the question of law; but, as matter of policy, I should think it would be wise to get educated natives to administer the Slave Law, as, indeed, I think Sir A. Hardinge suggests himself; and, as a matter of argument, I think it might be pointed out what an enormous advance has been made by acting with the good-will of the Sultan, and how dangerous it is for the ultimate success of the cause of total abolition not to respect and administer honestly the reservations, which are small and temporary, while these reservations last.

P.S.—Since writing the above I have received the despatch of Sir A. Hardinge on the subject of the number of slaves enfranchised. What peril there would be of interfering with such figures if we exhibited any disposition not to keep our side of the bargain!

My dear Webster, Foreign Office, January 31, 1899.

Aid in restoration of fugitiv slaves.

THE position in which the question of recapturing slaves on the mainland of East Africa in the Seyyidiyeh is left by the opinion signed by the Law Officers on November 29 is very difficult.

In the second paragraph, marked in red in the print herewith, you appear to think it possible to frame some rules by which the British Administrators may be relieved of the odium of giving active assistance for the recovery of slaves, without any breach of faith on our part towards the Sultan of Zanzibar.

The question has been carefully considered by Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour, and I am directed to ask you privately whether you will kindly consider with the Solicitor-General, by what means the non-surrender of slaves may be made consistent with the promise to preserve the Law of Islam.

It is considered better to ask this privately, so as to give the opportunity of sending instructions to Hardinge as to practice, rather than to base ourselves on a strict interpretation of law which may not concur with policy.

Yours, &c.
(Signed) ST. JOHN BRODRICK.

P.S.—As early an answer as you can conveniently give will be much esteemed.

ST. J. B.

Communicated by Sir R. Webster, February 6, 1899, in reply to Mr. Brodrick's letter of January 31, 1899.

What we suggest is that it should be left to the owner of the slave who has escaped to seize his property himself.

We think that he ought to be required after any such seizure forthwith to give notice of the fact to the nearest Magistrate, and that he should be subject to a penalty if he fails to do so. This will be some safeguard against the seizure of persons who are not in fact slaves, and will enable the Magistrate to check in some measure cruel treatment of a recovered slave.

The issue of search warrants is a measure of very exceptional nature, which in this country is employed only in aid of the Criminal Law. It does not appear that it existed in the Protectorate before the country was taken over by Great Britain. Moreover, having regard to what has passed in the House of Commons on the subject, we think it impossible successfully to defend the executing by British officers of forcible process for the purpose of retaking and handing over an escaped slave to his master. It does not appear that there was any process of this kind in force in the territory over which we have assumed the Protectorate, or that when we assumed it we undertook to maintain in force any such process. The obligation to maintain the Law of Islam is satisfied if property in slaves is recognized in the Courts and damages awarded against those who entice them away or harbour them, and as against the slave himself, so as to be a bar to any proceedings taken by him as against his master.

We have nothing further to add to our Report of the 29th November, 1897.

[August 8, 1899.]

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, July 24, 1899.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list, which relate to a proposed Order in Council, for the purpose of amending in certain respects "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897." East Africa O. in C.

The draft of the proposed Order will be found in Mr. Albert Gray's letter of the 27th November last (Document A); the copy of the draft with that letter has been corrected in ink so as to show the several amendments made in it up to the date of Mr. Albert Gray's letter of the 29th May last (Document B).

As will be gathered from Mr. Gray's letters, the draft Order has been prepared in consultation with Mr. Ralph Cator, the Judicial Officer of the East Africa Protectorate, and it has been shown in its present final form to Sir Arthur Hardinge, Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General for the Protectorate, who has informed this Department that he has nothing further to say on the subject.

Mr. Albert Gray's letter of the 27th November last (Document A) contains, besides the draft of the Order, explanatory notes showing the object of the several clauses, and it appears, therefore, to be unnecessary that I should trouble you with a statement of the reasons which have led Lord Salisbury to think the new Order necessary.

I am, however, to observe that the words in "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897" (Document D), which it is proposed to repeal by Article 14 of the draft Order, were inserted in error in the Order of 1897. They were re-enacted by an Order of the Secretary of State, dated the 30th September, 1898, a copy of which is inclosed (in Document C); but it is thought that it will be desirable definitively to repeal the excepting words by Order in Council, so that they may be cancelled by a document of the same authority as that which enacted them.

The undermentioned documents are also transmitted to you, in case you may wish to refer to them.

The existing principal East Africa Order in Council, that, namely, of the 7th July, 1897 (Document D).

The Order of the Secretary of State of the 1st May, 1898, defining the officers by whom, in East Africa, the functions of various officers mentioned in Indian Acts, &c., shall be exercised (Document E).

native Sovereign acknowledges the Protectorate of the Queen confers on Her Majesty jurisdiction over the natives of the protected State, the 14th February, 1895 (Document F). It will, however, be seen that Her Majesty has already, by Articles 52 and following of "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897" (Document D), assumed jurisdiction over the natives of the Protectorate so far as concerns the establishment of Courts of Justice. The draft Order now submitted assumes also, by Article 9, the right to legislate in the case of natives by the issue of Queen's Regulations, which will be binding on them.

I have the honour to request you to take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the draft Order in Council may properly be submitted to Her Majesty as it stands, or whether it requires any, and, if so, what alteration or amendment.

I have, &c.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has power and jurisdiction within the territories comprised within the limits of the East Africa Protectorate:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers on this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise, in Her Majesty vested, is pleased by and with the advice of her Privy Council to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. In this Order—

"The Principal Order" means "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897," and any other Order relating to the East Africa Protectorate.

2. For the purposes of the Principal Order and this Order—

(i.) "British subject" includes a British-protected person, that is to say, a person who either (a) is a native of any Protectorate of Her Majesty beyond Africa and Arabia, and is for the time being in the East Africa Protectorate, or (b) by virtue of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise enjoys Her Majesty's protection in the Protectorate.

(ii.) "Native" means any person who is not a British subject, as hereinbefore defined, or of European or American race or parentage, but as respects such portions of the Protectorate as are under the sovereignty of the Sultan of Zanzibar, does not include a person who, by virtue of any Treaty between Zanzibar and any foreign Power (other than Her Majesty), is exempt from the jurisdiction of the Sultan of Zanzibar.

3.—(i.) The Protectorate Court shall ordinarily sit at Mombasa, but may also, as occasion requires, sit at any other place in the Protectorate.

(ii.) The Judicial Officer shall be styled "Her Majesty's Judge for the East Africa Protectorate," and is in this order referred to as the "Protectorate Judge."

(iii.) The Protectorate Judge may visit any Court in the Protectorate, and examine any Court books, registers, or records, and give directions as to the proper keeping thereof.

(iv.) In case of the illness of the Protectorate Judge or of his temporary absence from Mombasa, the Commissioner may appoint either a person qualified to be appointed Protectorate Judge or an officer employed in the civil administration of the Protectorate to act as Protectorate Judge. When the Protectorate Judge is absent on judicial duty within the Protectorate, the Acting Judge shall not hold sittings elsewhere than at Mombasa except with the consent of the Commissioner. The sittings of the Protectorate Judge and of the Acting Judge shall severally be deemed sittings of the Protectorate Court.

4. Subject to the other provisions of the Principal Order, the Code of Criminal Procedure, and the other enactments relating to the administration of criminal justice in India for the time being applied to the Protectorate, shall have effect as if the Protectorate were a province of India. The full Court for Zanzibar shall be deemed to be the High Court, and the powers both of the Governor-General in Council and of the Local Government under those enactments shall be exercisable ~~by~~ subject to any directions of the Secretary of State, ~~or with his previous or subsequent assent~~ by the Commissioner.

Until other provision is made in exercise of the powers conferred by the Criminal Procedure Code, the Protectorate shall be a Sessions Division, the Protectorate Court shall be the Sessions Court, and the Protectorate Judge shall be the Sessions Judge.

5. Subject to the other provisions of the Principal Order, the Code of Civil Procedure, "The Bombay Civil Courts Act, 1869," and the other enactments relating to the administration of civil justice for the time being applicable to the Protectorate, shall have effect as if the Protectorate were the Presidency of Bombay, the Court for Zanzibar shall be deemed to be the High Court, and the powers both of the Governor-General in Council and the Local Government under those enactments shall be exercisable ~~by~~ subject to any directions of the Secretary of State, ~~or with his previous or subsequent assent~~ by the Commissioner.

Until other provision is made in exercise of the powers conferred by "The Bombay Civil Courts Act, 1869," or otherwise, the Protectorate shall be deemed to be one district, the Protectorate Court shall be the District Court or Principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction in the district, and the Protectorate Judge shall be the District Judge.

6. The provisions of Part V, VI, and VII of the Principal Order relating to the Protectorate Court or the Court (except Articles 23, 31, 39, 41, 42, and 44) shall apply to all Criminal and Civil Courts established under this Order in the several provinces of the Protectorate, subject, however, to the limits of jurisdiction of the respective Courts.

7. Where under any enactment of the Statute Law of England, which is applicable to the Protectorate, it is provided that the powers or jurisdiction of two Justices of the Peace may or shall be exercised by a Stipendiary Magistrate sitting alone, such powers or jurisdiction may or shall be exercised by the Commissioner and by every Sub-Commissioner and District Officer within his province or district.

8. In Article 45 of the Principal Order the words "and published as the Commissioner directs" shall be substituted for the words "and published as he directs."

9. All Queen's Regulations made or to be made under Articles 45 and 46 of the Principal Order shall, unless a contrary intention appears, extend to natives. and may, in relation to natives, comprise such special provisions, modifications, and penalties as the Commissioner may think fit, having regard to the powers of Native Courts and other considerations.

Any breach of Queen's Regulations by a native shall be cognizable only in the proper Native Court.

10. The power of making Queen's Regulations under Article 45 of the Principal Order is hereby extended to the making of Regulations with respect to the registration of documents purporting or operating to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish any right, title, or interest in or over immovable property situate in the Protectorate, and any Regulations under this Article may prescribe the period within which any documents are to be registered, and such penalties for non-registration, whether by stamp duties or otherwise, and whether in lieu of or in addition to the penalties mentioned in the said Article 45 as may seem fit.

Provided that nothing in any Regulations made under this Article shall make any instrument inadmissible in evidence in any criminal proceedings.

As from the time when any Regulations under this Article come into force, Article 47 of the Principal Order shall be repealed, without prejudice to anything done or suffered thereunder.

11. The Commissioner may, by any Queen's Regulations made under the powers of the Principal Order, or this Order, fix such penalties for the breach of any Regulations as may seem proper, and where no penalty is so fixed, a person found guilty of such breach shall, on conviction, be liable to a fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or to imprisonment of either kind which may extend to two months, or both, in addition to such forfeiture as is mentioned in Article 45 of the Principal Order.

12. Every person subject to the Principal Order shall be liable to be summoned as a witness in a Native Court: provided that where the officer holding the Native Court is not a European British subject, the summons or process must be countersigned by a Judge of a Native Court who is a European subject, and any proceedings against any person for disobeying such summons or process must be taken in the proper Court having jurisdiction in the like cases under this Order.

13. Expressions defined in any Order in Council relating to the Protectorate shall have the same respective meanings in any Rules, Regulations, or Orders made under the authority of that Order, unless other provision is made or the context otherwise requires.

14. The following provisions of the Principal Order are hereby repealed:—

Article 3, paragraphs (v), (vii), and (viii).
Article 7, paragraphs (iii) and (vii).
Article 14.

Article 30.
Article 45, the words "and published as he directs," and the last paragraph of that Article.
Article 53.
Schedule, the words and figures "except section 331."

15. This Order may be cited as "The East Africa Order in Council, 1899," and shall be construed with the Principal Order.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Mr. Chamberlain.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, August 17, 1899.

Claims for losses through insurrection in Sierra Leone.

WE were honoured with your commands, signified in Sir E. Wingfield's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by you to submit, for our consideration, certain claims for compensation for losses incurred by various persons in consequence of the recent insurrection in Sierra Leone.

That the claims hitherto presented for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government had been of two classes, namely: (a) claims for damage to person and property done by the insurgents; and (b) claims for damages to property done by officers in the naval and military service of Her Majesty in the course of the operations taken for the suppression of the insurrection. That, in both cases, claims for compensation had been made both by British subjects and by foreigners resident in Sierra Leone, either in pursuance of missionary enterprise or for purposes of trade. That in all these cases Her Majesty's Government had hitherto declined to entertain the question of compensation.

That with the details of the former class of cases enumerated above you did not think it necessary to trouble us, but in those cases in which property was destroyed by Her Majesty's officers engaged in the suppression of the insurrection it appeared necessary to draw our attention to the facts.

That the Palma Trading Company were possessed of a trading station at Manoh Salijah and another station at Sulymah. That the latter station was burnt by the insurgents, who then advanced to attack in force the station at Manoh Salijah. That Captain Henderson, R.N., who was in command of Her Majesty's ship "Fox," appeared to have come to the conclusion that it was impossible to defend this station with the force at his command, and that it was necessary to destroy it to prevent its falling into the hands of the rebels. That the buildings were accordingly set on fire by his orders and destroyed. That Sir E. Wingfield was to inclose a copy of the report of Captain Henderson of what took place on this occasion, and also a print of certain statutory declarations made by Mr. Lowry and Mr. Gordon, persons in the employ of the Palma Trading Company, who were present when the destruction took place.

That the Compagnie Française de l'Afrique were owners of a station at Mokate, near to Manoh Salijah, which was exposed to the same danger of attack by the rebels as that of the Palma Trading Company at Manoh Salijah. That this factory was destroyed by shell fire from the "Fox" while in occupation of the rebels, who had seized it on the embarkation of the British sailors and refugees on board the "Fox." That it would be seen from the report of Captain Henderson above referred to, and from a statutory declaration of M. Schultz, the chief agent of the French Company at Mokate, that there was a disagreement between Her Majesty's officer and M. Schultz as to whether the latter consented to the destruction of his factory, but it was to be observed that as the factory when destroyed was in the occupation of the rebels, its destruction was apparently justifiable as a military operation in the course of the suppression of the insurrection.

That the matters submitted for our consideration appeared to you to involve the determination of the question how far and under what circumstances compensation was payable for the destruction of the property of private persons under military necessity.

That Sir E. Wingfield was to transmit to us a copy of a Confidential Memorandum, prepared in 1896 by the Parliamentary Counsel, with reference to the powers of Government in cases of emergency, and he was also to transmit prints of various Reports of the Law Officers to the Foreign Office, together with a copy of a Memorandum prepared in that Department, from which latter document it would be seen that Her Majesty's Government had refused to compensate persons who, under somewhat similar circumstances, suffered losses during the bombardment of Zanzibar in 1896.

That Sir E. Wingfield was to request us to take these matters into our consideration and to advise you—

1. Whether Her Majesty's Government were under any legal liability to pay compensation to (a) British subjects, (b) foreigners, in respect of damage to person or property caused by the insurgents during the rebellion in Sierra Leone, and, if so, upon what grounds.

2. Whether any compensation was payable (a) to British subjects, and (b) to foreigners, in respect of damage done to person or property by the action of Her Majesty's naval or military officers engaged in the suppressson of the insurrection, and, if so, upon what grounds.

3. Whether the destruction of property by Her Majesty's officers under such circumstances, without the consent of the persons whose property was destroyed, afforded any, and what, ground for compensation; and,

4. Generally.

In obedience to your commands we have taken the papers submitted to us into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

1. That Her Majesty's Government are not under any legal liability to pay compensation either to British subjects or to foreigners in respect of damage caused during the rebellion in Sierra Leone.

No Government guarantees either its own subjects or the subjects of Foreign States against the possibility of insurrection, and all residents in a State must take the chance of damage arising from such causes. In the case of foreigners the claim might be put forward by their Government, if it could be clearly established that the damage was the result of the neglect of some obvious and necessary precaution on the part of the Government of the State in which the insurrection took place, or that the insurrection was caused by misconduct or neglect on the part of the Government itself or its officials. Nothing of this kind has been suggested here.

2 and 3. There is, in our opinion, no right to compensation on the part either of British subjects or of foreigners in respect of damage done by the acts of Her Majesty's officers in suppressing the insurrection, so long as they acted reasonably and properly for the purpose of military operations.

If property be used by the officers of the State for the purpose of military operations, a claim for compensation for such use and for any damages resulting therefrom may be sustainable, but the limits within which such a claim may arise are ill-defined, and there is no clear authority on the subject. The question is not raised by the circumstances of the present case.

Of course, if wanton or unnecessary damage had been done by the officers of the Government, a claim for compensation would arise, which might, in some cases, be enforced by action against the persons actively concerned in such wrongful act, and which might also afford just ground for a claim for compensation by the Government, so far at least as foreigners are concerned. But nothing of this kind apparently can be suggested here. The rebels were advancing upon the factories which were destroyed by Captain Henderson, and we infer that he thought it expedient to destroy them to prevent their occupation by the enemy. If the enemy had not occupied them as military posts they would probably have destroyed them themselves, as in the case of other factories; so that it is difficult to see that any damage can be said to have resulted from Captain Henderson's action.

We presume there is no ground for attacking the action of other officers of Her Majesty's Government as being unreasonable or more than was called for by the military necessities of the case. We are, therefore, unable to see that there is in either of these cases any right to compensation.

4. We think that Her Majesty's Government should not admit any such claim as a matter of right; but while all legal liability is repudiated, it may be matter for consideration whether, on grounds of policy, some allowance should be made to those whose property has been destroyed by British officers, as a matter of grace and favour. It is hardly for us to advise on this point, and, indeed, the circumstances are not before us in sufficient detail to enable us to express any opinion upon it. Of course, it may be very difficult to recognize any particular case without leading to the putting forward of a large number of claims against the Government in other cases.

If it should be determined to award any compensation as a matter of favour, no distinction ought to drawn between the property of British subjects and that of foreigners destroyed under similar circumstances.

We have, &c.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 16, 1899.

Claims of Messrs. Sinderam and Walker on Portugal and of French missionaries on Niger Company for depredations by natives of Protectorates.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the paper noted in the margin (Paper A), which relates to a claim which two traders of British Central Africa have brought against the Portuguese Government in respect of goods looted from them by natives of Portuguese territory in which the claimants were travelling.

The general responsibility of Portugal for what takes place within her territories or Protectorates is a matter which does not seem doubtful, and it is accentuated in the present instance by the permission given to Messrs. Sinderam and Walker by the Portuguese authorities to go on the expedition, and by the issue to them of "Billets de residence" and of licences to carry arms.

Speaking of Protectorates, Mr. W. E. Hall, in his "Treatise on International Law," 4th edition, 1895 (p. 131), says that the assumption of a Protectorate affects the Protecting Power with responsibility towards the rest of the civilized States of the world. "They are barred by the presence of the Protecting State from exacting redress by force for any wrongs which their subjects may suffer at the hands of the native Rulers or people. That State must consequently be bound to see that a reasonable measure of security is afforded to foreign subjects and property within the protected territory, and to prevent acts of depredation or hostility being done by its inhabitants." After observing that such territories are at present not ripe for the administration of European law as between the natives themselves, and that in such circumstances practice must be extremely elastic, he goes on to say: "A foreign Government, then, can have no right to ask that any definite amount of control shall be exercised in its interest, or that any definite organization shall be established."

In speaking of "spheres of influence," Mr. Hall says:

"The business of a European Power within its sphere of influence is to act as a restraining and directing force. It endeavours to foster commerce, to secure the safety of traders and travellers, and, without interfering with the Native Government, or with native habits or customs, to prepare the way for acceptance of more organized guidance. No jurisdiction is assumed, no internal or external Sovereign Power is taken out of the hands of the tribal Chief; no definite responsibility, consequently, is incurred. Foreigners enter the country with knowledge of these circumstances, and, therefore, to a great extent, at their peril (p. 134)."

In a Memorandum dated the 5th November, 1892, on Government responsibility in Protectorates and spheres of influence for the acts of a Chartered Company, and with special reference to French claims for the loss of Mission property in Uganda, the late Lord Chancellor Herschell said: "The fact that the Company's enterprise has received the sanction of the British Government, and that we should not, I presume, be prepared to permit France to make good such claims as she may have against the Company by force of arms, &c., as it seems to me impose some obligation upon us. If French citizens had been wronged by native Rulers to whose rights the Company succeeded, this would have been her recognized remedy. If we interpose to prevent her adopting it, I think we necessarily take on ourselves at least the obligation, if the claim be a just one, of pressing it upon the Company, and that France may properly insist that we should do so."

Arguing from the above premises it would seem that a claim would lie against the Portuguese Government in the present case, although the circumstances are not precisely similar to those which occurred in Uganda during the Catholic and Protestant hostilities in 1892.

A case occurred in 1895 in the German possessions on Lake Nyasa, where some men who had landed from Her Majesty's ship "Pioneer" were attacked by a neighbouring tribe called the Wa-Mpoto, who carried off one of the party who had been injured, but, on being pursued, abandoned him.

The incident was reported to Captain Berndt, the Acting Administrator of the German possessions, and he landed a party of soldiers and destroyed the village of the natives concerned. He also confiscated a number of goats belonging to them, and gave some of them as a recompense to the men who had been attacked.

No claim, however, appears to have been advanced in respect of the outrage. The reparation was spontaneous, but it may be regarded as an acknowledgment of responsibility on the part of the German officials.

The accompanying printed Memorandum by Sir E. Hertslet (Confidential No. 6647) gives some particulars as to the practice of States in regard to the conduct of uncivilized tribes on their frontiers. Though it scarcely bears upon the present question, it will be observed that it concludes by stating (page 6) that it is not customary to demand compensation for depredations committed by wild tribes on the frontiers of States.

I am also to transmit to you a letter from the Niger Company respecting a claim which has been made against them by the "Société des Missions Africaines," whose Station at Illah was destroyed by some freebooting African natives.

This claim appears to be of a somewhat similar nature to that which has been brought against the Portuguese Government by Messrs. Sinderam and Walker, and should apparently be decided on like considerations.

I am to request that you will take all these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion—first, as to whether the claim which has been preferred against the Portuguese Government by Messrs. Sinderam and Walker is such as may properly be supported by Her Majesty's Government; and, secondly, whether the French missionaries' claim should be met by the Niger Company.

Lord Salisbury would also be glad to be furnished with any general observations which you may have to offer on the two cases now submitted, more especially in regard to the effect which any decision taken in the matter by Her Majesty's Government may have with respect to the eventuality of similar claims being made against this country.

I am to add that, on the representations of Her Majesty's Government, the Portuguese Government have sent a considerable expedition to punish the natives who plundered Messrs. Sinderam and Walker, and that a British force from the British Central Africa Protectorate is co-operating with the Portuguese troops.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion the liability for claims of this kind must depend upon the question whether there has been a failure to take reasonable precautions against the occurrence of such outrages. This is a question of degree. The same security cannot be attained in an African Protectorate as that which is enjoyed in a more settled country. The Government of the Protectorate has fulfilled its duty to other States if it has taken such steps for the protection of life and property as under the circumstances might reasonably be expected.

There is no sufficient evidence to show that the Portuguese Government have neglected this duty, and that the outrage in question has been the result of such neglect. In the absence of such evidence we cannot advise that any formal demand for compensation should be made. Informal representations may be made in the interest of the claimants, and if a fine can be imposed on the offending tribes, it might be applied in compensating Messrs. Sinderam and Walker. But we cannot, under present circumstances, advise that compensation should be insisted on as a matter of right.

In like manner we think that there is nothing to show that the loss of the French missionaries was the result of default on the part of the Niger Company. The Company cannot be regarded as guaranteeing the safety of the property of missionaries in such a territory, and we do not think that satisfaction of the claim should be pressed on the Company.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 6, 1899.

Mr. Rule's Pearl Fisheries Concession off East Africa Protectorate.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to an application made by Mr. Rule, a British subject, for a Concession or lease of certain pearl and other shell-fish fisheries off the coast of the East Africa Protectorate.

The application was originally made for a Concession in a more exclusive sense than at present, and formed the subject of your Report of the 16th May last. That Report (Paper H) will be found in the inclosed papers, together with the documents on which it was written; they bear the same distinctive lettering as is mentioned in the reference to you of the 3rd April last (Paper G).

I have the honour to request you to take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the draft lease which gives the proposed Concession as now asked for, and which will be found in Mr. Rule's letter of the 10th July last (Paper K), is free from the objections which arose on the original form of the Concession, and whether, in your opinion, the lease now submitted to you in the above-mentioned document (Paper K) is one that can properly be granted by the Administration of the Protectorate.

Finally, I have the honour to request you to favour his Lordship with any observations which may occur to you as likely to be of use to him in dealing with the matter.

I have, &c.

We are of opinion that the draft lease now proposed is free from the objections which arose on the former proposal. We do not think that a lease of specified banks, with an option of a lease of any other banks which Mr. Rule may be the first to discover, is obnoxious to the provision against monopolies.

We presume that the clause as to renewal is meant to give this right only once, and not in perpetuity. It would, in our opinion, be improper to grant such a right in perpetuity.

The lease ought to be settled, as proposed, by Conveyancing Counsel, and care should be taken to see that there are proper provisions for the effective working of the banks leased.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, October 23, 1899.

Treatment of arms, food-stuffs, &c., during war in South Africa.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list which relate to the treatment of arms, ammunition, food-stuffs, &c., during the continuance of the state of war which exists between this country on the one side, and the South African Republic and the Orange Free State on the other.

It may be assumed that all other countries, whether they have issued formal declarations of neutrality or not, are at present in the position of neutrals.

In the case of Portugal, however, the status of absolute neutrality is to a certain extent qualified as follows:—

The Portuguese Province of Mozambique is the only non-British territory adjacent to the Republics, and affords them their only access to the sea except through British territory; and in view of this fact, an Agreement has recently been signed between the British and Portuguese Governments, under which the latter undertakes not to permit the "importation and passage of arms and of munitions of war destined for the Transvaal," and also undertakes "not to proclaim neutrality" during the war. The object of the latter undertaking is to prevent British ships of war coming under belligerent disqualifications and restrictions in Portuguese ports.

The principal instructions issued to the British Colonial and Naval authorities will be found in the inclosed papers. I have the honour to call especial attention to the telegram of the 7th instant (Document A) to the Naval Commander-in-chief at the Cape of Good Hope, inclosed in my Minute of the 8th instant (Document B); to the draft of the 13th instant (Document C) to the Admiralty; and to the telegram sent in consequence to the Commander-in-chief, as inclosed in the Admiralty letter of the 14th instant (Document D). It will be observed that this telegram does not reproduce the penultimate paragraph of the draft of the 13th instant to the Admiralty.

The Colonial Office letter of the 19th instant (Document E) contains a telegram from the High Commissioner in South Africa on the treatment of munitions of war, of food-stuffs, and of enemy's property on British territory; this telegram has already been before you, and the same letter contains the proposed answer, which you have approved.

The circumstances are in one respect abnormal, owing to the fact that neither of the two Republics, between which and this country a state of war unfortunately now exists, possesses any seaboard, and that consequently no goods, whether of a contraband or other nature, can reach an ulterior hostile destination except through a neutral or a British port, and thence by subsequent overland conveyance through neutral or British territory. It has been suggested that this fact may, having regard to the doctrines of British, as opposed to United States', Prize Courts on the subject of neutral versus hostile destination, and to the views publicly maintained by Her Majesty's Government from time to time, form an important factor in your consideration of the questions now submitted to you.

Finally, I am to call attention to the accompanying letter (Document F) from the Admiralty, containing an account of the seizure of a consignment of gold on the British vessel "Avondale Castle" by Her Majesty's ship "Partridge."

Before concurring in the despatch of the telegram to the High Commissioner contained in the Colonial Office letter of the 19th instant, Lord Salisbury wishes to have the benefit of your advice on certain general questions relating to the course which should be followed with regard to goods belonging to or destined for the enemy. I have therefore the honour to request you to take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and to favour the Secretary of State with your opinion on the following questions:—

Many of the points which are raised in them have been dealt with either wholly or in part in the Reports and advice which you have tendered to this Department and the Colonial Office and Admiralty respectively, but Lord Salisbury thinks that it will be convenient not only to Her Majesty's Government and to the various Departments concerned, but to yourselves, if you will be good enough to deal with them collectively in the form in which they are now submitted.

(A.) Generally:—

1. In what circumstances and to what extent can food-stuffs with a hostile destination be considered as contraband of war.

2. Whether, and if so in what circumstances and on what grounds, can goods, in their nature contraband of war, lawfully be removed by the local police, or customs or other authorities, from a neutral vessel in British territorial waters; or whether in any case where such neutral vessel is stopped and searched for contraband of war, either on the high seas or in the territorial waters of either belligerent, the goods alleged to be contraband must not be left on board, and the vessel and cargo taken in for adjudication before a duly constituted Prize Court.

3 Whether goods the property of, or consigned to enemy individuals, and whether such goods be (a) in their nature contraband, and (β) not contraband of war, can lawfully be detained when found on a neutral vessel in British territorial waters.

4. Whether goods, such as are mentioned in the previous question, can lawfully be detained when found on a British vessel in British territorial waters; and

(B.) With special reference to the peculiar circumstances of the present hostilities:

Can a neutral vessel, whose destination is either a neutral or a British port—but whose cargo contains contraband of war with an ulterior hostile destination to the Transvaal or Orange Free State, which can only be attained by transhipment and by overland conveyance through neutral or British territory—lawfully be detained by Her Majesty's ships of war, either on the high seas or in British territorial waters.

6. Whether goods, of whatever nature, consigned to enemy individuals in the Transvaal or Orange Free State are not, if once landed in British territory after the outbreak of hostilities, liable to seizure as being the property of one belligerent in the territory of the other.

7. Whether, if the answer to the previous question be in the affirmative, enemy goods on a British merchant-vessel coming into British territorial waters, after the outbreak of hostilities, may not technically be liable to seizure on the vessel while she is within the territorial waters, on the ground that in this case the ship, as well as the water on which she is floating for the time being, is British territory.

(C.) Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, and to the answers which you may return to the foregoing questions, has it now become, in your opinion, incumbent on, or desirable for, Her Majesty's Government to issue any public Notice or Proclamation on the subject of the establishment of Prize Courts or otherwise, beyond the Proclamation (G), of which a copy is inclosed, issued by Her Majesty's High Commissioner in South Africa on the 12th October last.

These questions are framed with a view of ascertaining what is the strict measure of the legal rights possessed by Her Majesty's Government, and how far action already taken, or to be taken in the future by them, can be justified by such doctrines of naval prize or other international or semi-international law, as can at present be described as established and generally accepted.

Lord Salisbury will, however, be much obliged if, in dealing with the matters specifically raised in these questions, you will also be good enough to offer such additional observations and suggestions as you think will be useful in dealing with the whole subject.

WITH reference to my other letter of this day's date respecting the treatment of contraband of war, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the draft of a letter which has been addressed to the Colonial Office on the subject.*

In view of the large amount of munitions of war and food-stuffs which, as Her Majesty's Government are informed, is being carried to the Portuguese port of Lourenço Marques, and the ultimate destination of which is undoubtedly the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, it became necessary at once and before awaiting your Report to issue provisional instructions as to the action to be taken in the matter by the British naval authorities.

I have the honour to request you to take the inclosed draft into your consideration, in connection with my other letter of this day's date, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to what modifications, if any, should be made in the instructions which have been provisionally issued.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report

(A.) Generally:— 1. In what circumstances and to what extent can food-stuffs with a hostile destination be considered as contraband of war.	(A) 1. Food-stuffs with a hostile destination can be considered contraband of war, only if they are supplies for the enemy's forces. It is not sufficient that they are capable of being so used, it must be shown that this was in fact their destination at the time of seizure. We, submit, for consideration that any extension of the doctrine of contraband as applied to food-stuffs would not be for the interests of this country.
2. Whether, and if so in what circumstances and on what grounds can	2. In every case in which goods supposed to be contraband are found on board goods in their nature contraband of war lawfully be removed by the local police, or customs, or other authorities from a neutral vessel in British territorial waters; or whether in any case where such neutral vessel is stopped and searched for contraband of war, either on the high seas or in the territorial waters of either belligerent, the goods alleged to be contraband must not be left on board, and the vessel and cargo taken in for adjudication before a duly constituted Prize Court.	a neutral vessel, the goods should be left on board, and the vessel and cargo taken for adjudication before a Prize Court. Such goods cannot be lawfully removed from the neutral vessel even though she is in British waters.

3. Whether goods the property of, or consigned to enemy individuals, and whether such goods be (α) in their nature contraband, and (β) not contraband of war can lawfully be detained when found on a neutral vessel in British territorial waters.	3. The neutral flag covers the goods not being contraband of war even while the vessel is navigating British waters, and they cannot be detained. If the goods are contraband, the vessel with its cargo should be brought in for adjudication.
4. Whether goods, such as are mentioned in the previous question, can lawfully be detained when found on a British vessel in British territorial waters.	4. As regards private property of individuals of the enemy's State not being contraband of war, it would be liable to be detained when found on a British ship, navigating British territorial waters, only in cases in which it would be liable to seizure if the ship were on the high seas. It would be liable to seizure in both these cases if the vessel were trading with the enemy, an offence which renders the vessel also liable to condemnation. We are however not aware of any instance in which this offence has been held to have been committed where the destination of the vessel was to a neutral port, on the ground that the ultimate destination of the goods was hostile. We are disposed to think that it may be committed under these circumstances, but the point is not covered by authority so far as we know. We should point out that this question is probably of practical importance only as far as contraband of war is concerned. As regards such goods as are contraband of war, we think that they should be brought in for adjudication along with the vessel whether found on the high seas, or in British waters. To guard against misapprehension we should add that we have assumed that it is not intended to exercise the obsolete right to confiscate the private property of individual enemies under all circumstances.
(B.) With special reference to the peculiar circumstances of the present hostilities: Can a neutral vessel, whose destination is either a neutral or a British port—but whose cargo contains contraband of war with an ulterior hostile destination to the Transvaal or Orange Free State, which can only be reached by transhipment and	(B.) 5. In answer to this question we think it best to repeat the opinion already given by us on the subject of seizure on the high seas, or in British waters which is as follows:— "1. After the outbreak of war a merchant-vessel belonging, to a neutral State, may be visited on the high seas, or in the waters of the belligerent nations, and, if

by overland conveyance through neutral or British territory—lawfully be detained by Her Majesty's ships of war, either on the high seas or in British territorial waters.	found carrying contraband of war, belonging to the enemy, may be seized and carried into port for adjudication before a Prize Court. "It depends on the circumstances whether the ship as well as the cargo is liable to condemnation. The fact that the contraband is consigned to a neutral port will not affect this liability. "2. Where a neutral vessel carries contraband of war belonging to a neutral it is, primâ facie, not liable to seizure if it is consigned to a neutral port. It would not be liable to seizure if bonâ fide consigned to the neutral port for the purpose of being sold there, even if the purchaser would resell to the enemy. This was the view asserted by this country in the case of the "Springbok" during the American Civil War. "We think that it would be liable to seizure though belonging to a neutral, if it was to be delivered at a neutral port to the agents of the enemy to be forwarded for use by him, or if it was at the time of seizure intended to be sent on from the neutral port to the enemy—in other words, if its ultimate destination at the time of seizure was the enemy's country. This case, however, may raise questions of much difficulty and delicacy, and the rules of international law upon it cannot be said to have been finally settled. "3. We think, as above stated, that the contraband would still be liable to seizure though consigned to a neutral port, if this was merely a step on the way to a belligerent destination. "No visit or seizure can be made in the territorial waters of a neutral Power. "If the Portuguese can be induced to prevent Lourenço Marques being made an emporium for traffic in contraband it may obviate the occurrence of troublesome questions with neutral Powers as to such consignments."
6. Whether goods, of whatever nature, consigned to enemy individuals in the Transvaal or Orange Free State are not, if once landed in British territory after the outbreak of hostilities, liable to seizure as being the property of one belligerent in the territory of the other.	6. The answer to this question is in the affirmative, subject to the following observations:— The general right to seize enemy's private property in the other belligerent's country is in practice obsolete, and we cannot advise its exercise except in the case of goods suitable for use in war. Trade with the enemy will, of course, not be allowed. The goods cannot be forwarded to the enemy's country. If there is any reason to believe that the goods are really the property of the hostile Government the right of seizure should, of course, be exercised.

British territorial waters after the outbreak of hostilities, may not technically be liable to seizure on the vessel while she is within the territorial waters, on the ground that in this case the ship, as well as the water on which she is floating for the time being is British territory.

(C.) Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, and to the answers which you may return to the foregoing questions, has it now become, in your opinion, incumbent on, or desirable for Her Majesty's Government to issue any public Notice or Proclamation on the subject of the establishment of Prize Courts or otherwise, beyond the Proclamation (G), of which a copy is inclosed, issued by Her Majesty's High Commissioner in South Africa on the 12th October last.

(D.) These questions are framed with a view of ascertaining what is the strict measure of the legal rights possessed by Her Majesty's Government, and how far action already taken, or to be taken in the future by them, can be justified by such doctrines of naval prize, or other international or semi-international law as can at present be described as established and generally accepted.

(E.) Lord Salisbury will, however, be much obliged if, in dealing with the matters specifically raised in these questions, you will also be good enough to offer such additional observations and suggestions as you think will be useful in dealing with the whole subject.

must be the same as if she were found with the goods on the high seas.

If, however, the vessel were lying in port, in a place which, if it were in England would be considered as within the body of the country, we think that different considerations might apply, and that the goods might be seized just as if they were on land. This last point, however, is new, and we are not aware of any authority upon it.

(C.) We think that a Proclamation warning Her Majesty's subjects against trade with the Transvaal or Orange Free State would be desirable.

(D.) With reference to the instructions contained in the letter from the Foreign Office to the Colonial Office of the 23rd October, 1899, we make the following suggestions:—

(a.) If the British Commander satisfies himself that the destination is to a British port, no further steps need be taken. The authorities at the port can see that the goods are not forwarded to the enemy.

(b.) The search can in no case be made in the waters of a neutral Power.

(c.) It is not necessary that the vessel should be taken to a port where there is a Prize Court It is enough if she is taken to a British port, proceedings may then be taken in any Prize Court having jurisdiction.

(d.) Food-stuffs are contraband only if destined for the supply of the enemy's forces.

(E.) By way of general observation we have only to add that, having regard to the novel and difficult questions of international law which might arise with neutral Powers, we would again urge the expediency, if it be possible of avoiding the exercise of the right of search of neutral vessels by securing the performance by Portugal of her undertaking with reference to Lourenço Marques. That undertaking, if carried out, prevents all arms and munitions of war from reaching the enemy. The term "munitions of war" we think, may include supplies of food for the enemy's forces. But even if Portugal refuses to take this view as to food-stuffs, we submit for consideration whether, having regard to our relations with other Powers, and the great interest which this country has in the free importation of foodstuffs in time of war, it is desirable to stop and take in for condemnation neutral vessels carrying food-stuffs to Lourenço Marques.

Downing Street, October 21, 1899.

WITH reference to my letter of this day's date respecting the mode of dealing with questions which arise in connection with the hostilities in South Africa, I am directed by Mr. Secretary Chamberlain to transmit to you, for the consideration of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying telegram from the High Commissioner, South Africa, respecting the treatment of food-stuffs destined for the enemy's country, together with an opinion on the subject obtained from the Law Officers yesterday evening.

Pending Lord Salisbury's decision on the question, Mr. Chamberlain has addressed the accompanying telegram to Sir Alfred Milner in reply.

With regard to the latter part of Sir A. Milner's message, I am to inclose a statement from which it appears that the latest instructions issued by the Admiralty on the subject of the search of vessels are not consistent with those issued by this Department on the 13th instant to the Governors of the Cape and Natal, a copy of which is inclosed. A copy of those instructions was sent to the Admiralty the same evening; but by an oversight they were not at the same time communicated to the Foreign Office.

YOUR telegram of 13th October, No. 2.

Dutch ship due East London to-morrow, carries food-stuffs, &c., for South African Republic. Attorney-General advises that these goods are contraband of war and liable to seizure, and he is instructing Customs officers accordingly. Ship said to be chartered by Castle Mail Packet Company. Do you mean that we are not to seize goods destined for Republics, even though contraband of war on board neutral vessels [? at] four [? our] ports, but are to take the chance of goods being stopped by Portuguese? Admiral's instructions seem inconsistent with your telegram, as they provide for search for contraband on high seas. I hope it may be possible to adhere to line which Ministers are prepared to take.

Inclosure 2 in Annex 1.

PROVISIONS can only be stopped if there is reasonable ground for believing that they are directly destined for the supply of the enemy's forces.

Provisions cannot possibly be taken out of a neutral ship; the vessel must be detained and taken into a Prize Court for condemnation.

To seize neutral vessels on the ground that they are carrying provisions will raise in the most acute form the questions which we understood it was considered most desirable to avoid.

Sir,

I HAVE laid before the Marquess of Salisbury your letters of the 21st instant respecting the treatment of contraband of war, and I am directed by his Lordship to state to you, for the information of Mr. Secretary Chamberlain, that he concurs in the proposal that the decision in such matters should be taken in this Department.

A general reference is now being prepared to the Law Officers; but, in the meantime, Lord Salisbury thinks that instructions in the following sense should be issued to the Colonial and to the Naval authorities. A copy of my present letter has been communicated to the Admiralty.

1. All merchant-ships intending to go to a South African port may be searched for contraband of war wherever found and of what nationality they may be.

2. If it is found on any ship, and there is reasonable ground for suspicion that it is intended for the enemy, the ship should be taken into Cape Town, or to the nearest port at which there is a British Prize Court, and should be adjudicated upon in proper form.

3. Contraband of war should be regarded as including food suitable for feeding troops, provided there is reasonable ground for believing that it is destined for the supply of the enemy's forces.

Immediate steps should be taken for establishing a Prize Court at Cape Town or elsewhere in South Africa, and every care should be taken that it is properly composed and constituted.

On the issue of the instructions in the sense indicated in this letter, it will no longer be necessary to abide by the intention expressed in my letter of the 13th instant, to interfere as little as possible with neutral vessels, but to seize contraband of war when landed.

The Lord Chancellor to Foreign Office.

Food-stuffs, &c., as contraband of war.

IN commenting on the opinions of the two Law Officers,* it must be borne in mind that they were asked by the form of the questions submitted to them that they would be good enough to offer such additional observations and suggestions as they might think would be useful in dealing with the whole subject.

And it is further necessary to observe that with reference to the main question upon which doubts suggest themselves, namely, the question of how far food-stuffs may become contraband of war, so much depends upon the circumstances of the concrete case that it is difficult, if not impossible, to give an abstract definition of the circumstances, which may make food-stuffs contraband of war.

Lord Stowell at the commencement of the century laid down what I believe to be the true rule "that generally food-stuffs were not contraband of war, but might become so in circumstances arising out of the particular situation of the war, or the conditions of the parties engaged in it."

I think Mr. Hall has very accurately pointed out the tendency of modern opinion and the reason for it in the following passage:—

"Detention of provisions is almost always unjustifiable, simply because no certainty can be arrived at as to the use which will be made of them; so soon as certainty is in fact established, they, and everything else which directly and to an important degree contributes to make an armed force mobile, become rightly liable to seizure. They are not less noxious than arms; but except in a particular juncture of circumstances their noxiousness cannot be proved."†

The United States in the civil war with the Confederacy regarded and acted upon the theory that cotton was contraband of war on the ground that cotton was used as money during that contest; and M. Waddington in 1885, in a letter dated the 10th March, 1885, expresses himself thus:—

"The doctrine which admits that besides contraband of war by nature there may also be contraband of war by destination has been long professed in England. Thus the Attorney-General, having occasion to speak on this subject in the House of Commons on the 30th March, 1854, after having recognized that the definition of

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. F. Graham's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed by you to transmit to us the accompanying copies of telegrams* received from the High Commissioner for South Africa and the Governor of Natal, with reference to the question of compensation to private individuals in the latter Colony for losses occasioned by hostilities between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the South African Republic.

That in his telegram of the 25th May, 1899, the High Commissioner reported that he had received information from the Governor of Natal that the inhabitants in the northern districts of that Colony were becoming anxious at the warlike preparations of the Government of the South African Republic on the border, and that his Ministers were asking for some assurance that the support of Her Majesty's Government would be given to Natal in the event of hostilities. That Sir A. Milner added that he had telegraphed to the Governor of Natal as follows: "You can tell Minister from me that it is out of the question that Her Majesty's Government should tolerate any invasion of Natal. I think such an event highly improbable, but if it occurred, Natal would be defended with whole force of the Empire, and redress exacted for any injury to her." That he further expressed the hope that Her Majesty's Government would indorse his message, and that by telegram of the 28th May you expressed your approval of it.

That at the beginning of the present month the Governor of Natal reported in his telegrams of the 4th instant that the President of the Mooi River Farmers' Association had inquired whether the Imperial authorities would compensate Natal Colonists for losses incurred through hostilities with the Transvaal, and that the Prime Minister had consulted him as to whether an attempt should be made to defend Newcastle if it were attacked before troops could be sent up. That to the first inquiry he stated that he had replied that if Natal should be attacked it would be defended by the whole force of the Empire, and that redress would be exacted for any injury done to Natal or to Her Majesty's loyal subjects in the Colony due to such attack, or, in other words, in the sense of the High Commissioner's telegram to him of the 25th May, but with the addition of the last sentence. That with regard to Newcastle he said that he had felt constrained, after consulting the General Officer Commanding, Natal, to advise that, until the General Officer Commanding, Natal, was in a position to send up necessary troops, no attempt should be made to defend the town, and that he had stated that if the town should be taken ample reparation would be exacted for any pecuniary loss that individual citizens or the town might sustain.

That the High Commissioner, in his subsequent telegram of the 6th instant, reported that he had received a further communication from the Governor of Natal, stating that the Mayor of Newcastle had inquired whether he was to understand that, in the event of property being destroyed in the district, the Government would guarantee full compensation; that the Prime Minister had replied that it was a question for the Imperial Government; that the terms of the High Commissioner's telegram did not justify him in going beyond the assurance already telegraphed; that he thought some more definite assurance would do good, but that it was necessary to guard against bogus claims, and that the terms would have to be carefully worded.

That the High Commissioner added that he did not see that Her Majesty's Government could go further than the pledge contained in his telegram of the 25th May and the Secretary of State's reply of the 28th May, but that he would be glad of instructions on the point.

That Mr. Graham was to refer us to our opinion of the 17th August last with reference to certain claims for compensation for losses incurred by various persons in consequence of the recent insurrection in Sierra Leone, and more especially to the first paragraph, in which we stated that Her Majesty's Government were not under any legal liability to pay compensation either to British subjects or to foreigners in respect of damage caused during the rebellion in that Colony.

That Mr. Graham was also to refer us to Articles VI, VII, VIII, and IX of the Pretoria Convention of 1881, which laid down the principles of compensation for losses and damage sustained by individuals during the hostilities which preceded that Convention.

That Mr. Graham was to request us to take the papers into our consideration, and to favour you with our opinion:—

1. Whether Her Majesty's Government should go further than the pledge already given by the High Commissioner's telegram of the 25th May as approved by the Secretary of State, and, if so, what instructions should be sent to the High Commissioner on the subject?

2. Whether the assurances of the Governor of Natal as to reparation and redress, reported in his telegrams of the 4th October, No. 1, and the 4th October, No. 2, were in harmony with the pledge of the High Commissioner as approved by the Secretary of State, or went beyond it?

3. To what extent Her Majesty's Government was committed to grant or secure compensation to individuals in consequence of damage occasioned by the hostilities:

(a.) Either generally as a belligerent, or

4. Generally.

That Mr. Graham was to add that you regarded the question as one of the utmost importance, as, should the Boer forces succeed in wrecking the mines at Kimberley, or destroy the mines of the Rand, claims for compensation of enormous amount would almost certainly be presented by the Companies whose property had been thus injured.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That we think that Her Majesty's Government should not go further in the way of promises of compensation.

2. The assurances of the Governor of Natal are in harmony with the pledge of the High Commissioner as approved by the Secretary of State, and do not go beyond it.

3. By these various pledges, Her Majesty's Government is committed to exact redress to individuals in Natal for damage occasioned by the hostilities. There is no such obligation on a belligerent; it depends on the assurances given in this case. A promise to exact redress to Natal means, in the connection in which these words were used, a promise to exact redress to the individual inhabitants who have been damnified.

4. No question of this kind can arise with regard to the mines at Kimberley or in the Rand, as no pledge has been given with regard to them.

The pledge that has been given is not that Her Majesty's Government will make compensation, but that Her Majesty's Government will exact it from the Boers.

We have, &c.

what articles are contraband of war was one of the most difficult and complicated questions of international law, expressed himself as follows:—

"'Contraband of war may in general be classed as follows in two categories:—

"'1. Articles which, by their nature, are of direct use in war, such as arms and ammunition.

"'2. Articles which may be of indirect use in war, by permitting a continuation of hostilities, such as provisions.'"

One must further remark that inasmuch as in international law there is no absolute Tribunal which can be applied to as settling doubtful questions, each nation in turn has adopted its own view on this question, and has not always been consistent with itself.

Both this country and the United States have maintained inconsistent theories.

In 1793 and 1795 the English Government seized all provisions bound to a French port, and, as I have pointed out, so late as 1885 the French Minister insisted on the right of his country to treat all rice imported into such a country as China as contraband of war.

The truth is, as I have said, each country in turn has applied the doctrine to its own interests at the time. But it is fair to observe that in what seems at first sight only the decision of a party to a quarrel in his own favour, there is a principle to be found which may reconcile apparently inconsistent contentions, and gives a good practical reason which runs through all the opinions from Bynkershoek downwards, namely, whether the supply of provisions is, in truth, an act of aid to the hostilities being carried on, and such as will, in truth, assist the armies of the enemy.

I take two extreme cases to illustrate what I mean: the act of the English Government in 1793 and the contention of M. Waddington in 1885. The supply of rice or provisions generally in the two cases seems to me to have been so wide and general in their application that it was an undue interference with the trade of neutrals, and could not in any intelligible sense be said to be an aiding of the hostile forces.

On the other hand, when the circumstances of this particular war, in which the whole of the Orange Free State is in arms against us, and the mobility of its forces dependent, in a great measure at all events, upon the extent to which they can get supplies of provisions, it appears to me that within the narrowest view of what is or is not contraband of war, provisions, under these circumstances, and in respect of this particular war are, to use Mr. Hall's phrase, "as noxious as arms," and I should have thought their destination, with reference to the ordinary course of trade at Lourenço Marques, not difficult to establish.

I am therefore of opinion that if I am right as to the question of fact, which I have assumed for the purpose of my last observation, the carrying of provisions to Lourenço Marques, for the purpose of consumption in the Orange Free State, is an act of aiding and assisting the enemy to a degree which, in any view of international law, justifies the prohibition of such supply.

I do not desire to express any opinion adverse to that of the Law Officers, speaking generally, because I observe that in answer to the first question the Law Officers assume that if, in fact, the destination of "food-stuffs" at the time of seizure was simply for the enemy's forces, they would be contraband of war. But there is an observation made on p. 14 of the printed matter, B 5. 1, apparently quoted from some former opinion, which contains what I think is an erroneous limitation. On the fifth line of that paragraph the words occur "belonging to the enemy." I think these words must have slipped in by an oversight. If the goods are contraband of war, and are destined to reach the enemy, it matters not at the time of seizure who is the proprietor thereof.

With respect to Question 6, I am not certain that the Law Officers have quite understood the application of the question. I understand it to mean to refer to goods landed in British territory, and consigned to enemies either in the Orange or Transvaal States. It seems to me that such goods can properly be seized—they form part of a trading with the enemy through British territory, and though in their answer the Law Officers say trade with the enemy will of course not be allowed, the practical question with which the Cape authorities have to deal is the question of what is to be done with goods landed in British territory and consigned to the two Republics. To seize such goods, even although consigned to private individuals, I think is not obsolete in practice, since the landing of them in British territory for the purpose of being conveyed to the enemy, is a trade operation which, I think, properly subjects them to seizure.

I agree generally with the answers of the Law Officers, but I have designedly confined myself to dealing with the strict law raised by the questions, and do not express any opinion as to the policy indicated by them.

With respect to the question arising as to the importation of cyanide of potassium, it will depend, I think, upon the same grounds as those upon which the United States treated cotton as contraband of war. I presume the article in question is intended for and used in the extraction of gold, and is therefore more nearly allied to the obtaining money for the Transvaal Government than cotton was for the Confederate States. The principle, therefore, which should be applied must depend upon the facts, which do or do not raise the same question as I have already treated of in respect of the supply of "food-stuffs."

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, November 20, 1899.

Search of French steamer "Cordova" by H.M.S. "Magicienne."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter to us of the 18th instant,* respecting the remonstrance by the French Government against the exercise of the right of search by Her Majesty's ship "Magicienne" on the French steamer "Cordova."

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That we would suggest that the answer to the French Government should be that Her Majesty's Government had regarded the existence of a state of war with the Transvaal and the Orange Free States as a matter of notoriety. As these States invaded Her Majesty's territory, there was no formal Proclamation of war, and no formal notice of the existence of a state of war was given.

No want of courtesy to the French Government was contemplated by the absence of formal notice under such circumstances.

We would suggest, further, that the French and other neutral Governments should forthwith have formal notice that a state of war exists between Great Britain and the South African Republic and the Republic of the Orange Free State. The notice should not go further, and no allusion should be made in it to the proposed exercise of belligerent rights—this follows from the existence of a state of war.

In forwarding the notice it may be explained that it is sent as an act of courtesy, and that it had not been sent previously owing to the notoriety of the facts.

We have, &c.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, November 17, 1899.

Trading with the enemy during war in South Africa.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list, which are sent to you in connexion with the question of issuing a notification or warning in this country against trading with the enemy during the continuance of the state of war at present existing between Her Majesty and the two South African Republics.

* Private letter, of which there is no copy, inclosing Sir E. Monson's No. 10, Telegraphic, Africa, November 15, 1899; Memoranda by Mr. Oakes, November 17 and 18, 1899.

You advise in the 8th paragraph of your Report of the 26th ultimo (Document A), that it would be desirable to warn Her Majesty's subjects by Proclamation against trade with the Transvaal or Orange Free State.

On the present occasion a Proclamation against trading with the enemy has been issued by the Governor of Cape Colony (Document B); it warns all Her Majesty's subjects not to carry on any trade with, or supply any goods, wares, or merchandize to either of the enemy Republics, or to any subject thereof in the said Republics, and further warns all persons that whoever, in contravention of the law, shall commit any of the aforesaid acts, will be duly prosecuted, and will be liable, on conviction, to such punishment as the law provides.

The returns of exports furnished by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs show that merchandize other than contraband of war is now freely exported from this country with ultimate destination to the territory of the South African Republic and the Orange Free State, and in view of the above-mentioned advice given in your Report of the 26th ultimo (Document A), the question arises whether such trade is lawful or unlawful, and whether it should be specially prohibited, and by what instrument and in what terms.

The Proclamation issued in Cape Colony prohibits all trade with or supply of goods to the enemy's territory by British subjects, and indeed, as would seem from the last paragraph of the Proclamation, by any persons within the Colony.

But the Proclamation does not explain or define the term "trade."

As regards the terms of any similar Proclamation issued in this country, it will be to consider also how far British subjects can or should be debarred from supporting trade with the enemy's territory by carrying that trade (1) for British consignors, and (2) for foreign neutral consignors on British ships.

It appears from the fourth paragraph of your Report (Document A), that the point is not as yet covered by authority.

I have the honour to request you to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion:—

(a.) As to the terms of the notification or warning to be issued in this country with the enemy, and how far, if at all, it should deal with the carriage of the enemy's trade by British ships.

(b.) As to the form of the notification or warning, that is, whether it should be given by Order in Council, by Royal Proclamation, or merely by a notice issued by the Board of Trade, or by the Commissioners of Customs.

(c.) Finally, I am to ask you for any observations of a general nature which may occur to you in connexion with the questions and papers now referred to you.

I have, &c.

Report.

1. We are of opinion that the carriage by British ships of goods consigned to any person in either of the Republics, or to any agent of such Republics, or of any subjects thereof, in a neutral port, is illegal, as amounting to trade with the enemy. Questions of great difficulty might arise in connexion with cases in which the goods are consigned to a neutral port to a neutral consignee unless it can be shown that the use of the neutral's name as consignee is fictitious, and that the goods are in fact consigned to the enemy, or enemy's citizens or subjects.

It is largely a question of policy whether the carriage of goods intended to reach the enemy by British ships should be prevented, and we are not in possession of information as to the nature and particulars of the trade of this sort, which it is suggested is being carried on, to enable us to express an opinion.

Upon the materials before us, we should think it desirable that British subjects should be informed of the unlawfulness of any such enterprise. All trade with the enemy after the outbreak of war is unlawful unless licensed by the Crown. But the Crown may think it expedient either expressly to license trade of a particular kind, or tacitly to permit it. If it be decided not to allow such carrying trade, we think that the Notification should be in some such terms as we have added upon the Proclamation of the High Commissioner, herewith initialled by us. A Notification in such terms does not prejudge the case which might arise of the carriage of goods in a British ship to neutral buyers at Lourenço Marques on the ground that they would be resold to the enemy. We are disposed to think that this might be treated as a trading with the enemy if, in substance, the Portuguese buyer, though apparently buying and selling on his own account, was notoriously merely a means of transmitting such goods to the enemy. But the point is not concluded by authority.

2. We think that the intimation should be by Royal Proclamation. We have inserted in the Proclamation of the High Commissioner herewith, initialled by us, such alterations as we think necessary to form the basis of such Proclamation.

3. We have nothing to add by way of general observations to what we have said in the answer to the preceding questions.

[December 13, 1899.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, November 18, 1899.

Power of dealing with land in Protectorates.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list, which relate to the power of dealing with land in Protectorates.

These papers deal primarily with the East Africa and Uganda Protectorates, but the questions on which your advice is sought are not peculiar to those territories, and should be settled according to general principles.

Protectorates may, for the purposes of the present reference, be conveniently divided into two classes: in the one, of which Zanzibar and Tunis are examples, the Protected Power has developed an administrative, legislative, and judicial system, and possesses a body of law regulating, inter alia, the tenure and the transfer of land; above all, the ideas of State and private ownership in land are fully understood. In the other class of Protectorates the sovereignty, if it can be said to exist at all in regard to territory, is held by many small Chiefs, or Elders, who are practically savages, and who exercise a precarious rule over tribes which have not as yet developed either an administrative or a legislative system; even the idea of tribal ownership in land is unknown, except in so far as certain tribes usually live in a particular region and resist the intrusion of weaker tribes, especially if the intruders belong to another race. The occupation of ground in which a season's crops have been sown or where cattle are for the moment grazing furnishes the nearest approach to private ownership in land; but, in this case, the idea of ownership is probably connected rather with the crops and the cattle than with the land temporarily occupied by them. The whole of the East Africa Protectorate outside the coast strip constituting the mainland dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar may be placed in the second class. In the Protectorate of Uganda the Kingdom of Uganda proper might, perhaps, in some respects, be placed in the first class; but the present request for advice deals mainly with regions in the second class.

The Treaties made by the Imperial British East Africa Company are given at pages 12–16 of the Parliamentary Paper, "Africa No. 4 (1892)," where a copy of the Charter will also be found. (Document A.)

Special attention is called to the terms of the Treaty given at the top of p. 15 of the above-mentioned Parliamentary Paper. The Charter recognizes the Treaties, and under Article 23 (8) confirms to the Company, in so far as Her Majesty is concerned, the right to grant lands for terms or in perpetuity absolutely.

It therefore seems clear that the exercise of whatever rights over land the Company possessed under Treaty grants from the Chiefs has been confirmed to them in the fullest and most ample manner by the Crown—and that by the transfer of the administration, noticed below, the Crown now holds all the rights, whatever they may have been, which were held by the Company at the date of the transfer.

The measure of the rights of the Crown in this regard, however, appears to be determined by the extent of the Treaty rights of the Company which passed on the transfer of the administration.

In January 1894, the Imperial British East Africa Company submitted for the approval of the Secretary of State certain Rules and Regulations regarding land. (See Document B.) The Secretary of State concurred in their issue, although he avoided expressing any opinion on their contents.

On the 15th June, 1895, a Notification (Document C) was published in the "London Gazette" of the British Protectorate over territories in East Africa late in possession of the British East Africa Company. The transfer of the Company's rights to Her Majesty's Government was recorded by a deed of the 20th May, 1896 (Document D), and the transfer itself was formally effected in East Africa on the 1st July.

On the 21st December, 1896, an Order (Document E), headed "East Africa Protectorate," was issued by Her Majesty's Commissioner for the East Africa and for the Zanzibar Protectorates providing for the registration of all "documents relating to leases, mortgages, sales, and other transfers of immovable property except wills;"

the previous Order of the 1st June, 1893, therein referred to, is not in the possession of Her Majesty's Government.

It was proposed in 1896 to make certain land and mining Regulations for East Africa and Uganda. The proposal was referred to the Colonial Office, and that Department pointed out in the letter of the 4th September, 1896 (Document F), that the land in a British Protectorate is, as regards the British Government, foreign soil, and is not vested in the Crown as is the case in territory which is annexed to the British dominions. The letter added that it was, therefore, advisable to avoid making grants in which the British authorities appeared to alienate land which was not, in fact, vested in them or in the British Crown. The system recommended for adoption was that of certificates permitting a particular person to occupy a particular piece of land, and undertaking to secure him in his occupation subject to such conditions as might be thought advisable. The granting of such a certificate was an administrative act, and not a transfer of title.

This system was adopted in the Land Regulations for East Africa, the 7th January, 1897, and for Uganda (Documents G and H respectively).

The construction of the Uganda Railway throughout the East Africa Protectorate has necessitated important steps with regard to the appropriation of land required in connection with the line.

In the beginning of 1897, it was thought advisable to secure to the Crown a belt of land along the line, as such land might become valuable and serve to recoup a part, at least, of the money spent in building the railway.

The question how this could best be done was referred to Mr. Albert Gray. The constitutional and legal difficulties of the matters are discussed in the latter part of his letter of the 7th April, 1897 (Document I).

The last paragraph but two of the letter is apparently in error in stating that the Indian Land Acquisition Act of 1894 had then been applied to the East Africa Protectorate—it had then been applied to the Sultan's dominions only.

The matter of the railway belt was eventually dealt with by a Notification, dated the 9th May, 1897 (Document J), and issued by the Commissioner in the Protectorate, announcing that in pursuance of the powers vested in him he had appropriated for public purposes, subject to proved rights of ownership, all lands on the mainland beyond Mombasa situated within 1 mile on either side of the railway wherever finally constructed. There is no indication of the particular authority on which the Notification rests.

On the 12th June, 1897, the Commissioner issued a Notice (Document K), providing for the compulsory purchase of land and houses belonging to persons subject to the Native Courts, i.e., land and houses belonging to natives; the Notice contains no indication of the particular authority on which it was issued. "The Africa Order in Council, 1889" (Document L), under which the Queen's extra-territorial jurisdiction in the East Africa Protectorate was then exercised, did not give the Commissioner any powers over natives of the Protectorate or over their property; both the natives and their property were assumed to be under the jurisdiction of their several sovereign Chiefs.

On the 8th July, 1897, the Commissioner issued a Notification (Document M), providing that no document purporting to transfer any interest in land from a native of the East Africa Protectorate (outside the Sultanates of Zanzibar and Witu) to a British subject or to a foreigner should be valid without the written approval of the local Collector.

On the 7th July, 1897, a new Order in Council was passed for East Africa (Document N). But it did not come into force in Africa till the 12th August, 1897.

Article 11 (b) of this Order applied to the Protectorate "The Indian Land Acquisition Act, 1894" (Document O).

Mr. Gray points out in the 7th paragraph of his letter of the 21st June last (Document P) that under "The East Africa (Acquisition of Lands) Order in Council, 1898" (Document Q), the Commissioner probably has power to grant a title amounting to a freehold in the case of land taken under "The Indian Land Acquisition Act, 1894."

The Commissioner's despatch No. 216 of the 5th September, 1897 (Document R), submitted Regulations for preventing the creation of fictitious titles to land in the Sultan's dominions. Mr. Albert Gray, to whom the despatch was referred, remodelled the Regulations, and proposed in his letter of the 17th November, 1898 (Document S), that they should be extended beyond the Sultan's mainlaind dominions to the whole of the East Africa Protectorate.

Mr. Gray's letter was sent to the Commissioner, who, in his despatch No. 14 of the 7th January last (Document T), suggested certain minor amendments in the draft of the Regulations, mentioned above, for preventing the creation of fictitious titles to land, and expressed concurrence in the proposal to extend them to the whole Protectorate. He deduced from Mr. Gray's suggestion that Her Majesty's Government now held that waste land in the Protectorate could be treated as in a Colony, and be considered capable of being granted in freehold by the Crown. The question involved in this correspondence was again referred to Mr. Albert Gray with the others relating to land, and his observations on it will be found in his letter of the 21st June last (Document P), to which reference will be made below.

On the 29th December, 1897, amended Land Regulations were issued in East Africa (Document U). These Regulations differed in detail, but not in principle, from those first issued (Document G).

The Land Regulations of Uganda were issued, pari passu, with those for East Africa.

It may be observed that Uganda is under "The Africa Order in Council, 1989" (Document L).

The inclosed despatch No. 19 of the 22nd February, 1898, from the Acting Commissioner in Uganda, contains observations to the effect that the Land Regulations do not entirely meet the requirements of the Protectorate, and proposes various amendments; it also contains information on the ideas of land tenure held by the native administration of Uganda. This despatch was referred to the Colonial Office; the reply of that Department is dated the 26th January, 1899 (Document V).

The Land Regulations promulgated for East Africa in December 1897 are also insufficient in present circumstances. The Commissioner's despatch No. 313 of the 4th October, 1898 (Document W), points out some of the difficulties which the Regulations do not meet in practice. This despatch also was referred to the Colonial Office, and the reply to the reference is dated the 7th April, 1899 (Document AA).

In the East Africa Protectorate an important change has recently been effected by an Order in Council, dated the 7th ultimo (Document X), Article 9 of which provides that Queen's Regulations made, or to be made, under Articles 45 and 46 of "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897," shall, unless a contrary intention appears, apply to natives.

Mr. Albert Gray's letter of the 21st June last (Document P) relates also to the form of transfer which should be used in respect to such land in the Sultan's mainland dominions as the Crown can dispose of. The matter was raised by Mr. Cave's despatch No. 70 of the 22nd February last (Document Y); properly it stands outside the scope of the present reference, because it relates to land in a region possessing a code of land laws. It is referred to you now, as it has been included in the questions dealt with in Mr. Albert Gray's letter of the 21st June last.

The documents hitherto noticed form the body of legislative measures taken in the Protectorate with regard to land. But it is in many cases doubtful whether the provisions above noticed are properly applicable to natives (or to their property), as defined by the Orders in Council, under which Her Majesty's officers have successively acted in the Protectorate, namely, "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," and "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897," those Orders applying only to the persons and property of British subjects and to foreigners, as defined in the Order.

The Order of 1897 provides, indeed, by Article 52, for the administration of justice in Native Courts, but in view of the provision of Article 5, namely, that the Order applies to natives (as defined in the Order) only in the cases and according to the conditions specified in the Order, and not otherwise, it is at least doubtful whether the Order can be said to give power to legislate for natives or to administer their affairs.

I also have the honour to call your attention to an important change that has of recent years come over the juridical conception of a Protectorate.

The original conception precluded the supersession of the Protected by the Protecting Power as regards the government of the subjects of the Protected Power; jurisdiction within the Protectorate over the subjects of the Protecting Power and over other persons was strictly limited to such cases as were directly provided for in the Treaty creating the Protectorate.

Thus "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," and the Orders issued in connection with it, and "The East Africa Order, 1897," except in so far as the latter Order creates Native Courts, do not give jurisdiction to the British authorities over the subjects of the Chiefs in the Protectorates affected; neither do they give power to make legislative Regulations binding on the subjects of those Chiefs.

In British Central Africa, where few, if any, Chiefs now exercise judicial, legislative, or administrative functions, the difficulty has hitherto been met by allowing the British officers of the Protectorate to exercise all these functions on the assumption that they act on behalf of the Chief.

In practice the same course must often have been followed in East Africa; but from the strictly legal point of view the arrangement is not satisfactory. In many of the more advanced Protectorates administered by the Colonial Office the natives come under the same jurisdiction (but not necessarily under the same legislation) as British subjects and foreigners. The Colonial Department appears to act largely on the principle to which attention was called in the Report of the 14th February, 1895, from your predecessors in office (Document Z) in regard to jurisdiction in the Protectorates adjacent to the Gold Coast Colony, and to assume that, even in the absence of a Treaty between the Protecting Power and the local Sovereign granting jurisdiction over the subjects of that Sovereign, the existence of a Protectorate in an uncivilized country implies the right to assume whatever jurisdiction, over all persons, may be needed for the effectual exercise of the Protectorate.

This tendency is also seen in the above-mentioned Order in Council of the 7th ultimo (Document X), which provides means for making Regulations issued under "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897," applicable to natives.

It has already been observed, in connection with the enactment in East Africa of "The Indian Land Acquisition Act, 1894," and "The East Africa (Acquisition of Land) Order in Council, 1898," that power has probably been taken by the Crown to give a freehold title in the case of land actually claimed by a native, and compulsorily obtained from him, on compensation, by means of the provisions of the Act in question; it would seem, therefore, that power could all the more properly be assumed for giving a similar title to land lying waste and not claimed by any one.

Attention has already been called to the fact that the natives of the Protectorate have practically no such idea of "ownership" in land as is entertained amongst more settled and civilized communities. In support of this position, it may be noticed that no difficulty whatever has been experienced in appropriating the land on which the Uganda Railway has been built in the East Africa Protectorate; the line was already many miles beyond the Sultan's dominions when the Indian Land Acquisition Act became law in the Protectorate, and it is believed that no action under that Act has yet been needed. The Notification of the 9th May, 1897, appropriating a belt of land in connection with the railway, deals only with land on either side of the line.

As has been said above, the several legislative Orders and Regulations which have been issued from time to time in East Africa have almost certainly been applied to "natives" and to their property; and notwithstanding that, in strictness, the Orders in Council under which the British authorities act did not allow such application, it does not appear to have produced any evil effects; it is, indeed, in accordance with the tendency noted in the above-mentioned Report of your predecessors in office (Document Z).

It seems, therefore, proper to consider whether, in such a region as East Africa, in order that the Protectorate may produce its due effect in regard to the good government and the development of the country, the Protecting Power should not assume jurisdiction over waste and uncultivated land in places where the native Ruler is incompetent, whether from ignorance or otherwise, to exercise that jurisdiction.

All those of the above-mentioned papers which relate more directly to the Land Regulations of Uganda and of East Africa were referred to Mr. Albert Gray for his advice as to how they could be dealt with so as to overcome the various difficulties which had become apparent. Mr. Albert Gray's reply of the 21st June last (Document P) analyses the several questions on which a decision must be taken, and points out that the treatment of them must depend primarily on the nature of Her Majesty's title to land in the Protectorates, or, in other words, of the extent of the right to deal with it.

The questions on which I have the honour to ask for an expression of your opinion are the following:—

1. In regions where Her Majesty exercises rights of Protectorate under Treaties such as those made by the British East Africa Company, which do not specifically grant to Her Majesty the right of dealing with waste or unoccupied land, does that right accrue to Her Majesty by virtue of the right of Protectorate? Is any difference made by the fact of the natives of the region with whom the Treaty was concluded being practically savages without any proper conception of ownership in land?

2. If, in your opinion, Her Majesty has not the right to deal with waste or unoccupied land in such regions, can you suggest means by which the difficulties of the system of land certificates can be met, or some alternative system, under which the difficulties would not arise?

3. Do you agree with Mr. Gray that Her Majesty can, by operation of the "Indian Land Acquisition Act" and of "The East Africa (Acquisition of Lands) Order in Council, 1898," grant a title amounting to a freehold? And are you of opinion that a freehold title can by those means be given in such a region as is indicated under (1).

Lord Salisbury would be glad at the same time to be favoured with your observations on—

(a.) The form or the substance of the several Regulations and Notifications issued by the Commissioner and mentioned in the present reference;

(b.) On the proposal which is dealt with in Mr. Gray's above-mentioned letter (Document P), to extend to the rest of the East Africa Protectorate the Regulations already promulgated in the Sultan's dominions for the purpose of preventing the creation of fictitious titles to waste or unoccupied land (Document E); and

(c.) The form of conveyance for land in the Sultan's dominions, submitted in Mr. Cave's despatch No. 70 of the 22nd February last (Document Y).

Report.

1 and 2. We are of opinion that in such regions the right of dealing with the waste and unoccupied land accrues to Her Majesty by virtue of her right to the Protectorate. These Protectorates over territories occupied by savage tribes, have ~~title~~ little in common with Protectorates over such States as Zanzibar, which enjoy some form of settled Government, and in which the land has been appropriated either to the Sovereign, or to individuals. Protectorates, such as those now under consideration, really involve the assumption of control over all lands unappropriated. Her Majesty might, if she pleased, declare them to be Crown lands, or make grants of them to individuals in fee, or for any term.

The question of the system to be pursued is really one of policy. Probably a continuance of the plan of granting certificates may work very well; and there may be good reasons for not giving more than a tenure for a term of years.

We would point out that the issue of such certificates involves the assumption of entire control over the land in question just as much as a conveyance.

3. It seems to us doubtful whether "The Indian Land Acquisition Act" and "The East Africa (Acquisition of Lands) Order in Council, 1898," were intended to apply to unappropriated lands. They seem, in their terms, applicable only to land which has an owner to whom compensation can be paid. We agree that Her Majesty can, under this Act, and Order in Council, in all cases to which they apply, grant a title amounting to a freehold. Of course, if they have been applied to unappropriated lands, it amounts to an assumption of title in them by Her Majesty.

4. (a.) As regards the Land Regulations with annexed certificate (U) we have only to point out that the form seems hardly applicable where land is granted, merely for timber cutting or mining purposes.

Clause 2 imposes in all cases the obligation of either cultivating the land, or placing stock upon it. We would suggest that there should be alternative forms for use in the various cases contemplated.

As regards Uganda, a fresh Order in Council would be required to enable the making of such Regulations, and also the other Regulations proposed regulating the use of unoccupied land.

As regards the notification as to Mombasa Railway land (J) it was apparently not within the terms of the Order in Council, but it was issued by the order of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs—it was therefore the act of the Crown, and cannot be questioned.

As regards (K), even if ultra vires at the time it was made, it has been rendered good by the application to natives of the Order in Council 1897 by the Order in Council 1899, validating past dealings.

(b.) As regards the proposed Unoccupied Land Regulations (T), whatever form of words is employed they must amount to an assumption of a disposing power over unoccupied land. The adoption of the expression "public" lands instead of "Crown" lands, hardly veils the effect of the Regulations. Lands which are "public," must, under the circumstances of such Protectorate, be Crown lands, or under the control of the Crown. There is, in our opinion, no objection to the expression "public lands."

(c.) The form of conveyance seems suitable for any land vested in Her Majesty, which the Commissioner is authorized by Her Majesty to convey. It is not applicable to land nominally vested in the Sultan, nor to unappropriated land which has not been adopted as Crown land.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

(Secret.)

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, December 16, 1899.

Dr. Leyds' despatches on "Herzog."

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to lay the following circumstances before you in connection with the question of the right of a belligerent to search a neutral mail-steamer for the enemy's despatches, and to treat such despatches as contraband of war.

Her Majesty's Government have been informed through a credible source that despatches addressed to the Government of the South African Republic by Dr. Leyds, the Minister accredited by that State to most of the European countries, are on board the steam-ship "Herzog."

The "Herzog" is a German ship believed to be one of a line performing a regular mail service, and it is probable that the despatches are in a closed mail, addressed by the Postal Administration of the Netherlands or of Belgium to the Postal Administration of the South African Republic. It is not known whether the despatches bear on the relations between the South African Republic and the neutral Governments to which Dr. Leyds is accredited, or whether they relate to the conduct of the war.

It is, moreover, very possible that Dr. Leyds' despatches may, in order to conceal their true character, have been placed in covers addressed to private persons; and they may also be in cypher.

Observations on the seizure of the enemy's despatches will be found in sections 249 to 252 of the late Mr. W. E. Hall's "Treatise on International Law" [4th edition 1895, pp. 699–705], and in sections 96–105 [at pp. 27 and 28] of the "Manual of Naval Prize Law," by Professor T. E. Holland, which was issued by the authority of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty in 1888.

The subject is also treated in the accompanying Memorandum prepared in this Department in May 1895 (Document A), and copies of the several Law Officers' Reports mentioned in the Memorandum are inclosed (Documents B to D).

I am to request you to take this matter into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether despatches addressed by Dr. Leyds to his Government and dealing with the conduct of or other matters connected directly or indirectly with the war should be treated as contraband of war.

2. Whether despatches, not dealing in any way with the conduct of the war, but addressed by Dr. Leyds to his home Government, should be treated as contraband of war—

(a.) If written in or dispatched from Her Majesty's dominions;
(b.) If written in and dispatched from a neutral State.

3. Whether assuming the answer to either or both of the preceding questions to be in the affirmative, the "Herzog" may in the circumstances be stopped on the high seas by Her Majesty's ships of war and searched for Dr Leyds' despatches on the ground that such despatches may be contraband of war.

4. Whether a closed mail addressed by a neutral Government or Postal Administration to the enemy Government or Postal Administration may be opened on board the "Herzog" by Her Majesty's naval officers for the purpose of ascertaining if it contains Dr. Leyds' despatches.

5. Whether letters addressed to private individuals found—

(a.) In a closed mail; and
(b.) In an inclosed mail elsewhere, on board the "Herzog" may be opened for the purpose of ascertaining whether they contain Dr. Leyds' despatches.

6. Finally, I am to request you to favour his Lordship with any general observations on the instructions which should be addressed on these matters to the Commanders of Her Majesty's ships, and especially whether, if such despatches should be found on board the "Herzog," as may properly be treated as contraband of war, the "Herzog" must in all circumstances be detained and sent in together with the despatches on board for adjudication by a Prize Court, or whether the master of that vessel might, if he desired it, be permitted to proceed on his voyage on handing over the incriminated despatches and giving an undertaking in suitable terms on behalf of the ship and her owners not to take any proceedings in respect of the detention and search of the vessel and the removal of the documents.

In this connection, however, it seems right to observe with regard to the particular case now especially under consideration that no engagement which may be entered into by the master of the "Herzog" in the natural desire of proceeding on his voyage with as little interruption as possible, can in any way bind the Imperial German Government in international obligation or eliminate the possibility of eventual diplomatic protest on their part.

Report.

1 and 2. It appears that Dr. Leyds has been accredited to European Governments as the Diplomatic Agent of the South African Republic.

Under these circumstances, despatches from him not dealing with the conduct of the war and addressed to his home Government could not possibly be treated as contraband of war. War does not interrupt communication between a belligerent and his Diplomatic Agent with a neutral Power. With regard to despatches of this character, it would make no difference as to seizure or inspection on a neutral ship whether they were written or dispatched in Her Majesty's dominions or in a neutral State.

With regard to despatches addressed by Dr. Leyds to his Government, and dealing with matters connected with the war, other considerations arise. We are far from saying that despatches altogether exceeding the sphere of diplomacy and relating directly to the conduct of warlike operations may not even, though written by a Diplomatic Agent to his home Government, fall under the head of contraband of war.

But the practical question in the present case is whether, in order to ascertain that such despatches exist, all Dr. Leyds' despatches, and, indeed, all the contents of the mail-bags, may be examined.

There is a good deal of authority for saying that the despatches of a Diplomatic Agent are exempt from such examination on a neutral vessel. In our own territory or on board a British vessel they might, of course, be seized like any other property of the enemy. The immunity of such despatches on board a neutral vessel is laid down in the strongest terms by Calvo, "Droit International," 5th edition, vol. iii, p. 331, section 1539.

It is no doubt true that the string of authorities which he cites for this proposition proceed to some extent on a misconception of the decision of Sir W. Scott in the "Caroline," 6, Christopher Robinson's Reports, 461, the leading case on the subject; for it must be observed that when that case was decided the despatches were properly seized as enemy's property, although on board a neutral vessel, and Sir W. Scott was dealing only with the question whether the vessel had incurred condemnation by carrying them.

Since the Declaration of Paris the neutral flag covers the enemy's property unless it be contraband, but the current of authority in text writers is undoubtedly in favour of the proposition that the despatches of a Diplomatic Agent to his own Government are privileged from examination.

In Earl Russell's despatch to Lord Lyons of the 23rd January, 1862, the immunity of diplomatic despatches on neutral vessels was strongly asserted. We submit, for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, whether it is desirable on the present occasion to put into force a supposed right against the existence of which there is a great body of authority, and in contravention of which the attitude of Her Majesty's Government in the despatch just referred to would certainly be relied on. The German Government would almost certainly protest against such an interference with their flag, and although the canon of international law upon the subject has not been definitely fixed, we think the balance of authority is in favour of the immunity of diplomatic despatches.

3. The difficulties in the way of answering either questions 1 or 2 in the affirmative are such that we do not suppose that question 3 will in practice arise, but we ought to point out that in the despatch already referred to it was asserted by Earl Russell, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, that packets engaged in the postal service are entitled to peculiar favour and protection: "to detain, disturb, or interfere with them," it was there said, "without the very gravest cause, would be an act of the most noxious and injurious character, not only to a vast number of individual and private interests, but to the public interests of neutral and friendly Governments."

4. The right to examine closed mails for the purpose of finding despatches therein relating to the war has never been excluded by international law; but we ought to point out that there has been a marked tendency of late years, as far as possible, to extend immunity to such mails. The examination by the French at Tamatave was apparently effected in the territorial waters of land in the military occupation of the French, and, even if it were on the high seas, we should not disagree with the opinion of the Law Officers that the act was not technically a violation of the law of nations.

In the case of the "Adela," however, Earl Russell, in his despatch of the 10th October, 1862, used the following expression:—

"Her Majesty's Government cannot doubt that the Government of the United States are prepared to concede that all mail-bags clearly certified to be such shall be exempt from seizure and visitation."

The "Adela," no doubt, was bound for a neutral port, but the same observation would probably be made by the German Government with regard to the "Herzog." It would, we think, be a very strong measure, and one that should be adopted only in case of the most urgent necessity to open closed mail-bags in search of diplomatic correspondence, the immunity of which is, to say the least of it, very arguable.

5. The considerations arising upon the last question 4 apply à fortiori to the case of private letters.

6. We have only to add that, according to present practice, it might be necessary to bring the "Herzog" into a British port along with the incriminated despatches. This, of course, would be a measure of very great gravity, and even if the Captain consented that the despatches should be seized while the vessel proceeded, his Government might contend that his consent was given under a species of duress, and that the whole action was illegal by reason of the procedure employed.

The case is one which presents many and great difficulties, and might lead to friction of a serious nature with a friendly Power. Whether the importance of the seizure of the despatches in question is so great as to make it proper that the risks involved in that course should be run is a matter of policy.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 16, 1899.

N.-E. Rhodesia O. in C. I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers which relate to the proposed Order in Council for a portion of the British sphere in Africa north of the Zambezi.

The draft of the proposed Order is inclosed (Document A).

The British South Africa Company have agreed to its terms.

This portion of the British sphere, the boundaries of which will be defined by the IVth Article of the proposed Order, and which will be known as North-Eastern Rhodesia, has hitherto been administered under "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," (Document B); North-Eastern Rhodesia is covered by the Charter of the British South Africa Company (Document C), and it is intended that the Company's Administration shall be controlled to a certain extent by Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General in the British Central Africa Protectorate (to which North-Eastern Rhodesia is contiguous) in a manner analogous to that in which the administration of the British South African Company's territory lying to the west of North-Eastern Rhodesia, and known as Barotsiland North-Western Rhodesia, will be controlled by Her Majesty's High Commissioner in South Africa.

A copy of the Barotsiland North-Western Rhodesia Order in Council, which has recently been passed by Her Majesty in Council, is inclosed (Document D.)

I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to request you to take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the draft Order in Council may properly be submitted to Her Majesty as it stands, or if not, whether it requires any, and if so, what alterations or amendments.

Annex.

Draft of " North-Eastern Rhodesia Order in Council, 1900."

WHEREAS the territories of Africa situated within the limits of this Order, as hereinafter described, are under the protection of Her Majesty the Queen;

And whereas by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty has power and jurisdiction in the said territories:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers by " The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as " The North-Eastern Rhodesia Order in Council, 1900."

2. This Order is divided into parts, as follows:—

Parts.		Articles.
I.	Interpretation and Application	3 to 6
II.	Administration and Legislation	7 " 19
III.	Police	20
IV.	Judicial	21 to 37
V.	Native Administration	38 " 48
VI.	Miscellaneous	49 " 51

PART I.—INTERPRETATION AND APPLICATION.

3. In this Order, unless the subject or context otherwise requires:—

" Her Majesty " includes Her Majesty's heirs and successors.

" Secretary of State " means one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

" Commissioner " means any person for the time being exercising the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Consul-General and Commissioner for the British Central Africa Protectorate.

" The Company " means the British South Africa Company.

" Charter " means Her Majesty's Charter of the 29th day of October, 1889, incorporating the Company as amended by any Supplemental Charter.

" High Court " means the High Court of North-Eastern Rhodesia constituted by this Order.

" Senior Judge " means the senior or sole Judge of the High Court, and includes a person acting as senior or sole Judge.

" Administrator " means an Administrator appointed under this Order to administer affairs within the limits of this Order, and includes an Acting Administrator.

" Magistrate " means a Magistrate or Assistant Magistrate appointed under this Order, and includes an Acting Magistrate or Acting Assistant Magistrate.

" Gazette " means any official Gazette published within the limits of this Order by authority of the Administrator, and, until such Gazette is instituted, means the " British Central Africa Government Gazette."

" Native " means any native of Africa not being of European or American race or parentage.

" Person " includes Corporation.

The plural includes the singular, the singular the plural, and the masculine the feminine.

" Military police forces " includes all military, volunteer, and police forces from time to time raised and constituted under Queen's Regulations, and therein appointed to be under the control or authority of the Commissioner.

4. The limits of this Order are the parts of Africa bounded on the west by the boundaries of the Congo Free State and of Barotsiland-North-Western Rhodesia, as defined in " The Barotsiland-North-Western Rhodesia Order in Council, 1899;" on the south by the Kafukwe River and the River Zambezi down to its junction with the Luangwa River; thence by the west bank of the Luangwa River northwards to where that bank is cut by the 15th degree of latitude, and from this point by the Anglo-Portuguese boundary eastwards to the frontier of the British Central Africa Protectorate; on the east, by the aforesaid frontier; on the north, by the Anglo-German frontier, the south shore of Lake Tanganyika, and the southern frontier of the Congo Free State as far west as Lake Mweru, including all the islands in that lake.

The territory for the time being within the limits of this Order shall be known as North-Eastern Rhodesia.

5. A Secretary of State may from time to time, by notice published in the " Gazette," and in the " London Gazette," declare that any parts of Africa north of the River Zambezi, and under the protection of Her Majesty, shall be included in the limits of this Order, and from the date of the publications of the notice in the " Gazette " this Order shall apply to the parts named therein. A Secretary of State may from time to time, by the like notice, declare that any part of Africa for the time being within the limits of this Order shall, until otherwise directed, be excepted from the application of this Order; and from the date of the publication of such notice the part named therein shall be excluded from the limits of this Order.

6. The powers and authorities conferred by Her Majesty's " Africa Order in Council, 1889," shall continue in force within the limits of this Order concurrently with the powers conferred upon the Company by this Order, so far as not inconsistent with this Order, and where there is any conflict, this Order shall prevail. The powers conferred upon the Company by this Order are in augmentation of the powers conferred upon it by the Charter.

PART II.—ADMINISTRATION AND LEGISLATION.

7. The Company shall have and may exercise the general administration of affairs within the limits of this Order, in accordance with the terms of the Charter and the provisions of this Order.

8. The Company may exercise such administration by an officer styled the Administrator, and, under him, by such other officers as may from time to time be necessary. The Company shall appoint and pay the Administrator and all such officers, but shall obtain the approval of a Secretary of State before appointing any person to the office of Administrator. The salary of the Administrator shall be fixed by the Company, with the approval of a Secretary of State, and shall not be increased or diminished without his approval. The Administrator may be removed or suspended from office by a Secretary of State, or by the Company with the approval of a Secretary of State.

9. The Administrator may hold office, unless sooner removed, for three years from the date at which he enters upon the duties of his office; and, with the approval of a Secretary of State, may from time to time be reappointed for the further term of three years. At the end of any such term the Administrator may continue in office until reappointed, or until his successor is appointed.

10. If, at the end of any such term, or if, on a vacancy in the office, the Company does not within six months thereafter, with the approval of a Secretary of State, reappoint the Administrator, or appoint his successor, a Secretary of State may appoint some person to be Administrator.

11. The Company, with the approval of a Secretary of State, may appoint some person to act as Administrator in the event of the death, removal, resignation, absence, incapacity, or suspension of the Administrator. When there is no Administrator or Acting Administrator within the limits of the Order capable of discharging the duties of the office, the Senior Judge may act as Administrator.

12. As soon as the Company, by resolution of its Board of Directors, declares that it is expedient that a Council should be appointed, there shall be a Council to assist the Administrator, consisting of the Senior Judge, ex officio, and not less than three other members appointed by the Company, with the approval of a Secretary of State. A member of the said Council shall hold office for three years, unless sooner removed by the Company, with the like approval, but shall be eligible for reappointment.

In the event of the resignation, suspension, or absence from North-Eastern Rhodesia or other incapacity of a member of the Council other than the Senior Judge, the Company may, with the approval of a Secretary of State, appoint some other person to fill the temporary vacancy thus caused.

Provided that in default of such appointment by the Company within a period of six months after a vacancy has arisen a Secretary of State may appoint a person to fill the vacancy.

Every member appointed to fill any such temporary vacancy shall cease to be a member on the return to North-Eastern Rhodesia or the removal of the suspension or incapacity of the member in whose place he was appointed.

Every member of the Council shall, before taking his seat, take and subscribe before the Administrator or some other person authorized by him the following oath of allegiance:—

"I, A.B., do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, her heirs and successors, according to law. So help me God."

But any person authorized by law to affirm or declare instead of taking an oath may make such affirmation or declaration in lieu of such oath.

13. The Council shall meet whenever summoned by the Administration, and shall be competent to discharge its functions notwithstanding the existence of one vacancy among its members, whether caused by a vacancy in the office of Senior Judge or of one of the other members. The Administrator shall preside at all meetings of the Council, and any two members with the Administrator shall form a quorum. All questions shall be decided by a majority of the votes of those present, and if the votes are equal the Administrator shall have a casting vote.

14. The Administrator shall take the advice of the Council upon all matters of importance affecting the administration of affairs within the limits of this Order, except in cases which are too urgent to admit of their advice being taken. In all such urgent cases he shall as soon as possible summon the Council and acquaint them with the action taken, and the reasons therefor.

15. The Administrator may act contrary to the advice of the Council, but in every such case he shall report the matter forthwith to the Company, with the reasons for his action. In every such case any member of the Council who dissents may require that the reasons for his dissent be recorded and transmitted to the Company. The Company may reverse any action of the Administrator, whether taken with or without or against the advice of the Council.

16. It shall be lawful for the Administrator, and, after the Council has been constituted as provided by this Order, for the Administrator, with the concurrence of the Council, to make, alter, and repeal Regulations for the administration of justice, the raising of revenue, and generally for the peace, order, and good government of all persons within the limits of this Order, provided that Regulations under this Article shall not be made affecting the constitution, government, or control of the military police forces. Such Regulations, when promulgated as hereinafter mentioned, shall take effect within the limits of this Order as if they were contained in this Order.

A Regulation made after the constitution of the Council shall not be valid unless two members of the Council beside the Administrator have concurred in it.

No Regulation shall be valid unless the Commissioner has approved it, and it has been promulgated by being published in the "Gazette" by authority of the Commissioner with a notification of his approval.

The production of a copy of the "Gazette" in which a Regulation purports to be published by authority of the Commissioner shall be evidence of promulgation, and of the approval of the Commissioner, and of its having received the requisite concurrence of the Council.

The Commissioner shall sign every Regulation assented to by him, and shall, at the first convenient opportunity, transmit an authenticated copy of every such Regulation to the Secretary of State, and every such Regulation may be disallowed within one year from the taking effect thereof by a Secretary of State, either of his own motion or at the request of the Company, and every Regulation so disallowed shall become null and void so soon as the disallowance thereof shall be published in the "Gazette," but without prejudice to anything theretofore lawfully done thereunder.

17. The Commissioner may, from time to time, by Regulations (to be called Queen's Regulations), provide for the administration of justice, the raising of revenue, and generally for the peace, order, and good government of all persons within the limits of this Order: provided that the Commissioner, before issuing any such Regulations, shall, whenever possible, have regard to any suggestions or requests made to him in respect thereof by the Company, and that no Queen's Regulations concerning the raising or appropriation of revenue shall be made unless the assent of the Company has been previously given thereto. Such assent may be signified by telegraph.

All Queen's Regulations shall be published in the "Gazette," and shall, from and after the commencement thereof respectively, and thereafter until disallowed by Her Majesty, or repealed or modified by any subsequent Regulation or Queen's Regulations, have effect as if contained in this Order.

Her Majesty may disallow any Queen's Regulations, wholly or in part, and may signify such disallowance through a Secretary of State, and upon such disallowance being publicly notified by the Commissioner in the "Gazette," the provisions so disallowed shall, from and after a date to be mentioned in such notification, cease to have effect, but without prejudice to anything theretofore lawfully done thereunder.

The Commissioner, in issuing Queen's Regulations and in approving Regulations made by the Administrator under this Order, shall respect any native laws or customs by which the civil relations of any native Chiefs, tribes, or populations under Her Majesty's protection are now regulated, except so far as the same may be incompatible with the due exercise of Her Majesty's power and jurisdiction.

18. No customs duties levied on any articles produced or manufactured in any part of Her Majesty's dominions or in any British Protectorate and imported into North-Eastern Rhodesia shall exceed in amount the duties levied on such articles, according to the Tariff in force in the South African Customs Union at the date of the coming into operation of "The Southern Rhodesia Order in Council, 1898," or the Tariff contained in the Customs Union Convention, concluded between the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope, the Orange Free State, and the Colony of Natal, in May, 1898, whichever shall be the higher.

19. Subject to the provisions of this Order a Regulation made by the Administrator may amend or repeal any Queen's Regulations.

If any Regulation is in any respect repugnant to the provisions of any Order in Council, such Regulation shall to the extent of such repugnancy be absolutely void.

PART III.—POLICE.

20. The military police forces shall be and remain under the direct control and authority of the Commissioner, and all officers and members of the said forces shall conform to and obey such orders and instructions as they may from time to time receive from the Commissioner, or from any person appointed by him to act on his behalf.

The foregoing provisions of this Article shall not apply to any civil police force which may be raised and constituted under any Regulations to be made by the Administrator under this Order.

PART IV.—JUDICIAL.

21.—(1.) There shall be a Court of Record, styled the High Court of North-Eastern Rhodesia, with full jurisdiction, civil and criminal, over all persons and over all matters within North-Eastern Rhodesia, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained with regard to native law and custom.

(2.) Such civil and criminal jurisdiction shall, so far as circumstances admit, be exercised upon the principles of and in conformity with the substance of the law for the time being in force in and for England, and with the powers vested in and according to the course of procedure and practice observed by and before the Courts of Justice and Justices of the Peace in England according to their respective jurisdictions and authorities, except so far as such law may be modified by any Order in Council, Regulation, or Queen's Regulation.

(3.) The High Court shall have a seal, bearing the style of the Court, and such device as a Secretary of State from time to time approves; but until such a seal is provided, the seal of the Company may be used.

22. There shall be as many Judges of the High Court, to be paid by the Company, as from time to time may be required. Every Judge shall be appointed by a Secretary of State on the nomination of the Company, and shall hold office during good behaviour, and shall only be removed by a Secretary of State. The salaries of the Judges shall be fixed by the Company, with the approval of a Secretary of State, and shall not be increased or diminished without his approval.

23. Whenever the appointment of a Judge is necessary, the Company shall nominate to a Secretary of State a fit and proper person for the office. If the Secretary of State does not approve of such person he shall so inform the Company, and the Company shall thereupon nominate another person, and so on, toties quoties, but if the Company has not within six months from the date of the occurrence of a vacancy nominated some person whom the Secretary of State approves, the Secretary of State may appoint a person who has not been so nominated.

24. The High Court shall sit at such places as may from time to time be prescribed by the Administrator. The jurisdiction of the High Court may, until other arrangements are made under this Order, be exercised by any Judge thereof sitting alone.

25. If any sentence of death is pronounced by the High Court, a copy of the evidence shall be transmitted to the Commissioner; and the sentence shall not be carried into effect until confirmed by him. The Commissioner may signify his confirmation by telegraph.

26. The Commissioner may remit or commute, in whole or in part, any sentence of the High Court, and may signify such remission or commutation by telegraph.

27. The High Court may make Rules for regulating its procedure and practice and the admission of practitioners, and generally for the purpose of making any provision proper or necessary for the proper or effectual exercise of jurisdiction under this Order by the High Court, and the Magistrates' Courts hereafter mentioned, and Rules affecting the conduct of civil suits shall be so framed as to secure as far as may be that cases shall be decided on their merits according to substantial justice without excessive regard to technicalities of pleading or procedure, and without unnecessary delay. Subject hereto, and so far as the same do not extend, the procedure, Rules, and Regulations of the High Court shall be the same as the procedure, Rules, and Regulations of the English Courts.

28. In civil matters, when the amount or value in dispute exceeds 500*l.* sterling, an appeal shall lie from the High Court to Her Majesty in Council.

Every appeal shall be brought within such time, and in such manner as regards the form and transmission of the appeal, as may be prescribed by any Rules of Procedure made by Her Majesty in Council.

29. There shall be Magistrates' Courts, with jurisdiction over all persons within the districts assigned to them. A Magistrate's Court shall be a Court of Record, and shall have such jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases respectively as may be prescribed in pursuance of this Order.

30.—(1.) The Administrator may from time to time determine the number of Magistrates' Courts required within North-Eastern Rhodesia, and, by notice in the "Gazette," from time to time assign to each such Court the local limits of the district within which it is to have jurisdiction, and specify the place or places at which the Court is to be held.

(2.) The Administrator, with the approval of the Commissioner, may appoint a Magistrate to each such Court, and, if occasion requires, any Assistant Magistrates.

(3.) Every Assistant Magistrate may exercise all the jurisdiction of the Court, and the provisions of this Order with respect to Magistrates shall apply to Assistant Magistrates: provided that, in the conduct of business, every Assistant Magistrate shall be subject to the directions of the Magistrate.

(4.) A Magistrate appointed to one Court may exercise the jurisdiction of any other Court if present therein.

(5.) The salaries of Magistrates shall be fixed by the Administrator with the approval of the Commissioner, and shall not be increased or diminished without his approval.

(6.) In the case of illness, absence, or other emergency the Administrator may appoint a competent person to act as Magistrate or Assistant Magistrate. He shall forthwith report every such appointment and the circumstances thereof to the Commissioner for his approval, and when the Commissioner disapproves any such appointment the person so appointed shall cease to act after notice of the disapproval has been received by the Administrator.

31. A Magistrate upon appointment may forthwith enter upon the duties of his office, but the appointment is subject to confirmation by a Secretary of State; if such confirmation is refused, the Commissioner shall give public notice thereof in the "Gazette," and thereupon the powers of the Magistrate shall cease. A Magistrate may at any time be removed from office by a Secretary of State, or by the Administrator, with the approval of a Secretary of State, but not otherwise.

32. A Magistrate on appointment shall, before exercising any of the functions of his office, in open Court take the following oath:—

I, A.B., do promise and swear that I will faithfully, impartially, and diligently execute to the best of my abilities the duties of the office of Magistrate. So help me God.

33. Subject to any Regulations and Rules of Court, appeals shall lie to the High Court from the Magistrates' Courts.

34.—(1.) The Commissioner may suspend a Judge or Magistrate from his office for misconduct, but shall first cause him to be furnished with a written statement of the acts of misconduct alleged against him, and cause him to be called on to state in writing by a given day (which shall allow a reasonable interval) any grounds upon which he relies to exculpate himself.

(2.) If the suspension takes place, the Commissioner shall forthwith transmit a full report of the matter, and the proofs of the alleged misconduct, to a Secretary of State, who may confirm or disallow the suspension.

(3.) If the suspension is confirmed, the suspended officer is thereby removed from office; if it is disallowed, the suspended officer is thereby restored to office, and is entitled to any salary that has been withheld during his suspension.

(4.) If the Secretary of State is of opinion that the officer deserves punishment, but not the extreme penalty of removal from office, he may, instead of disallowing the suspension, direct that the officer be restored to office, but be required to serve at a reduced salary, either permanently or for a stated period; or that a specific sum be deducted from any salary due or to become due to the officer; or that he be transferred to a lower office.

35. In civil cases between natives the High Court and the Magistrates' Court shall be guided by native law so far as that law is not repugnant to natural justice or morality, or to any Order made by Her Majesty in Council, or to any Regulation made under this Order. In any such case the Court may obtain the assistance of one or two native assessors, to advise the Court upon native law and customs, but the decision of the Court shall be given by the Judge or Magistrate alone. In all other respects the Court shall follow, as far as possible, the procedure observed in similar cases in England.

36. If in any civil case between natives a question arises as to the effect of a marriage contracted, according to native law or custom, by a native in the lifetime of one or more other wives married to him according to native law or custom, the Court may treat such marriage as valid for all civil purposes, in so far as polygamous marriages are recognized by the said native law or custom.

37. The Commissioner by Queen's Regulations, or the Administrator by Regulation, may make such other or further provisions as from time to time may appear desirable to secure the more efficient working of the several Courts constituted by this Order.

PART V.—NATIVE ADMINISTRATION.

38.—(1.) The Administrator may from time to time, with the approval of the Commissioner, subject to confirmation by a Secretary of State, appoint an officer to be called the Secretary for Native Affairs, and officers to be called Native Commissioners, and, if occasion requires, Assistant Native Commissioners, and may, by notice in the "Gazette," prescribe the powers, duties, salaries, and districts to be assigned to such officers.

(2.) The provisions of this Order with respect to the appointment, salaries, suspension, and removal of Magistrates shall apply to the appointment, salaries, suspension, and removal of the Secretary for Native Affairs, Native Commissioners, and Assistant Native Commissioners, and any other persons employed in the administration of native affairs, and the Commissioner and a Secretary of State shall have and exercise the like powers with respect to these officers as under this Order are exercisable by them in the case of Magistrates.

(3) The Commissioner may by Queen's Regulations confer upon any Native Commissioner or Assistant Native Commissioner such jurisdiction, not exceeding that exercisable by Magistrates, as may from time to time appear to him to be expedient.

39. No conditions, disabilities, or restrictions shall, without the previous consent of a Secretary of State, be imposed upon natives by Regulation which do not equally apply to persons other than natives, save in respect of fire-arms, ammunition, liquor, or any matter in respect of which a Secretary of State, upon the recommendation of the Administrator, thinks fit to authorize any Regulations or Queen's Regulations.

40. The Company shall from time to time assign to the natives inhabiting North-Eastern Rhodesia land sufficient for their occupation, whether as tribes or portions of tribes, and suitable for their agricultural and pastoral requirements, including in all cases a fair and equitable proportion of springs or permanent water.

41. All questions relating to the settlement of natives on the lands within North-Eastern Rhodesia shall be dealt with and decided by the Administrator, but all such decisions shall be reported to and be subject to review by the Commissioner.

42. A native may acquire, hold, encumber, and dispose of land on the same conditions as a person who is not a native, but no contract for encumbering or alienating land the property of a native shall be valid unless the contract is made in the presence of a Magistrate, is attested by him, and bears a certificate signed by him stating that the consideration for the contract is fair and reasonable, and that he has satisfied himself that the native understands the transaction.

43. The Company shall retain the mineral rights in all land assigned to natives. If the Company should require any such land for the purpose of mineral development or as sites of townships, or for railways or other public works, the Administrator, by direction of the Company, and upon good and sufficient cause shown, may, with the approval of the Commissioner, order the natives to remove from such land or any portion thereof, and shall assign to them just and liberal compensation in land elsewhere, situate in as convenient a position as possible, sufficient and suitable for their agricultural and pastoral requirements, containing a fair and equitable proportion of springs or permanent water, and, as far as possible, equally suitable for their requirements in all respects as the land from which they are ordered to remove.

44.—(1.) No native shall be removed from any kraal or from any land assigned to them for occupation, except after full inquiry by, and by order of the Administrator, approved by the Commissioner.

(2.) If any person without such order removes, or attempts to remove, any native from any kraal, or from any land, unless in execution of the process of a competent Court, he shall, in addition to any other proceeding to which he is liable, be guilty of an offence against this Order, and on conviction before the High Court shall be liable to imprisonment with or without hard labour for any period not exceeding two years, or to a fine not exceeding 100*l.*, or to both.

45. The Commissioner may, if he thinks fit, refer any question relating to natives for report to any Judge of the High Court, and the Judge shall thereupon make such inquiry as he thinks fit, and shall report to the Commissioner the result of such inquiry. The Commissioner may act with reference to any such report as he thinks fit.

46.—(1.) The Administrator shall, when so required by the Commissioner, appoint in any magisterial district a subordinate Tribunal, to consist of the Magistrate, or any Assistant Magistrate, and two Assessors, from time to time selected by a Judge of the High Court upon the request of the Commissioner.

(2.) Such Tribunal shall report or make recommendations to the Commissioner upon all questions relating to natives referred to it by, or by the direction of, the Commissioner, or by any Judge to whom any question relating to natives has been referred by the Commissioner. The Commissioner may deal with any such reports or recommendations as he thinks fit.

47. In case of a revolt against the Company, or other misconduct committed by a native Chief or tribe, the Administrator may impose a reasonable fine upon the offender. The Administrator shall forthwith report every such case to the Commissioner, who may remit the fine in whole or in part; the Administrator shall give effect to any such remission.

48.—(1.) The Commissioner shall transmit to a Secretary of State a report upon every case relating to natives dealt with by him under this part of this Order, together with copies of all reports and recommendations and all documents relating to such case, and a Secretary of State may review any case, and reverse or modify any decision given or order made therein, and may give such directions in the matter as he thinks fit, and due effect shall be given to such directions by all persons.

(2.) Provided that such directions shall only be binding where a Secretary of State has, within twelve months after receiving the report of the Commissioner given notice to the Commissioner that he intends to review any such case.

PART VI.—MISCELLANEOUS.

49.—(1.) Where the approval of a Secretary of State is required under this Order for the appointment of any officer, such officer may, upon appointment, enter upon and perform the duties of his office before such approval has been signified, but until approved or disapproved by a Secretary of State, such appointment shall be regarded as provisional only.

(2.) If any such appointment is disapproved by a Secretary of State, the person so appointed shall cease to hold the office as soon as the signification of such disapproval is received by the Administrator, but without prejudice to anything lawfully done by him during his provisional appointment.

(3.) The Administrator shall forthwith report to the Commissioner, who shall report to a Secretary of State every such provisional appointment.

(4.) Notice of the disapproval of a Secretary of State shall be published in the "Gazette."

50. Judicial notice shall be taken of this Order, and of the commencement thereof, and of any Regulation made under this Order, and published in the "Gazette."

51. This Order shall be published in the "Gazette," and also at such public place within the limits of this Order as the Commissioner shall appoint.

This Order shall commence and have effect as follows:—

(1.) As to the making of any warrant or appointment, and as to the framing of any Regulations or Rules, and the approval thereof, immediately from and after the passing of this Order.

ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

No. 11.

[July 4, 1899.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, June 26, 1899.

Military Equipment Company's Contract with Argentine Government.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a letter which has been received from the Military Equipment, Stores, and Tortoise Tents Company, inclosing papers relative to a contract for the delivery to the Government of the Argentine Republic of certain articles manufactured by that Company.*

The contract in question was signed on the 20th September, 1898, and ratified by the Argentine Minister in London on the 28th September.

In the following month the President of the Sanitary Commission of the Argentine Army informed the Company that portions of the articles in course of manufacture were to be constructed on the same pattern as similar articles which had been separately ordered by the Argentine Government in France.

The Company were thus compelled to effect certain alterations. The progress of the work was delayed, and a portion of the articles was consequently not completed by the date fixed in the Contract as the latest on which delivery could be made, viz., the 23rd February, 1899. On the 22nd of that month the Company were apprised of the decision of the Argentine Government to rescind the Contract as regards the goods which were still unfinished, and they were consequently left with a very considerable part of the order on their hands.

By the 10th Article of the Contract the two parties agree to submit any differences which may arise between them to arbitration, and the Company have expressed their willingness to take this course.

I am to request you to take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and to favour his Lordship with your opinion whether this is a case in which the demand of the Company for arbitration may properly be supported by diplomatic representations, or, if not, whether you think that any other, and if so what, measure of assistance should be rendered by Her Majesty's Government to the Company in regard to their claim.

Lord Salisbury will at the same time be glad to be favoured with any observations of a more general nature which you may desire to offer on the papers.

I have, &c.
(Signed) MARTIN GOSSELIN.

* Military Equipment, Stores, and Tortoise Tents Company, June 13, 1899.

Report.

In our opinion, the demand of the Company for arbitration may be properly supported by diplomatic representations. According to the statement of the Company, delivery at the time stipulated was prevented by the changes made by the Argentine Government, and we think that the right of the Argentine Government under these circumstances to refuse to accept delivery is a matter suitable for arbitration.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, February 17, 1899.

Administration of Justice at Wei-hai Wei.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a letter from the Admiralty, inclosing a copy of a communication received from the Commander-in-chief on the China Station, in which he asks for instructions in the matter of the administration of justice at Wei-hai Wei.

By the Convention between this country and China, signed at Peking on the 1st July last, of which a copy is annexed, it is provided that the territory leased to Great Britain shall comprise the Island of Liukung (on which the present British head-quarters are established) and all the islands in the Bay of Wei-hai Wei, and a belt of land 10 English miles wide along the entire coast-line of that bay; and it is further provided that within the above-mentioned territory Great Britain shall have sole jurisdiction. The lease is to continue for so long a period as Port Arthur shall remain in the occupation of Russia.

The island is at present administered by a British naval officer, as Commissioner for the territory. He acts as Magistrate for the whole island, and deals summarily with all offences against law and order. This arrangement is stated to have worked satisfactorily up to now—no serious crimes having been committed.

Admiral Seymour is, however, anxious to be furnished with instructions, for his guidance, in the event of any serious cases arising in the future, and he submits the following points for special consideration in this connexion:—

1. As to offences of any kind in the leased territory committed by subjects of a civilized State other than Great Britain.
2. Offences committed by British subjects.
3. Serious offences, e.g., murder committed by Chinese subjects.

With regard to the last category, it appears to Lord Salisbury that no jurisdictional difficulty can arise as between Her Majesty's Government and that of China, since China has given Her Majesty full and complete jurisdiction over Chinese subjects. It may, however, possibly be desirable to make some formal pronouncement of a public character, defining and regulating the conditions under which such jurisdiction is exerciseable, and on this point Lord Salisbury would be glad to receive any observations or suggestions which you may be good enough to offer.

With reference to 2, it is evident that if Wei-hai Wei were still to be regarded as an integral part of the Chinese Empire, Her Majesty might continue to exercise jurisdiction over British subjects under the China Orders in Council. Such a contention would, however, be clearly unadvisable, since foreign civilized nations would thereby be induced to maintain that their respective extra-territorial jurisdictions over their own nationals which existed at Wei-hai Wei as in other parts of China before the leasing of the territory to Great Britain were still in force.

It appears clear to Lord Salisbury that Her Majesty's Government must claim jurisdiction within the limits of the leased territory over all persons, British, Chinese, and foreigners alike, and that the question is on what ground such a claim can most suitably be based.

The nearest precedent to the case now under discussion would appear to be that of Cyprus, which is not British territory, but is now under the Administration of this country.

The only formal renunciation of the Capitulations, as regards Cyprus, was that made by Austria-Hungary, who signed a Declaration to that effect in 1880, when Her Majesty's Government signed a similar Declaration in respect of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The French Government stated "that they adhered to the English judicial reform in Cyprus." The question was not formally raised by other Powers.

A Memorandum prepared by the Sub-Librarian of this Department on the 13th October last, respecting the surrender of extra-territorial jurisdiction in Cyprus, and containing an account of the negotiations on the subject with the French and Austro-Hungarian Governments, is annexed.

On the 14th September, 1878, an Order in Council (copy inclosed) was passed constituting a High Commissioner and a Legislative Council in Cyprus, with power to the former, with the advice of the latter, to make Laws, Ordinances, &c., and declaring the Levant Orders in Council to be abrogated in the island.

On the 17th January, 1879, the High Commissioner of Cyprus, with the advice of the Legislative Council, passed an Ordinance for the establishment of a High Court of Justice. Section 10 of this Ordinance (of which a copy is also inclosed), under the heading of "jurisdiction," runs as follows:—

All jurisdiction, criminal "and civil, over all persons and in all cases, other than such as would have been under the sole jurisdiction and authority of the Ottoman Courts if the said Convention (that of the 4th June, 1878, between Great Britain and Turkey) had not been made, shall, subject and according to the provisions of this Ordinance, be vested in and exercised by the High Court."

I am to request that you will take this matter into consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to the procedure which should be adopted with a view to providing for the exercise by Her Majesty of jurisdiction over British subjects and foreigners at Wei-hai Wei, and as to the instructions which should be sent to Admiral Sir E. Seymour for his guidance in the matter, pending a definite settlement of the question by Order in Council or otherwise, as may appear best adapted to meet the case.

Lord Salisbury would also be glad to receive any observations of a general character which you may wish to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.

Ordinance—(Cyprus)	January	17, 1879.

Report.

In our opinion Wei-hai Wei is at present part of Her Majesty's dominions, in virtue of cession from China.

An Order in Council should be passed as soon as possible making provision for the administration of justice there.

All persons in the territory ceded, whether Chinese, British, or subjects of other Powers, are alike amenable to British Tribunals and British law, as the Queen may direct.

So far as the Chinese are concerned, provision should be made for maintaining Chinese laws and customs, so far as they are not repugnant to humanity or morality.

British subjects and subjects of all other countries should be under a system of British law, say such as prevails in Hong Kong.

The administration and enforcement of the law should, unless it be considered proper to appoint a Judge, be confided to the Officer in Command.

Sailors and soldiers should, of course, remain subject to military and naval law.

Until such an Order in Council be passed, the Officer in Command should, we think, be instructed himself to deal with all crimes committed by British subjects, or subjects of countries other than China, according to naval law. He should not, in any case, send them to the Consul at Chefoo.

He should also deal in like manner, when necessary, with crimes committed by Chinese, having regard to their usages; but probably in most cases the Headmen of the villages will be able to deal with Chinese crime.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 3, 1899.

Execution of duties of Sheriff at Shanghae. O. in C.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a despatch addressed to him by Her Majesty's Minister in China, on the subject of a difficulty which has arisen at Shanghae in connection with the execution of the duties of Sheriff at that port.

The principal duty of that office at Shanghae is the control of Her Majesty's prison and its inmates, though the office naturally embraces other functions of comparatively a minor kind.

Under "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1865," Part V, Article 42, the duties of Sheriff are assigned to Her Majesty's Consul at Shanghae.

At the time when the Order in Council was issued, the Consul was the principal Consular officer at Shanghae. Now, however, the principal Consular officer is the Consul-General, and the only official of the rank of Consul is Her Majesty's Consul and Assistant Judge, whose duties are almost entirely judicial.

The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court at Shanghae is of opinion that, so long as the wording of "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1865," remains unaltered, it is the Consul and Assistant Judge, and not the Consul-General, who is called upon to perform the duties of Sheriff.

A difficulty, however, arises from the circumstance that the Consul, in his capacity of Assistant Judge, occasionally acts as Chief Justice. Such a position is incompatible with the office of Sheriff.

It may also happen, in consequence of changes in Her Majesty's Consular Service in China, that no officer of the rank of Consul may be left at Shanghae, in which case the office of Sheriff will be vacant.

In these circumstances, Mr. A. Gray has been consulted with a view to the preparation of an Order in Council to meet the requirements of the case. Mr. Gray, in a letter which is transmitted herewith, observes that "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1865," appears to be the only one which provides that the Decrees, &c., of the Court are to be executed by an officer with the title of Sheriff, and that, under all the more recent Orders in Council, the corresponding duties are performed by an "officer of the Court." He suggests that the present opportunity should be taken to assimilate the China Orders in Council to the other more recent Orders in this respect.

I am to transmit to you the draft of an Order which has been prepared by Mr. Gray, and which provides that all Decrees, sentences, and Orders of Her Majesty's Supreme Court for China, Japan, and Corea shall be executed by such officer of the Court or Consular officer as Her Majesty's Minister in China shall from time to time appoint.

I am to request that you will take the draft and the papers noted in the accompanying list into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the draft Order can properly be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

WHEREAS, by Treaty and otherwise, Her Majesty has power and jurisdiction within China, Japan, and Corea:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," and otherwise in her vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as "The China, Japan, and Corea (Supreme Court) Order in Council, 1899."

2. All Decrees, Orders, and sentences made and passed by Her Majesty's Supreme Court for China, Japan, and Corea shall be executed by such officer of the Court or Consular officer as Her Majesty's Minster in China shall from time to time appoint for the purpose.

China, Japan, and Corea Patents, &c., O. in C., 1899. Interpretation of § 1.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list relating to the interpretation to be placed on the last paragraph of section 1 of "The China, Japan, and Corea Patents, &c., Order in Council, 1899," a copy of which is inclosed (see Paper A).

Under the provisions of that paragraph a prosecution for the infringement of a trade-mark, by or on behalf of the prosecutor who is not a British subject, may not be entertained by the British Consular Courts in China without the consent in writing of Her Majesty's Representative in China, who may withhold such consent, unless he is satisfied that effectual provision exists for the punishment in Consular or other Courts in China of similar acts committed by the subjects of the State of which the prosecutor is a subject, in relation to or affecting the interests of British subjects.

It will be seen from the inclosed correspondence with the German Ambassador at this Court that the German Government are anxious to make arrangements with Her Majesty's Government for the mutual protection of trade-marks in China, and that, provided reciprocity of treatment is granted by Her Majesty's Government, the German Consular Courts in China will be prepared to proceed against German subjects and protected persons in their districts in cases of forgery of trade-marks protected in Germany for the benefit of British subjects.

The German Ambassador in his note of the 23rd August (Paper D) raises the question whether Her Majesty's Government could not, as regards forgeries of German trade-marks by British subjects, give once for all consent required by the last paragraph of section 1 of the Order in Council.

I am to inquire whether you are of opinion that, under the paragraph in question, Her Majesty Consular Courts in China can properly accept one general consent in writing from Her Majesty's Representative in regard to prosecutions by or on behalf of subjects of a given State as covering all further applications from subjects of the same State.

Lord Salisbury would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to make on the question.

Claims on China for copper looted from wrecks of "Bellona' and "Himeji Maru."

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affairs at Peking,* relative to a claim put forward by two British Insurance Companies at Hong Kong against the Chinese Government for compensation on account of the loss of a quantity of copper insured in the Companies' offices and forming part of the cargo of the steam-ship "Bellona," which was wrecked on the Paracel Islands off the southern coast of China on the 30th September, 1894.

A further claim is also put forward by the same Companies on behalf of underwriters at Lloyds, on account of certain copper lost in similar circumstances and forming part of the cargo of the Japanese steam-ship "Himeji Maru," which was wrecked in the same neighbourhood in November 1896.

* Mr. Bax-Ironside, No. 272, September 4, 1899.

The circumstances of the case are fully set forth in the Companies' Petition of the 4th April, 1899, which forms Inclosure 1 in Mr. Bax-Ironside's despatch, and they may be briefly summed up as follows:—

As soon as possible, after the receipt of news of the wreck of the "Bellona," salvage vessels were dispatched by the Companies to the spot, but such vessels, owing to the bad weather prevailing at the time, were compelled to put back to Hong Kong without effecting their object, and on their subsequent return to the Paracels it was found that the greater part of the copper had been looted by junks and carried off. A quantity of the copper was subsequently traced to the houses of certain junk owners in a village of the island of Hainan, but in spite of the efforts of the Companies' agents, and the representations made by them to the local authorities, no effectual assistance was given for the recovery of the same, except as regards a very small proportion.

Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affairs has made the claim the subject of correspondence with the Tsung-li Yamên, but the latter have refused assent to the principle of compensation; and Mr. Bax-Ironside has addressed a reply to the petitioners (Inclosure 2 in his despatch) in which he has stated that, for the reasons explained therein, he does not see his way to further pressing the claim unless specially instructed by Lord Salisbury to do so.

I am to request that you will take the matter into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the view taken by Mr. Bax-Ironside in his letter to the petitioning Companies of the 1st September, 1899, should be approved, or whether there are grounds on which the claim, either as regards the goods ex "Bellona" or as regards those in the "Himeji Maru," should be pressed.

His Lordship will also be glad to receive any general observations in regard to the case which you may desire to offer.

I have, &c.

Report.

It appears to us to be beyond question that the Chinese authorities in the Island of Hainan intentionally abstained from giving any effective assistance for the recovery of the copper. If the British Consul at Kiangchow had been at once applied to, and had this claim on the Chinese Government been more promptly advanced, we think that the claim of the Companies might properly have been supported by Her Majesty's Government.

But in view of the fact that the agent of the Companies endeavoured to make his own arrangements, and of the great lapse of time, we do not advise that Her Majesty's Government should press this claim.

Foreign Office, November 23, 1899.

Gentlemen,

Devolution of real property at Shanghae owned by British subjects.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the accompanying despatch from Sir N. Hannen,* Chief Justice of Her Majesty's Supreme Court at Shanghae, in which he forwards, and enters into certain explanations respecting, the text of a judgment recently delivered by him, which involves a novel decision on the subject of the devolution of real property at Shanghae owned by British subjects. The essence of that decision is that the law of England as applicable to real property situate in England is declared to be the law which governs the devolution of, and dealings with, land in Shanghae owned by British subjects.

* Sir N. Hannen, June 12, 1899.

From the terms of his despatch it is clear that Sir N. Hannen is not unaware of the fact that his decision marks a departure from a principle which has hitherto been generally recognized, namely, the principle that the devolution of real property is governed by the lex loci rei sitæ. Notwithstanding the arguments used by the Chief Justice in favour of the views laid down by him, Lord Salisbury is advised that, in view of the opinion from time to time expressed by the Law Officers of the Crown (see annexed copies of their Reports), as well as for other reasons, it remains a matter of grave doubt whether the judgment, if considered from an abstract point of view, is sound in law, or whether it would be upheld if subjected to review by a competent superior Tribunal. It seems clear, at any rate, that the view of the law thus laid down for Her Majesty's Consular Courts in China and Corea differs altogether from the law hitherto acted upon in Her Majesty's extra-territorial Courts elsewhere all over the world, and Her Majesty's Government might conceivably find themselves placed in some difficulty if the Chinese Government were to challenge the validity of the principle enunciated in Sir N. Hannen's judgment, as being contrary to the universally accepted and well-settled doctrines of private international law.

An appeal lies from the decision of the Chief Justice to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, but in the present case it may be assumed that the unsuccessful opponents of the grant of administration have no sufficient interest at stake to induce them of their own motion to pursue the matter further, while, having regard to all the circumstances it may probably be considered undesirable that they should be afforded by Her Majesty's Government special inducements for doing so.

On the other hand, it has been suggested that the matter is one which might possibly be referred by Her Majesty to the Judicial Committee for their advice under the provisions of section 4 of 3 & 4 Wm. IV, cap. 41.

Lord Salisbury would be glad if you would take the papers inclosed into your consideration and favour his Lordship with your advice, whether:—

1. Sir N. Hannen's judgment is, in your opinion, sound in law or not; and
2. If not, whether means—and if so what means—should be taken to bring that judgment for review before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Lord Salisbury would further be glad to receive—

3. Any observations which you may desire to offer generally on this matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

Report.

Although we are unable to agree with the arguments and dicta in the judgment of Sir Nicholas Hannen, we think that the conclusion at which he has arrived in this particular case is substantially correct.

The question was: What is the law of succession to be applied in the case of real property in Shanghae, which belonged to a British subject, the claimants being themselves British subjects?

No question arose as to the easements or other incidents to which the tenure of the land was subject. If any such questions had arisen they would, according to general principles, have had to be determined by the law of China. Nor did any question arise with reference to the form of conveyance required for the effectual transfer of such land inter vivos.

As regards succession the case is different. All questions in regard to rights, whether of property or person arising between British subjects, fall under the jurisdiction of the British authorities by Article XV of the Treaty of Tien-tsin. By Article 5 of the Order in Council of 1865 that jurisdiction is, as far as circumstances admit, to be exercised in conformity with the law of England.

No complaint could be made by the Chinese Government if Her Majesty, by Order in Council, had expressly applied the English law of succession to real property held by British subjects in China in cases affecting only British subjects; and in the Order in Council of 1881, provisions were in fact made (Articles XXII to XXVI) for registration of mortgages of land or houses in China. The question is, what law Her Majesty has in fact applied to succession as between British subjects in case of real property in China. Sir Nicholas Hannen states expressly that the law of England has been followed as regards the transmission of such land ever since the extra-territorial jurisdiction was established.

The Chinese law of succession is obviously unsuitable to be applied to British subjects, according to the statements made by Sir N. Hannen as to its nature, and the attempt to apply it would lead to consequences which could never have been contemplated as even possible.

Under these circumstances we think that, although there is no express Order in Council on the subject, it must be taken that the law which Her Majesty has applied to succession of land in China as between British subjects is that which in fact has always existed there since the Consular jurisdiction was established.

It is to be observed that Sir N. Hannen states that the law of China would recognize as governing the succession to land whatever law has in fact been adopted by the English in China. We think that the Chief Justice was right in rejecting the law of domicil. It has never been applied in the case of real property, and its adoption now would, according to the Chief Justice, be inconsistent with the practice which has hitherto prevailed with regard to such land in China.

2. We do not advise that any appeal from the Judgment should be encouraged by Her Majesty's Government. It is, of course, open to the parties to appeal if they choose, but the reversal of the judgment would, we think, be attended by unfortunate consequences.

In any case we should not think it desirable to refer a question of this sort for the advice of the Judicial Committee under 3 & 4 Wm. IV, cap. 41.

3. We are hardly in a position to say whether it is desirable that there should be an Order in Council declaring the law on this point applicable to British subjects in China. The Chief Justice seems to think that there is some uncertainty and disquiet on the subject in the minds of British residents in China, and if this exists to any considerable extent, it might be desirable to pass an Order in Council applying the English law of succession with, or without, any modifications. The Chinese Government could not raise any objection to the passing of such an Order in Council for the reasons given by Mr. Hall in his work on "Foreign Jurisdiction of the British Crown." pp. 166, 167.

We may observe that in the Treaty of 1886 with the Sultan of Zanzibar, by Article XX British law is expressly applied to succession to immovable property, and in the Order in Council of 1865 the provisions as to bankruptcy. Article LII, coupled with Article V, evidently imply that the real property of an English bankrupt would vest in the trustee.

Seizure of trawler "Fulmar" outside territorial limits of Iceland: doctrine of hot pursuit.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, July 13, 1899.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying papers, as noted in the annexed list, relative to the seizure of the British steam-trawler "Fulmar" outside the territorial waters of Iceland on a charge of having trawled within those limits.

The "Fulmar," accompanied by the "Euphrates," of Hull, and other trawlers was, on the morning of Sunday, the 9th April last, in the neighbourhood of Recherness, in Iceland, when she was sighted by the Danish gun-boat "Heimdal."

As will be seen from the statements of the British skippers and the declaration of the Commander of the Danish gun-boat, there is a conflict of evidence as to whether

HER BRITANNIC MAJESTY'S SUPREME COURT.

Before Sir Nicholas J. Hannen, Chief Justice.

Hanson v. Watson and others.

JUDGMENT was delivered in this case, which arose out of an application made by Mr. J. C. Hanson (Messrs. Dowdall, Hanson, and McNeill), as the representative of Mrs. Watson, for a grant of administration of her late husband's estate.

Mr. H. P. Wilkinson opposed on behalf of Mr. Thomas Graham Watson, and Mr. Platt on behalf of Messrs. John Dunlop Watson and George Best Watson, brothers of Mr. Andrew Vans Watson, who died intestate, and Jane Ann Watson his sister. The suit involved important issues.

His Lordship said—

This is a case in which John Currie Hanson makes an application as the representative of Mrs. Watson for a grant of administration to her of her late husband's estate. It is opposed by Mr. Thomas Graham Watson, Mr. John Dunlop Watson, Mr. George Best Watson, and Miss Jane Ann Watson, brothers and sister of the deceased. The deceased was Andrew Vans Watson who was domiciled in Scotland, and died on the 8th November, 1898, intestate, and without issue or parents him surviving, but leaving Emma Watson, his widow. The said Andrew Vans Watson was at the time of his death entitled to an undivided share in a certain lot of land situated in the Foochow Road, Shanghae, within the area originally marked out as a British Settlement, and known in the books for registration of land kept at Her Britannic Majesty's Consulate as lot No. 59, register No. 46. The exact claim of the plaintiff is for a grant of letters of administration to him as the attorney of the said Emma Watson and for her use and benefit and until she shall duly apply for, and obtain, letters of administration to be granted to her of the estate and effects of the said Arthur Vans Watson situate within the jurisdiction of this Court.

The grant of administration was opposed by John Dunlop Watson, George Best Watson, and Jane Ann Watson on the ground that they, together with Thomas Graham Watson, were next-of-kin surviving the said Andrew Vans Watson, but on the argument of the case they merely claimed to have joint administration with the plaintiff, and seemed to base their claim upon the possibility of there being property belonging to the estate other than the piece of land before mentioned. Administration to the plaintiff was also opposed by the said Thomas Graham Watson, who claimed that administration ought to be granted to him and to him alone on the ground that he was the lawful next-of-kin and heir according to Scots law of the said Andrew Vans Watson.

The facts of the case are not in dispute, and a great many of the arguments and contentions are common to all the parties. It is agreed by everybody that the land in question is what is called immobilia and that the law of England—and probably of every other country—is that immobilia are subject to the law of the place where they are situated. Now the place where this land is situated is China, and under ordinary circumstances the law applicable to its devolution would be the law of China, but it is said that this law ought not and cannot be applied in the present case. It is contended that the law of China is a non-Christian law and that it is of a nature which is quite opposed in some of its aspects to our notions of right and justice. For instance, it is said that in the succession of land the son of a concubine would be considered before the legitimate daughter of a wife. It is also contended that to apply Chinese law would be disastrous to a large portion of British land-holders in Shanghae. I am told that by Chinese law a man cannot devise his landed property by will; if this is so, as a large portion of land in Shanghae belonging to British subjects has passed by will, to hold that Chinese law governs its devolution would be to invalidate the title to a large portion of the land here. That the law with regard to land is not necessarily the lex loci where the country of its situation is a non-Christian one, and where British subjects have extra-territorial rights seem to be shown by the cases of Turkey and Morocco. In Turkey it has been considered necessary by special provision of a Treaty to affirm that all matters connected with the land and its ownership shall be determined by the Turkish Tribunals; and in the case of Morocco it has been considered necessary to stipulate that the law of Morocco shall apply to land owned by British subjects there; from this it may, I think, reasonably be inferred that land in non-Christian countries where extra-territoriality exists does not, apart from Treaty, come under the law or the authorities of the place. Again, if we consider the reason why the common law of England says that the lex loci applies to immovables, we find that the reason does not apply to land situated here.

Mr. Dicey, in his book on the "Conflict of Laws," points out that the only law where immovables are concerned which is effective is the law of the place. And Mr. Westlake, in his "Private International Law," p. 188, says: "The principle of the forum situs, in its application to the land itself is incontrovertible. Since only the authorities that exist on the spot can employ force to give possession or take it away . . . ." But this is not true with regard to Chinese law and Chinese authorities as applied to land in Shanghae. The Chinese Courts and Chinese authorities have no jurisdiction over any property, whether movable or immovable, belonging to a British subject. It would be useless for a British Court when adjudicating with regard to land in France to say that it passed to "A" when the law of France said that it passed to "B," for the French Courts and French authorities would see that the land passed to "B" no matter what the English Court had decided. But the case here is entirely different. If an English Court decides that "A" is entitled to land in succession to the deceased owner, the Chinese Courts and authorities cannot in any way interfere, although that decision may be entirely contrary to the Chinese law upon the subject. When a piece of land in Shanghae is acquired by a British subject from the original Chinese owners the Chinese title-deeds are brought to the Consulate, they are sent in to the Chinese authorities, and if they are found in order what is called a Taotai's title-deed is issued by the Chinese authorities and is handed to the British subject through his Consular authorities. If this piece of land is transferred from a British subject to any other foreigner the transfer is executed in the land register of Her Majesty's Consulate-General and the Taotai (the territorial Chinese official) is informed that he may know from whom to claim the ground rent.

The British Consular authorities have always maintained, and successfully maintained, that the Chinese authorities have no right to do anything more than take note of and register the transfer. The Chinese authorities, once the land has passed into the possession of a British subject, have nothing more to do with it, have no jurisdiction over it, can make no Regulations concerning it, and are no longer, in fact, in any way interested in it, except to receive the small ground rent amounting to some 14*s.* an acre. It is true that in some of the title-deeds (of which that relating to the lot mentioned above is not one) forfeiture clauses are contained; but in practice these have never been enforced and their existence does not seem to me to affect the question now under consideration, because these forfeiture clauses cannot be enforced by the Chinese authorities, but only through the British Courts by the British authorities. I therefore think that I am justified in holding that the Chinese law does not affect the devolution of land belonging to British subjects although that land is situated in China. But although I hold that the Chinese law does not apply in such a case as the present, yet as the subject matter is undoubtedly immovable, the lex loci, according to the common law of England, must be applied to it; we have, therefore, to ascertain what the lex loci is.

Mr. Wilkinson, on behalf of the defendant, Thomas Graham Watson, has contended that the law of China being put aside, the law of the domicile of the owner should be the law to govern in this case. He alleged many reasons which have pressed me very much for applying the lex domicilii. He pointed out that a man probably knows how the law of his domicile will dispose of his immovable property if he does not direct by will how it shall be distributed, but he may be quite ignorant how any other law will dispose of it, and he argued that the intention of the owner of property who died intestate will be best carried out if we apply the lex domicilii. This may be so, and it may be more consonant with justice that the lex domicilii should be applied, but I think that for me to determine in such a case as the present that the lex domicilii applies would be making and not interpreting the law. What has been the practice here in Shanghae, where land has been owned by British subjects for more than fifty years? For a long period it was treated as personalty, and at first it is probable that this way of looking at the land owned by British subjects here was correct; for most, if not all, the land which was first leased was leased by merchants and formed part of the partnership property. So long as it formed part of the partnership property it was properly treated as personalty. As years went on, partners in the firms went home, but left some of their money in the houses and land on which their business had been conducted, and let to the continuing partners the land and houses which belonged to them; but it did not occur to them or to anybody else at the time that this turned the land from personalty, as it may be contended that it had been before, to realty as it is contended that it became afterwards.

The Law Officers of the Crown have now determined that for probate duty purposes the land here is realty, not personalty; but during the whole of this time sales, leases, and mortgages of land have taken place and have been carried out in accordance with the law of England as modified by the Orders in Council.

If the law of the domicile of the owner is to govern in the case of succession to land here it must also govern the mode of transfer of land. Now British subjects in Shanghae come from all parts of the Empire, some of them from Canada, some from Australia, some from Scotland, some from Ireland, and some from Her Majesty's Indian Empire. Many of these do, and all of them may, own land in Shanghae. According to Tootal's Trusts the British subject does not lose his domicile of origin by residing in China; the result of this is that in the transfer of land here in Shanghae, if we hold that the law of the domicile is to govern, we shall have to inquire on every occasion what the method of land transfer in the country of the domicile of the owner is; so that no piece of land could be safely transferred from a British subject without first inquiring what that British subject's domicile was, and next what the law of transfer is in, it may be the French provinces of Canada, it may be Scotland, Ireland, or some other part of Her Majesty's dominions. This does not seem to me to be reasonable, and whether it is reasonable or not it is certain that it has not been the practice here. I cannot be quite sure, but I think I am right in saying that in no case has the law of the domicile of the owner of land been considered when dealing with it.

But suppose it is held that the Chinese law applies. There is no such thing as a law regulating the devolution or dealing with land throughout China. The land is subject to the local customs and the custom of the family owning it. If we were to ask any Chinese Magistrate what was the law relating to such land as that in question in this case, he would want to know what the custom was with regard to it, and it would never occur to him to disregard what had been the custom in dealing with it ever since this kind of tenure had come into existence. I think, therefore, that whatever way we look at it we come back to the same result, namely, that for my present purpose the lex loci in Shanghae is, in fact, that law which has been followed ever since land here has been owned by British subjects, i.e., the law of England. I therefore hold that the property in question in the present case is of the nature of immobilia, that it is subject to the lex loci, that the lex loci is the law of England applicable to immovables in England as modified (if it has been modified) by Orders in Council.

The form of administration is reserved; costs of the parties to come out of the estate.

the trawler was fishing when first observed, whether she was then in the territorial waters, and at what precise times the various incidents successively occurred from the moment of first observation until the seizure; but Lord Salisbury, having regard to the special purpose of the present reference, does not think it necessary to trouble you for an expression of your views as to these points.

Assuming, therefore, that the evidence for the prosecution was correct, the question arises whether a vessel, having fished within the territorial limit, and having subsequently escaped beyond it, can be legally pursued and captured outside the limit.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, to whom this point was referred, state that the practice in this respect of Her Majesty's ships employed on fishery duty is not to arrest foreign fishing-vessels for trespassing unless they are actually in British territorial waters at the time of arrest; but their Lordships point out that their practice is somewhat within the legal limits indicated by writers on international law, and suggest that the question is one for reference to you.

You will perceive that the matter has on previous occasions been brought before the Law Officers of the Crown, and that on the 5th November, 1891, an opinion was expressed by them—

"That in arresting and bringing back the barque 'St. Mary's Bay' into the port of Valparaiso the Chilean authorities did not . . . . infringe any principle of international law. A private ship of British nationality is, whilst lying within a foreign port, bound to obey the Regulations of that port, and for an infraction of those Regulations the port authorities may pursue the ship into the open sea and there arrest her, provided that the pursuit is promptly undertaken whilst the ship is still within territorial waters, or has only just escaped from them."

I am also to draw your attention to a statement contained in a note from the late Sir R. Morier to Mr. Chichkine ("Russia No. 2 (1893)," p. 77), to the effect that, in order that the right of capture on the high seas . . . . should be made perfect, it is necessary that the offence and flight should be continuous, and pursuit begun whilst the offending vessel is still within the territorial waters; and I am to add that this note was settled after a reference to the then Law Officers of the Crown, who reported in approval of its terms on the 23rd November, 1892.

Lord Salisbury will be glad to be informed—

1. Whether you concur in the view of your predecessors as above expressed.

2. Whether, if the Danish version of the facts be accepted in its entirety as correct, you consider that the general principles which were approved by your predecessors embrace, and can properly be applied to, the case of the "Fulmar."

3. Whether the pursuit in all cases must be begun before the territorial waters have been quitted by the offending ship in order to justify, on considerations of international law, its continuance on to the open sea.

Lord Salisbury will be glad at the same time to be favoured with any observations of a general character which you may have to offer on the doctrine of hot pursuit.

Report.

1. We concur in the view taken in the opinion given by the Law Officers on the 5th November, 1891.

2. These principles can properly be applied to the case of the "Fulmar."

3. In order to justify a seizure beyond the territorial waters it is necessary that the pursuit should have been undertaken immediately on the commission of the offence. In most cases it is obvious that such pursuit will, in fact, have been begun within the territorial waters. But cases may occur in which, though the offence was committed just within the limits of the territorial waters, the offender passed these limits before the pursuing vessel had actually started in pursuit. It is a question of fact in each case whether the pursuit can be fairly described as immediate. If it were, a seizure in the open sea would not be unlawful, because, during the brief period that elapsed before the pursuing vessel got actually under way, the offender succeeded in passing out of the territorial waters.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, July 18, 1899.

Changes in Codes of Mixed Tribunals.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to changes which the Egyptian Government propose to introduce in the Codes of the Mixed Tribunals, with a view to give criminal jurisdiction to those Tribunals in cases of fraudulent bankruptcy coming under their notice in the course of civil suits.

The proposed changes are the result of the labours of a Commission appointed by the Egyptian Government to consider the matter, and are embodied in seven draft Decrees which have been communicated by the Egyptian Minister for Foreign Affairs, in a Circular dated the 30th ultimo, to Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Cairo for the approval of Her Majesty's Government as one of the Governments which took part in the establishment of the Mixed Tribunals (Lord Cromer, No. 124, 1st July, 1899, Paper E).

The report of the proceedings of the above-mentioned Commission is inclosed in Lord Cromer's despatch No. 126 of the 3rd July (Paper F).

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government can properly give their assent to the proposed Decrees, and with any general observations which you may have to make on the papers now submitted to you.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion Her Majesty's Government may properly give their consent to the proposed Decrees.

We do not quite understand the reference in the new Article 248 in Decree I to "Articles 205 et 206 du présent Code." The Articles 205 and 206 as they now stand in Decree H do not seem to us to refer to matters in respect of which the bankrupt could be punished. If Article 248 is intended to refer to Articles 205 and 206 of the Code as it existed before amendment, it seems to us that the numbers of the Articles to be mentioned in Article 248 should be Articles 202 and 203 out of Decree H.

There may, however, be some reason for adopting the words we have quoted above which we do not understand.

Zanzibari in Egypt threatening Sultan of Zanzibar: Where triable?

MR. VILLIERS presents his compliments to Her Majesty's Solicitor-General, and has the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to inclose, for his consideration, the papers noted in the accompanying list respecting the case of an Arab deserter from the service of the Sultan of Zanzibar, who is accused of sending threatening letters from Egypt to His Highness.

Mr. Villiers would feel obliged if the Solicitor-General will, at his early convenience, favour him with his opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether, in the first instance, it is advisable, in the circumstances, to make the inquiry suggested at the end of the Departmental Memorandum (Paper C).

2. Whether, in the circumstances, he should—

3. Whether, in the event of his being justiciable only by the Sultan's Courts at Zanzibar, Her Majesty's Consul at Cairo can properly be instructed to take any action in the matter.

Mr. Villiers would further be obliged if the Solicitor-General will favour him with any general observations he may think well to offer on the case.

Memorandum by Solicitor-General as to Arab Deserter from Zanzibar now in Egypt.

It appears to me that Sir A. Hardinge takes the correct view of the status of this man.

He is apparently a Zanzibari, and as such would be justiciable by the Sultan's Court in Zanzibar, but when in other countries than Zanzibar he is a British-protected person as being a subject of a country under British protection, and is therefore justiciable in Her Majesty's Consular Court in Egypt.

I do not think that anything would be gained by inquiring whether the man would be justiciable at Zanzibar by the British Court or by the Sultan's Court. This seems to me, for the reasons given by Sir A. Hardinge, to make no difference with regard to the question of his justiciability in Egypt. I do not see any way of having the man taken to Zanzibar for trial. The Fugitive Offenders Act deals with the case of fugitives who, having committed a crime in one country take refuge in another, and the power of deportation could not be exercised to send this man to Zanzibar; nor, indeed, in the circumstances of this case, at all, till after conviction.

If there is to be a prosecution, I think it must be in Egypt in the Consular Court. As a British-protected person, although not registered, he is amenable to its jurisdiction. Before, however, any prosecution is instituted, the opinion of a competent lawyer in Egypt should be taken upon the case in order to see whether there is evidence enough to secure a conviction. The English law as to sending letters attempting to extort money by threats apparently applies to Egypt. The contents of the letters, and the fact that they were written and posted by the accused in Egypt, would have to be proved. Evidence from Zanzibar might be necessary as to the receipt and contents of the letters.

The whole question ought, I think, to be considered on a full statement of the facts from the point of view of policy as well as of law before it is determined to prosecute.

Cairo, August 2, 1899.

HER Majesty's Consul at Zanzibar has telegraphed to me requesting that steps may be taken to arrest and send to Zanzibar for trial an Arab deserter from the Sultan's service, who is now in Cairo, and who has written to His Highness blackmailing letters of a scandalous character, and threatens to publish their contents in default of payment of large sums. As the offence of writing the letters has been committed in Cairo, it would appear that the trial should take place here, but I am in some doubt as to the extent to which British Consular jurisdiction in this country would cover natives from a British Protectorate. Mr. Consul Borg is of opinion that, as the man has not registered himself at Her Majesty's Consulate, he is not liable to the jurisdiction of the Consular Court.

I should be grateful for your Lordship's instructions as to the course which should be pursued in this matter.

Sir A. Hardinge to Mr. Maycock.

August 5, 1899.

The view which was always taken when I lived in Egypt and Turkey, was that the natives of "Protected States" were, for purposes of jurisdiction, in the same position as the subjects of their Protecting Powers. Thus a Tunisian, or a subject of the Nizam of Hyderabad, would have enjoyed all the immunities, and, as a consequence, been subject to all the liabilities of a French citizen or British subject in Cairo. We even tried at one time to bring in Afghans, but this the Sublime Porte thought was going rather far.

I should certainly, when I was in Egypt, have regarded a Zanzibari there as subject to British jurisdiction, and not to Egyptian, and I am sure the Egyptian Government (which regarded Tunisians and subjects of the Queen of Madagascar as French citizens) would have quite concurred.

I do not think registration so important. If an English tourist committed an offence in Cairo, Borg could punish him, whether he were registered or not.

I should say that the offence, having been committed in Cairo, the man should be charged before Borg. I do not see how you can deal with him under the Fugitive Offenders Act, as he has not committed an offence in Zanzibar; but if this were to be done, he would have to be sent to Cracknall or to Cave, who would hold that once he got back to Zanzibar, he would be justiciable by the Sultan's Court, and not by the Order in Council. We have, of course, no Extradition Treaty with the Sultan, but if a subject of the Sultan, after murdering someone at Zanzibar, were to escape to Aden, I presume we could return him (though we should not be bound to do so) to the Zanzibar authorities. I should say the latter would willingly send an officer in the present case to take charge of him.

But as I do not see where the Fugitive Offenders Act comes in here, I should say that the best course would be for the Consular Court to punish him at Cairo, and if he still continued to give trouble, to deport him. I do not know whether the power of deportation, under the Ottoman Order in Council, enables the Consul to make an order of deportation to a given place. If so, the place might be Zanzibar, and any expenses incidental to the deportation might, by private arrangement, be borne by the Sultan's Government.

MR. VILLIERS presents his compliments to Her Majesty's Solicitor-General, and with reference to his letter of the 7th ultimo, has the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to inclose, for his consideration, a despatch (Paper A) from Her Majesty's Acting Agent and Consul-General at Cairo respecting the case of the Arab deserter from the service of the Sultan of Zanzibar, who is accused of sending threatening letters from Egypt to His Highness.

A printed copy of the Solicitor-General's opinion, together with the papers on which it was framed, is annexed (Paper B), and the instructions which were thereupon addressed to Sir Rennell Rodd are likewise inclosed (Paper C).

With regard to Article 17 of the Ottoman Order in Council relating to native Indian subjects to which Sir R. Rodd refers, Mr. Villiers is to observe that the Article also appears in the Ottoman Order in Council of 1864, and was apparently inserted after reference to the Law Officers of the Crown (see their Report of the 5th April, 1864† (Paper D)).

The provision has, however, been eliminated from the new consolidating Order approved by the Queen in Council on the 8th August, but which has not as yet come into force. A copy is inclosed (Paper E).

The reasons for its omission are explained on page 7 of Mr. Gray's Memorandum (Paper F, passage marked), and the attention of the Solicitor-General is invited especially to Articles 3, 5, and 165 et seq. of the new Order, which are marked in ink.

The question of jurisdiction over native Indian subjects has, however, only an indirect bearing upon the case under consideration, and it does not seem necessary to submit any observations with regard to the interpretation placed by Sir R. Rodd on the expression "protected persons." Sir R. Rodd is, of course, in error in supposing that the African Orders in Council contain any provision regulating the status of natives of Protectorates "when resident in the Dominions of foreign Governments." "The Zanzibar and East Africa Orders in Council, 1897" are herewith inclosed (Papers G and H), as also the Ottoman Orders in Council (Paper I).

Mr. Villiers would feel obliged if Her Majesty's Solicitor-General, after consideration of Sir R. Rodd's despatch, would state, for Lord Salisbury's information, whether he sees any reason to modify the opinion he has already been good enough to express, and favour his Lordship with any general observations he may think fit to offer.

† This Report was erroneously printed in the Collection for 1863.

Report.

I have read and considered Sir R. Rodd's despatch dated the 23rd August last.

Article 17 of the Order in Council of the 12th December, 1873, does not apply, as it relates only to Indian subjects.

The question is as to the meaning of Article 16.

I find myself unable to concur with Sir R. Rodd in thinking that the words "protected person" in that Article do not include native subjects of British Protectorates. The words do not seem properly applicable to naturalized or colonial subjects as Sir R. Rodd suggests—these persons are British subjects—and I think that native subjects of British Protectorates are "protected persons" under Article 16.

The failure to register under that Article deprives the person of the right to claim British protection, but does not exempt him from British jurisdiction. Article 16 contains no words such as the concluding provision of Article 17 that jurisdiction shall not be exercised in the case of an Indian subject unless he has registered.

I therefore still think that Sir A. Hardinge was right in the view that this man is justiciable in the Consular Court.

But Sir R. Rodd states that the crime in question is cognizable by Egyptian law, and suggests that it would be more convenient that the prosecution should take place in the Egyptian Courts. As the Zanzibari in question has not registered he is not entitled to insist on being tried in the British Court, and may be tried in the Egyptian Court if Her Majesty's Government does not claim jurisdiction.

The question whether the prosecution should take place in the British or in the Egyptian Court should, I think, be settled in Egypt. It depends on questions of Egyptian law on the offence of blackmailing, and on the comparative convenience of the two systems of procedure.

Annex.

Sir R. Rodd to the Marquess of Salisbury.

(No. 18. Treaty. Confidential.)

Cairo, August 23, 1899.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch No. 21, Treaty, of the 11th instant, on the subject of the alleged blackmailing of the Sultan of Zanzibar, inclosing, for my confidential information, a letter containing Sir Arthur Hardinge's views, and a Memorandum by the Solicitor-General.

I have telegraphed to Zanzibar to inquire into the nature of the evidence which can be produced, and have learned from Mr. Cave that the Sultan will send an Agent to Cairo, by the first opportunity, with full powers, and such evidence as is in his possession. It appears, however, that the accused intends shortly to proceed to Germany, and, from information which I am collecting here, I rather gather that he belongs to the faction of Seyyid Khaled, and is politically in opposition to the reigning Sultan.

I have taken note of the instructions that a prosecution, if there is to be one, should take place in Egypt, and that a competent legal opinion is to be obtained as to whether the evidence is of a nature to convict; but, in the meantime, I am anxious, with the utmost deference for the views expressed by Sir Arthur Hardinge, and indorsed by the Solicitor-General, to place before your Lordship one or two further points for consideration on the question of the Court in which precedent and analogy would make this man justiciable in Egypt.

Sir Arthur Hardinge writes that the view always taken in Egypt and Turkey was that natives of "Protected States" were, for purposes of jurisdiction, in the same position as the subjects of their Protecting Powers, and that consequently a Tunisian or a subject of the Nizam of Hyderabad would enjoy all the immunities and be subject to all the liabilities of a French citizen or a British subject in Cairo.

I will confine myself to the practice in Egypt.

In the first place, as regards Tunisians. Not only are they not claimed by the French Consular authorities if they do not register themselves, but I am informed that since 1889 the rule has been that if a Tunisian comes to Egypt, unless he brings a passport and declares himself a French protégé at once on arrival, he cannot afterwards claim French protection. Cases may of course arise where the French Consulate may wish to exercise protection, and plausible excuses may be found to explain why registration did not at once take place; but, so far as criminal prosecutions are concerned, if registration has not been made, they would be before the Native Courts. There are in Egypt a considerable number of Tunisian refugees, who came here on account of misunderstandings with the French authorities, and I am informed that these, if they should now wish to become French subjects, would not be accepted.

The case of Tunisians, however, does not perhaps offer a complete analogy to the case under discussion as they were originally Ottomans.

The second instance quoted by Sir Arthur Hardinge is, however, more to the point, and here I venture to join issue with him.

Unless a subject of a native Indian State, like Hyderabad, is in a more favoured position than any other native Indian subject, his status is very clearly defined by Article 17, Chapter IV, of the Order in Council for the Regulation of Consular jurisdiction in the dominions of the Ottoman Porte, of the 12th December, 1873.

Here it is definitely stated that a native Indian subject, not having registered at the Consulate, "shall not be entitled to sue in the Court, or to receive the support or protection of a Consular officer, nor shall a Consular officer exercise jurisdiction for the punishment of a crime or offence committed by a native Indian subject, unless at the date of the commission of the crime or offence, he or she was so registered."

Conformably to the provisions of this Order in Council native Indian subjects, not having registered at the Consulate, have always, I am informed, been considered justiciable in the Native Tribunals.

Article 16 of the same Order in Council also lays down that British subjects and protected persons, having failed to register themselves in the Consular district where they reside in the Ottoman dominions, shall not be entitled to be deemed subjects or protected persons; but it is not laid down specifically that a Consular officer shall not exercise jurisdiction over them for the punishment of offences, as it is in the case of native Indian subjects.

I have the honour to submit, however, that "protected persons" in the sense of this Article should be interpreted as referring rather to naturalized or colonial subjects than to native subjects of Protectorates, who would not appear on the face of it to have stronger claims to protection than Indian subjects.

At the same time when this Order in Council was issued African Protectorates, such as Zanzibar, had not yet come into being.

We are not at this Agency in possession of the African Orders in Council, but I believe I am right in supposing that an Order in Council exists, regulating the status of the native subjects of African Protectorates when resident in the dominions of foreign Governments. Unless under such an Order in Council, which is not referred to in Sir Arthur Hardinge's letter, or the Solicitor-General's Memorandum, other dispositions are laid down, I venture with all deference to submit that it would be logical to place such native subjects of British Protectorates, when in the Ottoman dominions, in the same category with native Indian subjects, who are justiciable in Egypt in the Native Courts, unless they have fulfilled the necessary obligations laid down for securing British protection.

In the case at present under consideration the course proposed would obviate the necessity for inviting a legal opinion on the evidence, as the case for the prosecution would be submitted to the Parquet, who would decide whether the evidence produced warranted a prosecution.

Should the Parquet decide in favour of the evidence, I am informed that the Native Tribunals would accept the prosecution. The penalty for blackmailing under the Egyptian Codes is a severe one.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 25, 1899.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you a despatch from Her Majesty's Acting Agent and Consul-General at Cairo, as marked in the margin,* forwarding a copy of a note from the Egyptian Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, in which are inclosed two draft Decrees relating to pawnbroking establishments.

Draft Decrees relating to pawnbroking establishments in Egypt.

The object of the first of these Decrees is to confer upon the Egyptian Government the right of supervision and control over such establishments; whilst the second deals with a proposed modification of the law, as administered by the Mixed Courts, defining the conditions under which articles pawned on receipts to bearer may be legally sold.

A Minute by Lord Cromer will be found annexed to Sir R. Rodd's despatch recording his Lordship's opinion that the Decrees may be approved, as no British interests are involved, and as the proposed changes will be beneficial to Egypt.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether these Decrees should receive the assent of Her Majesty's Government, as requested in the note from the Egyptian Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs.

NOUS, Khédive d'Égypte,
Vu le Règlement d'Organisation Judiciaire;
Afin de permettre la réglementation des maisons de prêts sur gage;
Après accord intervenu entre notre Gouvernement et les Puissances qui ont adhéré à la Réforme Judiciaire,

Décrétons:

Article 1er. Il est interdit de fonder, sans autorisation du Gouvernement, une maison de prêt sur gage. Toutefois, ne tombent pas sous l'application du présent Décret les établissements de prêt sur gage incorporel (actions, obligations, &c.), ainsi que ceux faisant des prêts sur marchandises neuves et denrées agricoles.

Art. 2. L'autorisation est accordée par le Ministre de l'Intérieur qui pourra faire inspecter ces établissements lorsqu'il le jugera nécessaire. Les inspecteurs pourront prendre connaissance des livres, vérifier la consistance et l'état des gages, et constater si les prescriptions imposées par la loi ou par l'acte d'autorisation ont été observées.

Si le propriétaire de l'établissement est un étranger, avis préalable sera donné à son Consulat pour le mettre à même d'assister à l'inspection, s'il le croit opportun.

Art. 3. Tout établissement de prêt sur gage devra faire assurer contre l'incendie, par une Compagnie agréée par le Gouvernement, les objets donnés en gage ainsi que les locaux dans lesquels ils sont déposés.

En cas d'incendie ou de perte des gages, l'établissement sera responsable jusqu'à concurrence de leur estimation augmentée d'un quart.

Art. 4. En échange des fonds versés, les prêteurs reçoivent des reconnaissances au porteur.

Les reconnaissances doivent porter les indications suivantes; somme prêtée, intérêts y afférents, échéance de la reconnaissance et somme à rembourser.

Tout déposant sera tenu de signer l'acte de dépôt de l'objet engagé, et si le déposant est illettré, l'acte de dépôt sera signé par son répondant.

Pourront être exceptés de la formalité prescrite ci-dessus les actes de dépôt d'objets estimés au-dessous de 250 piastres tarif.

Art. 5. Le taux de l'intérêt stipulé ne pourra excéder 9 pour cent par an. Il pourra, en outre, être perçu un droit pour frais d'estimation, de mesurage, et d'emmagasinement.

Ce droit ne pourra excéder 4 pour cent si le prêt est inférieur à 250 piastres tarif, ni 3 pour cent si la somme prêtée est supérieure. Ce droit sera perçu pour une année entière, quelle que soit la durée du prêt.

Art. 6. Les prêts seront à trois ou six mois et pourront être renouvelés de commun accord entre le prêteur et l'emprunteur.

Art. 7. En cas de non remboursement à l'échéance, les gages seront réalisés conformément aux règles du Code relatives au gage commercial.

De plus, pour les prêts excédant £ E. 10, les individus qui auront signé les actes de dépôt seront prévenus par lettre recommandée, huit jours avant la remise de la requête au juge de service.

Art. 8. Si la somme produite par la vente dépasse la somme due par l'emprunteur en principal, intérêts, droits de garde et frais de réalisation, l'excédent sera tenu à la disposition de l'emprunteur pendant la durée de trois ans. Il ne sera pas productif d'intérêts. S'il n'est pas réclamé pendant ce délai, il sera acquis au prêteur.

Art. 9. L'ouverture ou l'exploitation d'une maison de prêt sur gage sans l'autorisation prescrite, sera punie d'un emprisonnement de un à sept jours. La fermeture de l'établissement sera toujours ordonnée par le Jugement.

Toutes autres contraventions au présent Décret seront punies d'un emprisonnement de vingt-quatre heures à une semaine et d'une amende de 10 à 100 piastres Turques, ou d'une de ces peines seulement. Les circonstances atténuantes pourront être admises, et la fermeture de l'établissement pourra être prononcée.

Art. 10. Il est interdit de prêter sur gage à des enfants âgés apparemment de moins de 12 ans, aux personnes en état d'ivresse, sous l'empire du hachiche, ou qui, à raison de leur état mental, sont manifestement incapables de contracter.

Art. 11. L'estimation des gages sera faite par des personnes autorisées à cet effet par le Ministère de l'Intérieur.

Art. 12. Lorsqu'un objet engagé sera revendiqué pour cause de vol ou pour toute autre cause, le propriétaire devra:—

1. Justifier dans les formes légales de son droit de propriété;
2. Rembourser, tant en principal qu'en intérêts, la somme pour laquelle l'objet a été engagé, à moins que, au moment du prêt, le prêteur ait pu savoir que l'objet déposé n'était pas la propriété de l'emprunteur ou que celui-ci ne pouvait pas l'engager.

Art. 13. Ces dispositions entreront en vigueur un mois après la publication qui en sera faite dans les formes prescrites par l'Article 35, Titre 1, du Règlement d'Organisation Judiciaire.

Art. 14. Nos Ministres de l'Intérieur et de la Justice sont chargés, chacun en ce qui le concerne, de l'exécution du présent Décret.

Vu le Code de Commerce Mixte et le Décret du 5 Décembre, 1886, qui l'a complété en ce qui concerne le gage commercial;
Après accord intervenu entre notre Gouvernement et les Puissances qui ont adhéré à la Réforme Judiciaire,

Décrétons:

Article 1er. Il est ajouté à l'Article 84 du Code de Commerce Mixte un paragraphe conçu dans les termes suivants:—

"En ce qui concerne les établissements de prêt sur gage autorisés, dont les reconnaissances sont au porteur, les numéros en retard seront affichés par ministère d'huissier, à la porte du siège ou des succursales des dits établissements, au Tableau du Tribunal, et à la Bourse de Commerce, avec déclaration que passé le délai de dix jours, la vente en sera poursuivie. La requête au juge de service comprendra collectivement tous les numéros affichés qui n'auront pas satisfait aux conditions contractuelles."

Art. 2. Ces dispositions entreront en vigueur un mois après la publication qui en sera faite dans les formes prévues par l'Article 35, Titre I, du Règlement d'Organisation Judiciaire.

Foreign Office, September 16, 1899.

Arab deserter from Zanzibar in Egypt accused of blackmailing Sultan of Zanzibar.

Sir,

WITH reference to your reports of the 8th August and 4th instant respecting the case of the Arab deserter from Zanzibar who is accused of sending threatening letters from Egypt to the Sultan, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you a copy of a telegram from the Acting British Agent and Consul-General in Egypt, stating that the fugitive has escaped to Beyrout, where he is believed to be in quarantine until the 19th instant, and that he intends to proceed to Germany.

Sir R. Rodd requests instructions as to whether he may ask the British Consul at Beyrout to request the arrest and surrender of the fugitive if the legal authorities consider the evidence sufficient to justify his prosecution.

If jurisdiction over the accused is not to be claimed, it would seem, the offence having been committed in Egypt, that the Egyptian Government should apply for the arrest, and the proceedings should be taken against him in their name.

It is presumed, however, that if action is taken in the matter such as suggested by Sir R. Rodd, it must be on the ground that the accused is a British-protected person, and, in this case, that he must be tried before a British Court.

I am to return to you, for convenience of reference, your opinions of the 8th ultimo and 4th instant, together with the papers on which they were founded, and I am to state that Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Sir R. Rodd.

I have, &c.

Report.

The application for the arrest and surrender of the fugitive ought to be made by the British Consul, as suggested, only if it has been determined to proceed in the British Court.

If the prosecution is to be in the Egyptian Court, the application should be by the Egyptian Government, but might be supported informally by the British Consul.

Te legraphic. No. 4. (Treaty.) P. Cairo, September 15, 1899.

WITH regard to attempt to blackmail the Sultan of Zanzibar, it appears that the culprit has escaped to Beyrout, where he will presumably be kept in quarantine until the 19th instant. His ultimate destination is Germany. If legal authorities consider evidence sufficient to justify prosecution, may I request the Consul to ask for arrest and surrender, pending settlement of question of jurisdiction? The Sultan attaches much importance to the arrest, and the chances of surrender are much greater if the application is made by the British Consul.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 12, 1899.

Somaliland O. in C.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the draft of an Order in Council for the administration of justice in the territories comprised in the Somaliland Protectorate which has recently been transferred by the Government of India to the Imperial Government.

This draft Order has been prepared by Mr. Gray in consultation with Colonel Hayes Sadler, Her Majesty's Consul-General on the Somali Coast, and with this Department. An explanatory letter from Mr. Gray is annexed to the draft.

A copy of the East Africa Order in Council of 1897, on which the new Order is modelled, is also inclosed for convenience of reference.

I am to request that you will take this draft Order into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether it can properly be submitted to Her Majesty in Council in its present form; and if not, to indicate such amendments and modifications as you may consider necessary or desirable.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Report.

In our opinion, the draft Order in Council as initialled by us may properly be submitted to the Queen in Council for the approval of Her Majesty.

(Signed) RICHARD E. WEBSTER.

SOMALILAND.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has power and jurisdiction with the territories comprised within the limits of this Order:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue, and in exercise of the powers on this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or, otherwise, in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

PART I.—Preliminary.

1. This Order may be cited as "The Somaliland Order in Council, 1899."

The limits of this Order are the territories comprised in the Somaliland Protectorate, which includes the territories bounded on the north by the Gulf of Aden, on the east and south by the territories under the Protectorate of Italy, and on the west by the territories of the Emperor of Ethiopia, and the French Protectorate of Jibuti.

If Her Majesty is pleased to direct that any other territories, for the time being under the protection of Her Majesty, shall form part of the Somaliland Protectorate, those territories shall, from and after a date fixed by an order of the Secretary of State, be deemed to be within the limits of this Order.

2. This Order is divided into Parts as follows:—
Part I. Preliminary.
Part II. Application and effect of Order.
Part III. Application of law of British India and of the United Kingdom.
Part IV. Criminal matters.
Part V. Civil matters.
Part VI. Miscellaneous.

3. In this Order—

(i.) "The Protectorate" means the territories for the time being comprised in Her Majesty's Somaliland Protectorate;

(ii.) "The Secretary of State" means one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State;

(iii.) "The Consul-General" means Her Majesty's Consul-General for the territories comprised within the limits of this Order, including a person acting temporarily, with the approval of the Secretary of State, as or for the Consul-General;

(iv.) "British subject" includes a British protected person, that is to say, a person who either (a) is a native of any Protectorate of Her Majesty beyond Africa and Arabia, and is for the time being in the Somaliland Protectorate, or (b) by virtue of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise enjoys Her Majesty's protection in the Protectorate;

(v.) "Resident" means having a fixed place of abode in the Protectorate;

(vi.) "Native" means any person who is not a British subject, as hereinbefore defined, or of European or American race or parentage;

(vii.) "Foreigner" means a subject or citizen of a State in amity with Her Majesty, not being a native, as hereinbefore defined;

(viii.) "Protectorate Court" means the Court held by the Consul-General, or other Court exercising the principal civil and criminal jurisdiction in the Protectorate;

(x.) "Treaty" includes any Convention, Agreement, or Arrangement with any State or Government, King, Chief, people, or tribe, made by or on behalf of Her Majesty, or to the benefits of which Her Majesty has succeeded; of administration, including the same with will annexed, or granted for special or limited purposes, or limited in duration;

(xii.) "Ship" includes any vessel used in navigation, however propelled with her tackle, furniture, and apparel, and any boat or other craft;

(xiii.) "Offence" means any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force;

(xiv.) "Imprisonment" means imprisonment of either description, as defined in the Indian Penal Code;

(xv.) "Month" means calendar month;

(xvi.) "Will" means will, codicil, or other testamentary instrument;

(xvii.) "Person" includes Corporation;

(xviii.) Words importing the plural or the singular may be construed as referring to one person or thing, or to more than one person or thing, and words importing the masculine as referring to females (as the case may require).

4.—(1.) Where this Order confers a power or imposes a duty, the power may be exercised and the duty shall be performed from time to time as occasion requires.

(2.) Where this Order confers a power or imposes a duty on the holder of an office, then, unless a contrary intention appears, the power may be exercised and the duty shall be performed by the holder of the office for the time being, or by a person duly appointed to act for him.

(3.) Where this Order confers a power to make Rules, Regulations, or Orders, the power shall be construed as including a power, exercisable in the like manner and subject to the like approval and conditions (if any) to rescind, revoke, amend, or vary the Rules, Regulations, or Orders.

(4.) Expressions defined in this Order shall have the same respective meanings in any Rules, Regulations, or Orders made under this Order unless other provision is made or the context otherwise requires.

PART II.—Application and Effect of Order.

5. The powers conferred by this Order shall extend to the persons and matters following in so far as by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, or other lawful means, Her Majesty has jurisdiction in relation to such persons and matters, that is to say: (a) British subjects; (b) foreigners; (c) the property and all personal or proprietary rights and liabilities in the Protectorate of British subjects and foreigners, including ships with their boats, and the persons and property on board thereof, or belonging thereto; and (d) natives, in the cases and according to the conditions specified in this Order, and not otherwise.

Provided that jurisdiction over any foreign ships under this Article shall not be exercised otherwise than according to the practice of the High Court in England in the exercise of jurisdiction over foreign ships.

6. All Her Majesty's jurisdiction exercisable in the Protectorate, for the hearing and determination of suits, or for the maintenance of order, or for the control or administration of persons or property, or in relation thereto, shall be exercised under and according to the provisions of this Order, so far as such jurisdiction relates to British subjects and foreigners. Jurisdiction over natives shall be exercised only in such matters and to such extent as the Court in its discretion thinks fit.

PART III.—Application of Law of British India and of the United Kingdom.

7.—(a.) Subject to the other provisions of this Order, and to any Treaties for the time being in force relating to the Protectorate, Her Majesty's criminal and civil jurisdiction in the Protectorate shall, so far as circumstances admit, be exercised on the principles of, and in conformity with, the enactments for the time being applicable as hereinafter mentioned of the Governor-General of India in Council, and of the Governor of Bombay in Council, and according to the course of procedure and practice observed by, and before, the Courts in the Presidency of Bombay beyond the limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay according to their respective jurisdiction and authority, and so far as such enactments, procedure, and practice are inapplicable, shall be exercised under, and in accordance with, the Common and Statute Law of England.

(b.) The enactments mentioned in the Schedule to this Order are hereby made applicable to the Protectorate as from the commencement of this Order.

(c.) Any other existing or future enactments of the Governor-General of India in Council, or of the Governor of Bombay in Council, shall also be applicable to the Protectorate, but shall not come into operation until such times as may in the case of any of such enactments respectively be fixed by the Secretary of State.

(d.) Any act of the Governor-General of India in Council, or of the Governor of Bombay in Council, whether passed before or after the commencement of this Order, amending or substituted for any Act of either of those Legislatures which is by or under this Order made applicable to and brought into operation in the Protectorate, shall, subject to the provisions of this Article, also apply to the Protectorate.

(i.) The Court may construe any such enactment, with such alterations not affecting the substance, as may be necessary or proper to adapt the same to the matter before the Court;

(ii.) The Secretary of State may by order direct by what authority any jurisdiction, powers, or duties incident to the operation of any such enactment, and for the exercise or performance of which no convenient provision has been otherwise made, shall be exercised or performed;

(iii.) The Secretary of State may by order modify, for the purposes of this Order, any provision of any of the said enactments, or of any amending or substituted enactment;

(iv.) Any order of the Secretary of State made in pursuance of this Article shall be published in the Protectorate and in India, in such manner as he directs, and shall have effect as from a date to be specified in the order.

8. The enactments described in the first Schedule to "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," shall apply to the Protectorate as if it were a British Colony or possession, but subject to the provisions of this Order and to the exceptions, adaptations, and modifications following, that is to say:—

(i.) The Consul-General is hereby substituted for the Governor of a Colony or British possession, and the Protectorate Court is hereby substituted for a Superior Court or Supreme Court and for a Magistrate or Justice of the Peace of a Colony or British possession.

(ii.) For the portions of the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 and 1867, referred to in the said Schedule shall be substituted Part XIII of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894."

(iii.) In section 51 of "The Conveyancing (Scotland) Act, 1874," and any enactment for the time being in force amending the same, the Protectorate Court is substituted for a Court of Probate in a Colony.

(iv.) With respect to "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881":—

(a.) So much of the 4th and 5th sections of the said Act as relates to sending a report of the issue of a warrant, together with the information, or a copy thereof, or to the sending of a certificate of committal and report of a case, or to the information to be given by a Magistrate to a fugitive, shall be excepted, and in lieu of such information the person acting as the Magistrate shall inform the fugitive that in the British possession or Protectorate to which he may be conveyed he has the right to apply for a writ of habeas corpus or other like process.

(b.) So much of the 6th section of the said Act as requires the expiration of fifteen days before issue of warrant shall be excepted.

(d.) For the purposes of Part II of the said Act, the Protectorate, Aden, Zanzibar, the East Africa and Uganda Protectorates, and British India shall be deemed to be one group of British possessions.

9. The Secretary of State may, by order published in such manner as he directs, declare that any of the Laws or Ordinances for the time being in force in any British possession, and not inconsistent with this order, shall have effect, and be administered in the Protectorate, with such modifications or adaptations as may be necessary; and thereupon such Laws or Ordinances as so modified or adapted shall have effect as if they had been applied by this Order.

PART IV.—Criminal Matters.

10. Subject to the other provisions of this Order, the Code of Criminal Procedure and the other enactments relating to the administration of criminal justice in India, for the time being applicable to the Protectorate, shall have effect as if the Protectorate were a Presidency of India.

For the purposes of those enactments—

(a.) The Consul-General shall hold and form a Court, to be called the Protectorate Court, which shall have all the powers of a Sessions Court in India; and

(b.) The Protectorate Court shall in relation to all Courts within the Protectorate have the same appellate jurisdiction and the same powers of revision as are possessed by a High Court in India; and

(c.) The powers both of the Governor-General in Council and of the Local Government under those enactments shall be exercisahle by the Secretary of State, or, with his previous or subsequent assent, by the Consul-General.

11. If any person smuggles or imports into or exports from the Protectorate any goods whereon any duty is charged or payable to the Government of the Protectorate, with intent to evade payment of the duty, he shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months, or with fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or with both.

12. Any act which if done in British India would be an offence against the law for the time being in force in British India relating to trade-marks, merchandize marks, copyright, designs, or inventions, shall, if done in the Protectorate, be an offence punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months, or with a fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or with both.

13.—(1.) In cases of murder or culpable homicide, if either the death or the criminal act which wholly or partly caused the death happened in the Protectorate, a Court acting under this Order shall have the like jurisdiction over any person charged either as a principal offender or as an abettor, as if both the criminal act and the death had happened in the Protectorate.

(2.) In the case of any offence committed on the high seas, or within the Admiralty jurisdiction, by any person who at the time of committing such offence was on board a British ship, or by any British subject on board a foreign ship to which he did not belong, a Court acting under this Order shall have jurisdiction as if the offence had been committed within the Protectorate.

(3.) In cases tried under this Article no different sentence can be passed from the sentence which could be passed in England if the offence were tried there.

14. When a sentence of death has been passed by the Protectorate Court the Consul-General shall consider whether it is or is not desirable that the sentence should be reconsidered by the Secretary of State.

If he considers that it is so desirable, he shall append to the Minutes a certificate under his hand to that effect, together with such observations as he may think fit, and shall, at the earliest opportunity, transmit the same to the Secretary of State.

If he considers that it is not so desirable, he shall, not sooner than seven days after the passing of the sentence, certify on the Minutes his confirmation of the sentence by writing under his hand.

The Secretary of State may confirm or remit or commute the sentence.

A sentence of death shall not be carried into effect until it is confirmed by the Consul-General or the Secretary of State, as provided in this Article, but upon such confirmation shall be carried into effect aceording to law.

When the Secretary of State commutes a sentence, the commuted sentence shall be carried into effect as if the Protectorate Court had passed, and had authority to pass, that sentence.

15.—(a.) The Consul-General may, if he thinks fit, by general order, prescribe the manner in which, and the places in the Protectorate at which, sentences of imprisonment are to be carried into execution.

(b.) The Consul-General may, if he thinks fit, in any case, by warrant under his hand and official seal, cause an offender convicted and sentenced to imprisonment before the Court to be sent and removed to, and imprisoned in, any place either in the Protectorate or in Aden.

16. Where an offender convicted before the Court is sentenced to imprisonment, and the Consul-General, proceeding under section 7 of "The Foreign Jurisdictiou Act, 1890," authority in that behalf being hereby given to him, considers it expedient that the sentence should be carried into effect within Her Majesty's dominions, the place shall be a place in some part of Her Majesty's dominions out of the United Kingdom, the Government whereof consents that offenders may be sent thither under this Article.

17.—(1.) Where it is shown by evidence on oath, to the satisfaction of the Consul-General, that any person subject to this Order has committed, or is about to commit, an offence against this Order, or is otherwise conducting himself so as to be dangerous to peace and good order in the Protectorate, or is endeavouring to excite enmity between the people of the Protectorate and Her Majesty, or is intriguing against Her Majesty's power and authority in the Protectorate, the Consul-General may, if he thinks fit, by order under his hand and official seal, prohibit that person from being in the Protectorate, during any time therein specified, not exceeding two years, or may order him to be deported in manner provided by this Order.

(2.) If the person named in the order of prohibition fails to obey, or acts in contravention of the order—

(i.) He shall be guilty of an offence against this Order, and, on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, without prejudice to the operation of the order of prohibition.

(ii.) Whether the offender has been convicted of, or imprisoned for, that offence or not, the Consul-General may, if he thinks fit, order him to be deported.

(3.) The Consul-General, by order under his hand and official seal, may vary any order of prohibition (not extending the duration thereof), and may at any time revoke the same.

(4.) The Consul-General shall forthwith report to the Secretary of State every order made by him under this Article, and the grounds thereof, and the proceedings thereunder.

18.—(a.) Where a person is convicted of an offence, the Court before which he is convicted may, if it thinks fit, require him to give security to the satisfaction of the Court for his future good behaviour, and for that purpose may, if it thinks fit, cause him to come or be brought before the Court.

(b.) If any person required by an order under this Article, or under the law relating to criminal procedure for the time being in force, to give security for good behaviour or for keeping the peace, fails to do so, the Court may, if it thinks fit, order that he be deported from the Protectorate.

(c.) Any order of deportation mot made by the Consul-General must be approved by him.

19.—(a.) Any person ordered to be deported under this Order shall be, as soon as practicable, and in the case of a person convicted, either after execution of the sentence, or while it is in course of execution, removed in custody, under the warrant of the Consul-General, to the place named in the warrant and there discharged from custody.

(b.) The place shall be a place in that part (if any) of Her Majesty's dominions out of the United Kingdom to which the person belongs, or in some other part of those dominions, the Government whereof consents to the reception therein of persons deported under this order, or a place under the Protectorate of Her Majesty, or in the country out of Her Majesty's dominions to which the person belongs.

(c.) The Court, on making an order of deportation, may, if it thinks fit, order the person to be deported to pay all or any part of the expenses of his deportation, to be fixed by the Court in the order.

(d.) The Consul-General shall forthwith report to the Secretary of State every order of deportation made under this Order, and the grounds thereof, and the proceedings thereunder.

(e.) If a person deported under this Order returns to the Protectorate without permission in writing of the Consul-General or Secretary of State, he shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months, or with fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or with both.

(f.) He shall also be liable to be again deported under the original or a new order, and a fresh warrant of the Consul-General.

(g.) The Consul-General may at any time revoke or vary any order or warrant of deportation.

20.—(a.) Where, under this Order, a person is to be sent, or removed, or deported from the Protectorate, he shall, by warrant of the Consul-General under his hand and seal, be detained, if necessary, in custody, or in prison, until a fit opportunity for his removal or deportation occurs, and then, if he is to be deported beyond sea, be put on board one of Her Majesty's vessels of war, or, if none is available, then on board some other British or other fit vessel.

(b.) The warrant of the Consul-General shall be snfficient authority to the person to whom it is directed or delivered for execution, and to the Commander or master of the vessel, to receive and detain the person therein named, in the manner therein prescribed, and to send or remove and carry him to the place therein named, according to the warrant.

(c.) In case of sending or removal for any purpose other than deportation, the warrant of the Consul-General shall be issued in duplicate, and the person executing it shall, as soon as practicable after his arrival at the place therein named, deliver, according to the warrant, with one of the duplicates of the warrant, to a constable, or proper officer of police, or keeper of a prison, or other proper authority or person there, the person named in the warrant, to be produced on the order of the proper Court or authority there, or to be otherwise dealt with according to law.

21. The Consul-General, and every officer for the time being exercising the powers of a Magistrate, shall have in and for the Protectorate, province, or district, as the case may be, all the power and jurisdiction appertaining to the office of a Justice of the Peace.

22. A sentence of imprisonment under this Order, or any Regulations made under this Order, may be with or without hard labour, in the discretion of the Court, unless it is expressed to be without hard labour.

PART V.—Civil Matters.

23. Subject to the other provisions of this Order, the Code of Civil Procedure, "The Bombay Civil Courts Act, 1869," and the other enactments relating to the administration of civil justice for the time being applicable to the Protectorate, shall have effect as if the Protectorate were the Presidency of Bombay.

(a.) For the purposes of these enactments the Protectorate Court shall be deemed to be the High Court, and the Court authorized to hear appeals from and to revise the decisions of District Courts;

(c.) The powers both of the Governor-General in Council and the Local Government under those enactments shall be exercisable by the Secretary of State, or, with his previous or subsequent assent, by the Consul-General.

24. The following enactments of "The Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890," that is to say, section 2, sub-sections (2) to (4), sections 5 and 6, section 16, sub-section (3), shall apply to the Protectorate Court as if in the said sections the said Court were mentioned in lieu of a Colonial Court of Admiralty, and the Protectorate were referred to in lieu of a British possession.

25.—(a.) Every District Court shall endeavour to obtain, as early as may be, notice of the death of every British subject or foreigner dying in the Protectorate leaving property to be administered, and all such information as may serve to guide the Court with respect to the securing and administration of his property.

(b.) On receiving notice of the death of such a person, the Court shall put up a Notice thereof at the Court-house, and shall keep the same there until probate or administration is granted, or, where it appears to the Court that probate or administration will not be applied for, or cannot be granted, for such time as it thinks fit.

(c.) The Court shall, where the circumstances of the case appear so to require, as soon as may be, take possession of the property in the Protectorate of the deceased, or put it under its seal (in either case, if the nature of the property or other circumstances so require, making an inventory), and so keep it until it can be dealt with according to law.

(d.) All expenses incurred by the Court in so doing shall be the first charge on the property of the deceased, and the Court shall, by sale of the property, or part thereof, or otherwise provide for the discharge of these expenses.

26. Where a British subject or foreigner dies in the Protectorate intestate, his property shall, until administration is granted, vest in the Consul-General.

27. If a person named executor in a will, to the establishment of whose title, as such, it is necessary to obtain probate of that will, takes possession of, and administers or otherwise deals with, any part of the property of the deceased, and does not obtain probate within one month after the death, or after the termination of any proceeding respecting probate or administration, he shall be liable to be punished with fine, which may extend to 1,000 rupees.

28. If any person other than the person named executor, or the administrator, or a person entitled to represent the deceased, without obtaining probate or letters of administration, or an officer of the Court, takes possession of and administers, or otherwise deals with, any part of the property of the deceased, he shall, as soon as practicable, notify the fact and the circumstances to the District Court, aod shall furnish to that Court all such information as the Court requires, and shall conform to any directions of the Court in relation to the custody, disposal, or transmission of the property, or the proceeds thereof, and, in case of any contravention of this Article, he shall be liable to be punished with fine, which may extend to 1,000 rupees.

29.—(1.) When the peculiar circumstances of the case appear so to require, for reasons recorded in its proceedings, the District Court may, if it thinks fit, of its own motion or otherwise, grant letters of administration to an officer or practitioner of the Court.

(2.) The person so appointed shall act under the direction of the Court, and shall be indemnified thereby; and, if he is a practitioner, he shall not act otherwise than as administrator in relation to the estate.

(3.) He shall publish such notices, if any, as the Court thinks fit in the Protectorate, Aden, the United Kingdom, and elsewhere.

(4.) The Court shall require and compel him to file, in the proper office of the Court, his accounts of his administration at intervals not exceeding three months.

(5.) The accounts shall be audited under the direction of the Court.

(6.) All expenses incurred in behalf of the Court in execution of this Article shall be the first charge on the estate of the deceased in the Protectorate; and the Court shall, by the sale of the estate or otherwise, provide for the discharge of those expenses.

30.—(a.) Every agreement for reference to arbitration to which a person subject to this Order is a party may, on the application of any party, be filed for execution in the proper office of the District Court.

(b.) The Court shall thereupon have authority to enforce the agreement, and the award made thereunder, and to control and regulate the proceedings before and after the award, in such manner and on such terms as the Court may think fit.

PART VI.—Miscellaneous.

31. Subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, the Protectorate Court may frame Rules of Procedure and other Rules, consistent with this Order, for the better execution of the provisions herein contained in respect of civil or criminal proceedings, and for regulating the conditions on which persons other than parties may be permitted to practice as advocates or solicitors in any Court, and for suspending or excluding (subject to a right of appeal) such persons from practice in case of misconduct: provided that any scales of remuneration fixed by such Rules shall have been sanctioned by the Treasury.

32. The Consul-General may make Regulations (to be called Queen's Regulations) for the following purposes, consistent with the provisions of this Order, that is to say:—

(i.) For the regulation of all matters relating to customs, inland revenue, post-office, land, highways, railways, money, agriculture, trade, and health.

(ii.) For the establishment of a constabulary or other force to be employed in the maintenance of order or (either with or without the limits of this Order) in defence of the Protectorate.

(iii.) For securing the observance of any Treaty for the time being in force relating to the Protectorate, or of any native or local law or custom; and

(iv.) For the registration of documents purporting or operating to create, declare, assign, limit, or extinguish any right, title, or interest in or over any immovable property situate in the Protectorate.

Any Regulations under this Article may provide for forfeiture of any goods, receptacles, or things in relation to which, or to the contents of which, any breach is committed of such Regulations, or of any Treaty, or any native or local law or custom, the observance of which is provided for by the Regulations.

Any Regulations under this Article with respect to the registration of documents may prescribe the period within which any documents are to be registered, and such penalties for non-registration, whether by stamp duties or otherwise, and whether, in lieu of, or in addition to, the other penalties provided by this Article; but nothing in any such Regulations shall make any instrument inadmissible in evidence in any criminal proceeding.

Any Regulations under this Article shall, when allowed by the Secretary of State, and published by the Consul-General, have effect as if contained in this Order: Provided that in case of urgency declared by any such Regulations, the same shall take effect before such allowance, and shall continue to have effect unless and until they are disallowed by the Secretary of State, and until notification of such disallowance is received and published by the Consul-General; and such disallowance shall be without prejudice to anything done or suffered under such Regulations in the meantime.

The Consul-General may fix such penalties for the breach of any Regulations as may seem proper, and, where no penalty is so fixed, any person guilty of such breach shall, on conviction, be liable to a fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or to imprisonment which may extend to two months, or both, in addition to any forfeiture as aforesaid.

33. The Consul-General may also make Queen's Regulations for the governance, visitation, care, and superintendence of prisons in the Protectorate, and for the infliction of corporal or other punishment on prisoners committing offences against the Prisons Regulations.

Any Regulations under this Article shall, when allowed by the Secretary of State, have effect, as if contained in this Order, and copies thereof shall be exhibited in every prison to which they apply in such manner as the Consul-General may direct.

Any breach of Regulations under this Article, committed by any officer of a prison, or by any other person (not being a prisoner), shall be punishable in like manner as a breach of Queen's Regulations under the last preceding Article.

34.—(a.) The Consul-General may, with the approval of the Secretary of State and concurrence of the Treasury, make rules imposing fees leviable in respect of any proceedings in, or processes issued out of, any Court established under this Order, and in respect of the registration of any instrument under this Order.

(b.) But the Court may in any case, if it thinks fit, on account of the poverty of a party, or for any other reason, dispense in whole or in part with the payment of any fee chargeable in respect of such matter.

(c.) Nothing in this Order shall affect any Order in Council prescribing a table of fees to be taken by Consular officers; and, where a fee is taken under that Order, no fee shall be taken in respect of the same matter under this Order.

35.—(a.) All fees, charges, expenses, costs, fines, damages, and other money payable under this Order, or under any law made applicable by this Order, may be enforced under order of the Court by attachment and sale of goods, and in case of deficiency by imprisonment (without hard labour), which may extend to one month.

(b.) Any bill of sale or mortgage, or transfer of property, made with the view of avoiding such attachment or sale, shall not be effectual to defeat the provisions of this Order.

(c.) All fees, penalties, fines, and forfeitures levied under this Order shall be paid to the public account, and shall be applied in such manner as the Secretary of State, with the consent of the Treasury, may direct.

36. Subject to the other provisions of this Order, all expenses of removal of prisoners and others, and the expenses of deportation and of the sending of any person to any part of Her Majesty's dominions or Protectorates, including expenses of maintenance, shall be defrayed in such manner as the Secretary of State, with the concurrence of the Treasury, directs.

37.—(a.) If an officer of any Court employed to execute an order loses, by neglect or omission, the opportunity of executing it, then, on complaint of the person aggrieved and proof of the fact alleged, the Court may, if it thinks fit, order the officer to pay the damages sustained by the person complaining, or part thereof.

38.—(a.) If a clerk or officer of the Court, acting under pretence of the process or authority of the Court, is charged with extortion, or with not paying over money duly levied, or with other misconduct, the Court may, if it thinks fit, inquire into the charge in a summary way, and may for that purpose summon and enforce the attendance of all necessary persons as in an action, and may make such order for the repayment of any money extorted, or for the payment over of any money levied, and for the payment of such damages and costs as the Court thinks fit.

(b.) The Court may also, if it thinks fit, on the same inquiry, impose on the clerk or officer a fine not exceeding 50 rupees for each offence.

(c.) A clerk or officer punished under this Article shall not, without the leave of the Protectorate Court, be liable to an action in respect of the same matter; and any such action, if already or afterwards begun, may be stayed by the Court in such manner and on such terms as the Court thinks fit.

(d.) Nothing in this Article shall be deemed to prevent any person from being prosecuted under any other law for any act or omission punishable under this Article, or for being liable under that other law to any higher punishment or penalty than that provided by this Article: Provided that no person shall be punished twice for the same offence.

39. The Consul-General, or any officer of the Protectorate Government appointed by him in that behalf, may exercise any power conferred on any Justices of the Peace within Her Majesty's dominions by any Act of Parliament, for the time being in force, regulating merchant seamen or the mercantile marine.

40. If a question arises whether any place is or is not within the Protectorate for the purposes of this Order, it shall be referred to and determined by the Consul-General, and a certificate under his hand and seal shall be conclusive on the question, and judicial notice thereof shall be taken by every Court constituted by or under this Order.

41. Not later than the 31st March in each year the Consul-General shall send to the Secretary of State a Report on the operation of this Order, up to the 31st December in the previous year, showing for the then last twelve months the number and nature of the proceedings, criminal and civil, taken under this Order, and the result thereof, and the number and amount of fees received, and containing such other information, and being in such form as the Secretary of State from time to time directs.

42. This Order shall commence and have effect as follows:—

(1.) As to the making of any warrant or appointment under this Order, immediately from and after the date of this Order.

(2.) As to the framing of Rules of Procedure or Regulations, and the approval thereof by the Secretary of State, immediately from and after the date of this Order.

(3.) As to all other matters and provisions comprised and contained in this Order, immediately from and after the expiration of one month after this Order is first exhibited in the public office of the Protectorate at Berbera; for which purpose the Consul-General is hereby required forthwith, on receipt by him of a copy of this Order, to affix and exhibit the same conspicuously in his public office, and he is also hereby required to keep the same so affixed and exhibited during one month from the first exhibition thereof; and notice of the time of such first exhibition shall, as soon thereafter as practicable, be published in such manner as the Consul-General directs; and, notwithstanding anything in this Order, the time of the expiration of the said month shall be deemed to be the time of the commencement of this Order.

(4.) Proof shall not in any proceeding or matter be required that the provisions of this Article have been complied with, nor shall any act or proceeding be invalidated by any failure to comply with any of such provisions.

43. A copy of this Order shall be kept exhibited conspicuously in the principal office of the Protectorate at Berbera.

Printed copies shall be provided and sold at such reasonable price as the Consul-General directs.

And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Salisbury, K.G., one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein.

Claim of Harrison Smith and Co. against France on account of their Mining Concessions in Madagascar.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to a claim by Messrs. Harrison Smith and Co. against the French Government on account of certain Mining Concessions owned by them in Madagascar.

These Mining Concessions, dating from the year 1893, were originally obtained and held by Messrs. Harrison Smith and Co. under contract with the Queen of the Hovas. (Papers A and C.)

Work had to be suspended on account of the French war with the Hovas, but on order being restored it was resumed on portions of the property.

In July 1896 a new Mining Law (Paper E) was promulgated by the French, who had taken possession of the island, and Messrs. Harrison Smith and Co. were in August of that year (Paper A) informed by the Resident-General that by that Law the working and sale of minerals without regular authorization was forbidden. The Resident-General invited the firm to "regularize" their position, and added that although the French Government attached no value to the ancient contracts, they had decided to recognize, as far as was permitted by the new Law, the rights of priority acquired by persons already established.

The firm accordingly send in their deed for legalization, and also supplied maps showing the limits of their Concessions, and they were shortly afterwards informed that a "Projet de Transaction" was about to be forwarded for the approval of the Minister of the Colonies.

Negotiations with regard to the legalization of the Concessions were continued in Paris, and in June 1897 Mr. Harrison Smith had an interview (Paper D 1) with Colonel Binger and M. Petit, representing the French Colonial Office, at which an arrangement was arrived at, and the French Representatives undertook that the Governor-General in Madagascar should be instructed to draw up the new Concessions in accordance with the terms then agreed upon.

The terms, as reported by Mr. Harrison Smith, were embodied in a note (Paper D 2) from Her Majesty's Embassy to the French Government and were subsequently (in December 1897) privately submitted by Sir M. Gosselin (Paper D 4) to Colonel Binger, who acknowledged that they were substantially correct.

The French Government have, however, in their official correspondence, never recognized the arrangement, nor has it been so recognized by the Governor-General, whose offers for a settlement, made to the agent of the firm in Madagascar or tendered through the French Government, would virtually entail an expropriation of the larger and richer part of the firm's property.

Private and official representations by Her Majesty's Embassy at Paris have not resulted in any satisfactory settlement, and in May 1898, the French Government formally repudiated the arrangement made by Colonel Binger (Paper D 13); and in July (Paper D 17) renewed an offer previously made, and accompanied it with an intimation that, unless the offers of the colonial authorities were accepted, the Governor-General could no longer reserve the districts claimed by the firm.

Fresh representations were made by Her Majesty's Embassy at Paris, and further negotiations between Mr. Harrison Smith and the French Colonial Office took place, the eventual result being an offer from the French Government in October 1898 (Paper D 24) to submit the case to arbitration on the basis of the Mining Law of 1896.

This offer was refused by the firm. At their request (Paper D 26) a suggestion was submitted to the French Government that they should purchase, or give a guarantee to enable French capitalists to purchase, the claims of the firm, but this proposal has not been entertained in a manner which promises to be satisfactory.

Messrs. Harrison Smith and Co. now represent that they must maintain their demand that the arrangement made with them in June 1897 (Paper D 28) shall be carried into effect, and have asked that the correspondence may be published.

In the two years during which the negotiations have lasted the Mining Office in Madagascar have, according to the statements made by the firm, first registered claims of other persons to lands in districts covered by their Concessions, and have later made over to a French Syndicate the most valuable part of their property. The firm stated some months ago that they must close their workings and dismiss their agents, and more recently that their funds were exhausted, and that they must withdraw.

They appear to have met with great injustice, and Lord Salisbury is disposed to think that a formal protest should be made to the French Government against the application of the Mining Law of 1896 to destroy rights and privileges regularly granted to British subjects by the proper authority, previous to the annexation of Madagascar by the French.

You are aware of the circumstances under which the annexation took place, and have already in your Report (Paper G) of the 23rd June, 1896, dealt with the question of the extent and nature of the liability of France with regard to the pre-existing Treaty rights of Great Britain in Madagascar.

Protests have from time to time (Paper F) been addressed to the French Government with regard to measures which Her Majesty's Government have held to constitute infringements of those rights, and these protests have throughout been founded on the assumption that the French annexation could have no effect upon the rights created first, by the covenant in 1890 that the then existing Treaties should be respected under a Protectorate; and, secondly, by the assurance given at the time of the war which preceded the annexation that the Protectorate was not to be disturbed.

It might, perhaps, be considered that the effect of any protest against the application of the Mining Law of 1896 to Messrs. Harrison Smith and Co.'s Concessions has been weakened to some extent by the fact that the representations hitherto made in this particular case has been directed to the method of applying the Law rather than against the right to apply it. The question, however, is essentially one of equitable application in respect of rights previously existing.

I am to call your attention to a correspondence (Paper H) between the United States' and French Governments, which has recently been published, with reference to a Notice issued by the latter Government with regard to Concessions. The representations made by the United States' Government drew from that of France an assurance that the requirements of the Notice in question had no other object than to establish the validity of the Concessions granted by the Hova Government, and would not affect property acquired in a regular manner; and the United States' Government, in their reply, emphasized the fact that they could not admit the right of the French Government, in the event of the non-compliance of an American citizen with the order, to treat his Concession as forfeited.

Her Majesty's Government may, in Lord Salisbury's opinion, equally claim that Concessions granted to British subjects shall be treated on this footing.

I am, accordingly, to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether a formal protest can properly be addressed to the French Government against the application of the Mining Law of the 17th July, 1896, to the Concessions owned by Messrs. Harrison Smith and Co. at the time of the annexation, except upon equitable conditions to be arranged between the two Governments; and, if so, that you will indicate the arguments by which you consider that such a protest can most advantageously be supported.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, a formal protest may properly be addressed to the French Government against the manner in which they have dealt with the Concessions owned by Messrs. Harrison Smith and Co.

These Concessions were private property, and there is no pretence for saying that they can be forfeited on the conquest of the island by the French.

Messrs. Harrison Smith and Co. might have been properly required to register these Concessions, but this they were willing to do. The French Government, pending negotiations as to the recognition of these Concessions, have allotted to others the ground covered by them. We are unable to see on what ground of international law, or of ordinary justice, the course pursued by the French Government in this matter can be defended.

We think that Her Majesty's Government may properly insist that equitable terms to be arranged between the two Governments should be conceded to Messrs. Harrison Smith and Co.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, March 8, 1899.

Gentlemen,

Claims against France arising out of events in West Africa.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to submit to you, for your opinion and report, the following cases arising out of recent events in West Africa, which, it has been suggested, should be made the subject of formal representation by Her Majesty's Government to that of France.

These cases are as follows:—

In May 1897 the duties of Resident at Kumasi were being performed by an officer who had not long arrived in the country. He was applied to for a warrant to arrest two British subjects who were stated to be resident at Sikasso. This place is in British territory. The warrant was given, but it turned out that the place meant was Asikasso, which is situated some three hours over the frontier and in French territory.

The warrant was intrusted for execution to a corporal and two privates of the Haussas. These men crossed the frontier by the usual, though not the shortest, route (for route, see annexed map), and were accompanied by five native rubber-traders as far as Akaso.

At Asikasso they were joined by about forty native traders, resident in French territory.

The Haussas were the only armed persons.

The two British subjects were arrested and were being removed in custody when the party was overtaken at Sumejesso by a party of French soldiers under a white officer, who, without further notice, opened fire, killing the Haussa corporal.

The body was beheaded, and the head given to Ashmore, one of the arrested British subjects.

One of the privates was captured, being wounded, and taken to Yanta before a French officer. The latter examined the warrant of arrest given by the British officer, and then gave orders for the Haussa to be shot. This was done, and the body was afterwards mutilated.

The third Haussa had been left at Asikasso in charge of one of the prisoners, Munday. On the French soldiers arriving there he was sitting in the street outside the lock-up. The French opened fire, which he returned; he was then shot. His body was beheaded, his neck partially flayed, and the skin taken off it preserved.

The case has been most carefully investigated by Captain Cramer of the Gold Coast Constabulary, and his Report, with copies of the evidence, is annexed hereto.

Her Majesty's Government hold that there was nothing in the proceedings of the Haussas, although admittedly they had no locus standi in French territory, to justify their being shot down in cold blood, and they claim the sum of 1,500*l.* as compensation.

Subsequent to the general Agreement of 1891 between Great Britain and France as to the western boundary of Sierra Leone, but before that boundary had been absolutely laid down by Commissioners, a party of natives living in the British sphere were engaged, under the superintendence of four men of the British Frontier Police, in making roads to Ncompah, which was believed by them to be in the British sphere. It was reported to Government that they had been fired upon by a party of French soldiers near Ncompah, and five killed and one wounded.

Captain Campbell, the Acting Inspector-General of Police, Sierra Leone, was sent to make inquiries.

It appears from the evidence taken by him that a lance-corporal with three privates, and a good number of people, were engaged on the 31st January and the 1st February in clearing the road. On the 1st the police were in the rear of the workmen, when they heard a volley fired, and then independent shots.

The working party were unarmed, the police had their rifles. It is stated that no notice was given or remonstrance made, but the French soldiers opened fire, with the results above stated. The investigation proved that Ncompah was on the French side of the boundary.

(3.) Claim of Royal Niger Company.

The grounds upon which this claim was advanced by the Company are set out in their letter to the Earl of Rosebery of the 25th May, 1893.

The general history of the case is given in the accompanying extract from a Memorandum, dated the 6th May, 1895.

Briefly it is as follows:

Lieutenant Mizon, an officer in the French service, conducted two expeditions into the River Niger. The first took place in October 1890, and was described to Lord Salisbury by M. Waddington as having been sent out by a Commercial Syndicate in France to explore the territory beyond Yola on the Benué. It got into difficulties with the natives through entering the Niger by a disused branch, and though aided by the Company, and able subsequently to proceed, it failed in its object, and its failure was attributed by its leader and the French press to the action of the Niger Company.

The second expedition was in 1892. The Niger Company were alarmed at the preparations of a military nature being made in France on account of the expedition, and, in consequence, Lord Salisbury called the attention of the French Government to the expedition, and asked for explanations of its character and intentions.

M. Waddington replied that the expedition was one for essentially commercial and scientific exploration, which had been organized by certain French merchants, and was intended to reach Adamawa "en passant par Yola," which lies within the Company's territory.

Further, that it had strict injunctions from the French Government to observe all the requirements of the Brussels Act as to arms, &c.

With much misgiving, Lord Rosebery, who, by that time, was at the Foreign Office, consented to allow the expedition to proceed; but it soon displayed its real character by selling arms, by landing and assisting the natives of British territory in their slave raids on one another, by settling at Yolo, and by a complete disregard of the Niger Company's authority and Regulations. Lieutenant Mizon was eventually recalled by the French Government to explain his conduct; his ship, the "Sergent Malamine," was seized, as shown elsewhere, and condemned by the Company's tribunals, and the Company sent in a claim for 100,000*l.* damages on account of injury to its interests as a Government.

This claim was one of others which we were at one time ready to wipe out in a general agreement, but that agreement not having been come to, we hold that it is open to us to advance it, and to urge its settlement.

A statement of the facts relating to this case is contained in the Judgment of the Supreme Court of the Niger Territories, dated the 5th October, 1893.

The French Government have never allowed that the confiscation was justified, and claim compensation for the owners of the vessel and the merchandize.

It is, therefore, a counter-claim by France on Great Britain. The question is whether Her Majesty's Government are justified on legal or other grounds in resisting the claim, which, for the reasons set forth in the draft to the Treasury of the 20th March, 1897, has been the subject of diplomatic negotiations between the two Governments.

The King of Samoir is a native of territory under British protection. His town of Bolugu was held by a British post when in March last a party of French soldiers visited it, killed three of the inhabitants, and threatened to kill the men forming the British post and take away the flag.

This action formed the subject of a protest by the British Commandant.

The claim of the King to British protection was thus well known to the local French officers.

Notwithstanding this, on the 15th April Lieutenant Mercier arrested the King in the town of Wa, also under British protection.

The King had on that day been to Major Walker, Commanding the British forces at Wa, who directed him to keep quiet till communications had been exchanged with the French Officer Commanding at Leo as to his return to Samoir.

Immediately on hearing of his arrest Major Walker wrote to Lieutenant Mercier, but hearing that the latter with an escort of ten men was taking the King out of Wa he sent Captain Haslewood with an orderly to convey the letter and protest verbally.

Captain Haslewood overtook the party, rode up to Lieutenant Mercier and protested against the arrest, at the same time producing Major Walker's letter.

Without reading the letter Lieutenant Mercier gave a hurried order to his men, and the King was at once shot dead.

Captain Haslewood galloped back to report, and Major Walker immediately dispatched Assistant Colonel-Surgeon Storrs with a party to render what assistance he could, or bury the King if dead. On arrival at the spot it was found that the body had been mutilated by the head being cut off.

The disparity in the numbers of the British and French parties—two of the former and eleven of the latter—preclude the possibility of the acceptance of Lieutenant Mercier's plea that he thought a rescue was intended. For this gross outrage Her Majesty's Government demand an indemnity of 10,000*l*.

At the end of June 1897, a French force of 100 armed men with three European officers passed through Meko on their way to Bariba viâ Igagun; it was followed by a French officer going to Kishi, a town claimed by Great Britain as south, and by France as north, of the 9th parallel.

On the 27th August, 1897, M. Berand, accompanied by an escort, arrived at Meko from Kishi by way of Igagun and Saki; this route, through what was admittedly British territory, was used by the French in order the more quickly to effect the occupation of Kishi, which they knew was claimed by Great Britain.

On the 1st September, 1897, Lieutenant Brot, a French officer, arrived at Igagun from Porto Novo with sixty-two native soldiers and thirty-eight carriers. He met the British District Officer, but refused to halt or return, and, impressing carriers by force, proceeded on his way.

This force engaged in hostilities with the natives in the neighbourhood of Saki, and attacked Ilesha, where several natives of British territory lost their lives.

The occupation of Kishi by French forces was attended by such circumstances of oppression to the natives that the latter finally turned and expelled the French post.

The following Table shows the extent of the damages at the various villages south of the 9th parallel, for which compensation is claimed :—

Saki
Five horses	100
100 loads yams	5
160 impressed carriers (two days)	20
Compensation for illegal entry and disturbance	500
Ilesha
Five men killed	500
Three men wounded	150
Five sheep killed	2
Compensation for illegal attack	1,000
Aha.
200 impressed carriers	15
Sheep, goats, and fowls taken without payment	20
Compensation for illegal entry and disturbance	500
Sape-Pere.
220 impressed carriers	20
Sheep, goats, and fowls taken without payment	20
Compensation for illegal entry and disturbance	500
Igboho.
200 impressed carriers	15
Sheep, cattle, goats, fowls, &c., taken without payment	25
Compensation for illegal entry and disturbance	500

(7.) Kishi.

The sufferings entailed upon the natives of Kishi by the French occupation have been very great: the town was treated as a conquered place, the men lived on the inhabitants, helping themselves to what they wanted, and paying for nothing.

Eight cases have been proved in which women were forcibly abducted and carried away. The French Government will admit that the sum of 2,000*l*., which is asked in compensation for these injuries, is only moderate.

The evidence in regard to the Kishi claims is contained in the Colonial Office letter of the 26th July, which is annexed hereto.

The incident dealt with in this case occurred on the 27th December, 1893.

At that time the boundary between the British and French spheres in the Hinterland of Sierra Leone had been fixed by Agreements of 1889 and 1891, but the portion near which the incident took place had not been laid down on the spot. A predatory tribe known as the Sofas were out near the frontier, and a British force, under the command of Colonel Ellis, 1st West India Regiment, was sent in pursuit. The force had encamped at Waima on the 22nd December, and before daylight next morning was attacked by a French force under Lieutenant Maritz. Before the mistake was discovered, the British had lost Captain Lendy, D.S.O., Lieutenant Liston, 2nd Lieutenant Wroughton, one sergeant-major, and six privates killed, and seventeen wounded.

The French loss is not exactly known, but Lieutenant Maritz and ten French soldiers were amongst the killed, and a large number of natives.

Lieutenant Maritz was not the Commandant of any French post, but was moving about with an armed party.

At the time of the conflict the British had no doubt that Waima was in British territory; the fact was contested by the French, but has since been established by observations taken on the spot by officers of the Royal Engineers, who have fixed it as 12 miles on the British side of the boundary.

Her Majesty's Government do not assert that Lieutenant Maritz made an attack on a British post knowing it to be such, but they contend that there was culpable neglect on his part to ascertain where he was, which justifies them in making a claim for reparation from the French Government, and for compensation amounting to 8,000*l.* for the families of the European officers killed,* and 1,000*l.* for those of the native non-commissioned officers and men.

[Extract from letter dated the 29th October, 1898, from Governor of the Gold Coast to Governor of the Ivory Coast.

"3. Violations of territory.—

(a.) On or about the 10th August, the principal Mahommedan Chief of Bontuku, named Edumaim, proceeded across the frontier with armed natives to Pamu, the residence of the King of Wam, and thence through the British town of Pulliano to Bontuku.

"(b.) On or about the 11th August, a French white officer in command of a detachment of about twenty soldiers crossed the frontier to Pamu, where he interviewed the King. He, too, went on to the British town of Pulliano, and thence to Bontuku, sleeping in the district of Wam, at a village called Kwoku Daikrum. Your officers, I am aware, have excellent maps of the country (Cartes Binger), and there seems to me, under the circumstances, no reasonable explanation of this act. I must ask you to issue stringent orders against the entry of armed parties into British territory, and against similar violations of the frontier in future.

"4. Acts against individuals.—

"(a.) The execution on or about the 30th August of Chief Pappae, of British Gaman, at Bontuku, by order of the officer in charge of that post: Chief Pappae was, I am advised, shot on the representation of a native interpreter named Tano Kwassie, and met his death with two other Gaman Chiefs (French) named Bassa Kow and Kwami Framee. With regard to this matter, I beg to be informed upon what charge Pappae was shot, whether the sentence was one passed upon him by a Court of Justice, and whether he was afforded any opportunity of showing that he was a British subject. The matter was, I learn from Captain Armitage, mentioned by him to Captain Deane, who stated that the Chief was shot without any order on his part.

"(b.) The summoning of Edu Yow, Chief of a village of that name in British territory, to Asikasso by, it would seem, the order of Kobina Appia, on pain of being shot if he did not come. His case was represented by Captain Armitage to Captain Deane in a letter dated the 25th September, and the Chief's immediate release and return to his village was requested. I shall be glad to learn from you that this has been accomplished, and that no fine was levied upon him or other punishment inflicted. If there is any complaint against this Chief, I will, upon receiving full particulars of it, cause it to be investigated.

"(c.) The seizure by M. Le Filliatre of the wife of a Gold Coast native because his own 'small boy' or servant had been lost: This was another matter brought to the notice of Captain Deane, by whom an informal inquiry was held. At this inquiry the interpreter of M. Le Filliatre admitted the act, and Captain Deane promised to restore the woman to her husband. I have the honour to inquire whether this act of restitution has been effected.

"(d.) The shooting, early in July, of a Mahommedan named Serike, at Asikasso, who had been arrested with a Gold Coast native named Kwasi Dansu: Kwasi Dansu, it appears, managed to escape, after having been severely flogged, and then thrown into prison. He arrived at Debisu on the 16th August in a very pitiable condition, his back covered with partially-healed wounds, and with his hands almost useless, the skin on the backs and palms being dead and peeling off owing to the tightness of the cords which had bound him. This man was personally seen and examined by Captain Armitage, so that I am in a position to vouch for the accuracy of this statement as to his condition, and I beg to be informed whether his case was dealt with in a Court of Justice, and, if so, whether the sentence was carried out in accordance with law. The shooting of Serike was, I am advised, in accordance with an order given by Captain Deane, who informed Captain Armitage that he had been brought to him by a party of Gamans, who asserted that he had taken part in the disturbances around Asikasso. Serike appears to have been shot by order, without any investigation as to his guilt.

"5. There are other cases the details of which I could mention, but I have, I think, brought forward sufficient evidence to warrant the appeal made to you in my telegram of the 27th August, and in my paragraph 3 of my despatch of the same date. namely, that you would exercise your good offices in seeing that British subjects arrested within French territory on suspicion of implication in the attack on Asikasso, or on other grounds, receive a fair trial, and are dealt with in accordance with French law.

"I will now give a few instances of the acts of Ashmore and the French Chiefs Krappa and Kobina Appia:—

"Ashmore.—(a.) In the month of December 1896 Ashmore crossed the frontier and appeared at Debisu, where he extorted the sum of 10*l.* from a native, an English subject named Tchrei; and

"(b.) On the same occasion extorted the sum of 14*l.* from one Ottiri The Chief of Debisu, Kofi Tah, and a man named Yow Khan, are in a position to bear evidence of these acts of extortion.

"Krappa.—(a.) This Gaman Chief has either led in person or has sent armed bands of Gamans into Wam to arrest and confiscate the property of the English rubber traders resident in that country. In October 1897, Krappa and Kobina Appia entered Wam with 150 armed Gamans.

"(b.) In December 1897 Krappa entered the village of Krasu (Wam), and came on to Pamu with his followers, on the pretext of meeting the English rubber brokers in conference. On this occasion he arrested a rubber broker, an English subject named Kwamin Ahini, at Imbeisu, who was afterwards released at the King of Wam's request.

"(c.) In the same month (December 1897) Krappa sent 80 armed men to Aduabu to seize the property of one Akosi Addai.

"(d.) Towards the end of December 1897 Krappa sent an armed party to Imbeisu, where Kwoku Teburajei, Kudjoe Fojo, and Kwame Sarah lost all their property which they had left at that village. At the same time, Kwoku Mensah and Kwame Ku were arrested, and all their property confiscated.

"(e.) In July 1898 Kobina Ebin was arrested at Bonadi, near Amasu, by ten armed Gamans sent by Krappa, together with Kwame Enim and Kwoku Wirudu. These three men were made to pay the sum of 23*l.* between them before being released.

"Kobina Appia.—(a.) In October 1897 this Gaman Chief raided with Krappa into Wam country.

"(b.) In August 1897 Appia's linguist, Akka, acting under the former's ill-instructions, arrested two English subjects named Yow Emufu and Osei Yow at Amasu (Wam). The former paid 40*l.* and the latter 20*l.* before being released. All their property was confiscated.

"(c.) In March 1898 Appia's servants, acting under his orders, came to Krasu (Wam), and took all the property of Eckuah Dakuah, who had been left there in charge of trade-goods by her husband.

* Mrs. Liston	4,000
Mrs. Lendy	2,000
Mrs. Wroughton	2,000

"(d.) In August 1898 Yow Dumfei states that he, together with other brokers, were attacked in a village called Ahmajinoa Krum (Wam) by one of Appia's bands of armed Gamans. They escaped, and met Captain Armitage on his way to Pamu.

"(e.) Kofi Enin states that on or about the 11th August, 1898, he was arrested at Chirimesu (Wam) by Gamans, acting under Appia's orders; that he was flogged, and 2*l.* 8*s.* and all his property were taken.

"(f.) Akka (Appia's linguist) also arrested, in his master's name, a man named Akosi Wurri (who had to pay 40*l.* for his release) at Asikasso (Wam), a little over a year ago."

Lord Salisbury will be obliged if you will take these various cases into your consideration, and will favour him with your opinion as to whether all, or any, and if so, which of them can properly be made the subject of a claim against the French Government.

I am further to inquire with reference to such claims, if any, as you may consider should be supported whether the amounts stated in each case are respectively such as may properly be put forward in their entirety, or whether they call for reduction to any, and if so, to what extent.

Lord Salisbury will be glad at the same time to be favoured with any observations of a general character which you may have to offer on the claims themselves.

I have, &c.

Report.

(1.) Asikasso.

In our opinion this case may properly be made the subject of claim. Although the Haussas were by mistake upon French territory, there was no justification whatever for their being put to death. It is difficult to put a precise figure upon a claim of this kind, but we would suggest 1,000*l.*

(2.) Ncompah.

The killing of these men was absolutely unjustifiable, and the claim may properly be pressed.

(3.) Claim of Royal Niger Company.

The proceedings of Lieutenant Mizon were of a piratical character, carried out with gross breach of faith. No doubt he did a great deal of mischief in the Company's territory, but their claim of 100,000*l.* seems rather large, and such an amount ought not to be pressed without further full information as to how it is made up, and satisfactory proof that substantial damage was sustained by the Company.

(4.) The case of "Sergent Malamine."

We think that Her Majesty's Government are justified in resisting the claim for the loss of this vessel. The facts seem to bear out the finding of the Court that the Company's Regulations had been broken, and the forfeiture of the vessel thereby incurred. These Regulations as to the landing of goods do not appear to us to contravene the provisions of the Act of Berlin as to free navigation.

It must not be forgotten that Mizon's proceedings in stirring up hostilities among the natives had been of so extraordinary a character that there would have been a moral justification for seizing his vessel even without legal process as an act of State. We think, however, that the Judgment of the Court can be supported in point of law, and we advise that the claim should be resisted.

This was a cold-blooded murder, and we think that the indemnity of 10,000*l.* may properly be demanded.

We think that these claims may properly be pressed, and, as far as we have materials for judging, we think that the amounts claimed are not unreasonable.

(7.) Kishi.

We think that this claim also may be pressed, and for the amount mentioned, 2,000*l.*

(8.) Waima.

The French were trespassing upon British territory, and there was no justification for the attack which they made on a British force. Though the attack was made under a mistake the French Government is bound to make compensation for the wrongful act of its officers, and the amount claimed is, we think, reasonable.

It appears to be the fact that the French have violated British territory, and have killed and otherwise ill-treated British subjects in an unjustifiable manner. Of course it is impossible for us to form an opinion on each item under this head, but, speaking broadly, we think that the claim should be pressed.

We have no materials for suggesting any amount.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, June 24, 1899.

Limits of Territorial Waters of Tunis.

I HAVE the honour to transmit, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a despatch which has been received from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Tunis, inclosing copy of a Decree issued by the Bey, and countersigned by the French Resident-General, which purports to extend the jurisdiction of the Tunisian Customs authorities beyond the territorial waters of the Regency.

The Decree in question, which is designed to prevent the introduction into Tunisia of certain prohibited articles, gives power to Tunisian Custom-house officers to visit trading-vessels within a radius of 2 myriamètres (or about 13 statute miles) from the shore, and imposes penalties in cases in which masters of vessels refuse compliance with its provisions.

By the same Decree, Custom-house officers have authority to visit trading-vessels while in port, while lying in roadsteads, or while engaged in ascending or descending rivers.

The French Government is primarily responsible to foreign Powers for the acts of the native administration of Tunis, and consequently any objection which may be entertained by foreign Powers to administrative or legislative measures adopted by the Tunisian authorities must be addressed to France as the Suzerain Power.

For the reasons, amongst others, which are set out in the Memorandum (inclosed) by Mr. Davidson, Q.C., the Legal Adviser to this Department, the terms of the Decree render consideration, in so far as they purport to confer powers of visit and search in regard to foreign merchant-vessels outside the 3-mile limit, appear to be ultra vires in contemplation of international law, and open to grave objection.

I am therefore to request you to take the terms of the Beylical Decree into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether it is desirable for Her Majesty's Government to protest against its issue, and, if so, on what special grounds such a protest may most advantageously be based.

Lord Salisbury will be glad at the same time to be favoured with any observations of a general nature which you may desire to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.

Sir H. Johnston	(No. 27)	June 10, 1899.
Memorandum by Mr. Davidson		June 15, 1899.

Report.

In our opinion, it is desirable that Her Majesty's Government should protest against the issue of the Decree in question.

The protest should be based on the ground that the Decree assumes jurisdiction over British ships beyond the limits of the territorial waters of Tunis.

There is no doubt that in former times jurisdiction was asserted, particularly for customs purposes, to a limit considerably exceeding that of 3 miles from the shore. One illustration is afforded by the "Hovering Act" of 1736 (9 Geo. II, cap. 35), and another by the Act of Congress of the United States of America of the 2nd March, 1799 (5th Congress, Session 3, Chapter 22), which, by the 25th, 26th, 27th, and 99th sections, assumed jurisdiction in the case of vessels bound for ports of the United States up to a limit of 4 leagues. The validity of such an extension of jurisdiction was maintained by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Church v. Hubbart (2 Cranch's Reports, 186), in the matter of a seizure by the Portuguese 4 or 5 leagues off the coast of Brazil. We may also refer in this connection to the observations of Lord Stowell in the case of Le Louis (2 Dodson's Admiralty Reports, pp. 245-246).

At the present day territorial jurisdiction cannot be regarded as conceded by international law beyond the 3-mile limit. It is recognized by our present Customs Act, and in "The Sea Fisheries Regulation Act, 1895," sec. 10, it was provided that the power of making bye-laws within the limit of 13 miles should be exercised only with the consent of all the States signatory of the North Sea Convention, 1882.

We are, therefore, of opinion that, in the absence of special agreement or of an extension of the limit by general assent, Her Majesty's Government should not acquiesce in the assertion by any foreign Power of jurisdiction over the sea beyond the 3-mile limit.

The propriety of that limit has been much discussed, and it might probably with advantage be extended, but until by international consent an extension has been arranged, we think that Her Majesty's Government ought to require that other Powers should observe the 3-mile limit as Her Majesty's Government does with reference to the sea adjoining British dominions.

We may add that in the case of the Decree now in question the power is a very wide one, and is not even confined to the case of vessels bound for Tunisian territory.

The protest should be based on the broad ground that territorial jurisdiction is not by international law recognized beyond the 3-mile limit, and that this Decree purports to assert it to a distance of 20 kilometres.

Annex.

Memorandum by Mr. Davidson.

1. A MYRIAMÈTRE is, I believe, 10,000 mètres, or 10 kilomètres.

2. The British "Hovering Act," passed in 1736 (9 Geo. II, cap. 35), was repealed in 1826 by Geo. IV, cap. 105, and 6 Geo. IV, cap. 105, was repealed by "The Statute Law Revision Act, 1873."

The "Hovering Act" of 1736 assumes, for certain revenue purposes (section 23), a jurisdiction of 4 leagues from the coast by prohibiting foreign goods to be transhipped within that distance without payment of duties.

But the Act of 1736 was based on the doctrines of an even earlier date, when we maintained our jurisdiction over the King's Chambers, and when the security of British commerce was provided for by express prohibitions against the roving or hovering of foreign ships of war so near the neutral coasts and harbours of Great Britain as to disturb or threaten vessels homeward or outward bound; and captures of enemies' vessels, if made within the King's Chambers, would in those days have been restored by the Court of Admiralty, which claimed jurisdiction over the King's Chambers.

Our present Customs legislation ("The Customs Consolidation Act, 1876," section 179) does not assert jurisdiction in the case of non-British ships beyond the 3-mile limit, and section 179 by asserting jurisdiction over British ships with false bulkheads, &c., up to 3 leagues from the shore, while only claiming it over foreign ships in the like case up to 1 league from the shore, implicitly admits that our jurisdiction over foreign ships ceases with the 3-mile limit.

There remains for a passing notice the doctrine of "hot pursuit," whereby the pursuit of a vessel which has offended within the 3-mile limit, and which the authorities have unsuccessfully endeavoured to arrest while within the 3-mile limit, is continued outside the 3-mile limit.

This, of course, is an exceptional case, and no principle can be deduced from it—even if the right to continue a pursuit begun under such circumstances within the territorial waters into the high seas, which are the common property of nations, be admitted—on which to found a general claim to visit and rummage up to a distance of 20 kilom. from the shore.

I agree with Sir H. Bergne that such a claim is probably not inconsistent with the actual Treaty engagements of France if it should be applied equally and impartially to all vessels. But I think that it is, in the absence of express Treaty stipulation conceding it to France by this country, contrary to the general principles of international law.

I say conceding it to France because, although the Decree is nominally made by "Ali Pacha Bey, Possesseur du Royaume de Tunis," it is countersigned and approved by the French Resident-General. who represents the French Republic as the Suzerain Power, and as the Suzerain Power France is responsible to this country and to other foreign nations in regard to the matter.

I think the Decree ought to be referred to the Law Officers, with a short explanation of the circumstances, and that they should be asked whether it is, in their opinion, desirable that Her Majesty's Government should protest against the issue of this Decree, and, if so, on what special ground such a protest may most advantageously be based.

Having regard to the principle involved, which is that of the assertion of jurisdiction beyond the 3-mile limit—whether it be for customs purposes, for fishery purposes (as in the recent case of Iceland), or for what else is immaterial comparatively—I conceive that it is very important to protest against any attempt to extend the doctrine of the 3-mile limit otherwise than by general international agreement and consensus.

So long as we stick tenaciously to the 3-mile limit we have got a πoῦ στω ; but if this limit be once overstepped we shall lose our firm footing at once.

The 3-mile limit, at any rate, is universally accepted as a minimum ; if it is to be extended otherwise than by international consensus, then each nation can scarcely be prevented from extending it according to its own individual taste and fancy.

France is content to stop 20,000 mètres from low-water mark in the present case, but non constat that Germany, or Russia, or the United States of America may not claim to extend, in the case of their own waters, the limit still further. We can, so far as I know, oppose no better arguments against an extension of 3 miles to 20 miles than against an extension of 3 miles to 2 myriamètres, which is, I think, roughly speaking, about 13 miles. It is simply a question of degree once the time-hallowed 3-mile limit is passed.

No. 27.

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, June 19, 1899.

Validity of marriage of Miss A. Harding and Ahmad al Gamarti.

I AM directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit to you the accompanying correspondence which has taken place with Sir H. Johnston, Her Majesty's Consul-General at Tunis, on the subject of the validity of a marriage solemnized in 1897 by his predecessor, Mr. Haggard, between Miss Ann Augusta Harding, a British subject, and a gentleman of Tunisian nationality, named Ahmad al Gamarti.

It will be seen that it is stated on the face of the certificate inclosed in Sir H. Johnston's despatch No. 7 of the 27th February last, that the marriage was solemnized according to the rites and ceremonies of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849," which was repealed in 1892, five years before the certificate was issued. It was at first believed that the marriage had actually been celebrated under the provisions of the repealed Act, but inquiry has led to the belief that the ceremony was correctly performed in accordance with "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," although it was erroneously registered, as were all the other marriages performed at the Consulate-General since 1892, as having been solemnized in accordance with the earlier and then repealed Act.

There is, moreover, a further point to which I am to call your special attention in connection with this particular marriage. By Article 4 (1) (C) of "The Foreign Marriage Order in Council, 1892," Consular Officers, before solemnizing a marriage under the Foreign Marriage Act, must be satisfied, "if one of the parties is a British subject, and the other a subject or citizen of the country, that sufficient facilities do not exist for the solemnization of the marriage in the foreign country in accordance with the law of that country." Lord Salisbury is advised that the marriage having in fact been solemnized in accordance with "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," it would, in view of the validating clauses contained in section 13 (2) of the Act, be difficult now to throw doubt on its validity so far as English law is concerned. Some doubt has, however, arisen as to whether Mr. Haggard was at the time justified, on the ground that sufficient facilities were not provided by Tunisian law for the marriage of a Christian in Tunis, in marrying Miss Harding and al Gamarti.

A case arose in Morocco in 1872, in which a Mahometan applied to Her Majesty's Minister and Consul-General at Tangier to be married to a young Englishwoman; and the requirements of the Act of Parliament (as well as those of the law of Morocco) having been fulfilled, the marriage was duly solemnized at the British Consulate-General. The then Law Officers were consulted in the matter, and I am to transmit to you a copy of their Report, stating that, in their opinion, the marriage was by English law valid, and the Minister's proceedings in performing it quite in accordance with his duty. Should the circumstances of the two cases be held to be similar, and should you concur on this point with the opinion of your predecessors, it is presumed that the Report of the Law Officers of 1873 on the Morocco case would equally apply to the one at Tunis now under discussion.

I am to request you to take these papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion.

1. As to whether the validity of the Ahmad al Gamarti and other similar marriages is in any way affected by the errors which have been made in entering them in the marriage register.

2. As to the propriety of Mr. Haggard's action in solemnizing the marriage in the circumstances.

The question as to the best method of correcting the erroneous entries already made in the marriage registry book of the Consulate has been referred to the Registrar-General for his suggestions.

I have, &c.

Foreign Office to the Solicitor-General.

Sir, Foreign Office, June 20, 1899.

Countervailing duties on sugar imported into India under bounties.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to an Act passed this year by the Indian Government (Paper A) for the purpose of imposing countervailing duties on foreign sugar when imported into India under bounties.

The additional duties which are to be levied, as shown in Paper (B), are believed to be, as far as possible, exactly equivalent to the bounties granted, whether on production or export, in the respective foreign countries named.

A considerable amount of bounty-fed sugar is exported to India from Austria-Hungary, and it is believed that although the amount of Russian sugar imported into India is at present inappreciable, the trade might possibly be greatly extended in the future.

Under these circumstances, representations have been made by these two countries respecting the bearing of the recent Indian Act upon international obligations.

"ARTICLE II.

"The produce and manufactures of, as well as all goods coming from, Austria-Hungary which are imported into the territories and possessions, including the Colonies and foreign possessions, of Her Britannic Majesty, and the produce and manufactures of, as well as all goods coming from, British possessions which are imported into the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, whether intended for consumption, warehousing, re-exportation, or transit, shall therein, during the continuance of this Treaty, be treated in the same manner as, and in particular shall be subjected to no higher or other duties than, the produce and goods of any third country, the most favoured in this respect.

"ARTICLE III.

"Every reduction in the Tariff of import and export duties, as well as every favour or immunity that one of the Contracting Parties grants to the subjects and commerce of a third Power, shall be participated in simultaneously and unconditionally by the other."

The Treaty of the 12th January, 1859, between Great Britain and Russia (Paper D), contains the following engagements:—

"ARTICLE II.

"No other or higher duties shall be imposed on the importation into the dominions and possessions of Her Britannic Majesty of any article the growth, produce, or manufacture of the dominions and possessions of His Majesty the Emperor of All the Russias from whatever place arriving, and no other or higher duties shall be imposed on the importation into the dominions and possessions of His Majesty the Emperor of All the Russias of any article the growth, produce, or manufacture of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions and possessions, from whatever place arriving, than are or shall be payable on the like article, the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country; nor shall any prohibition be imposed on the importation of any article the growth, produce, or manufacture of the dominions and possessions of either of the two Contracting Parties into the dominions and possessions of the other, which shall not equally extend to the importation of the like articles being the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other country.

"ARTICLE X.

"Her Britannic Majesty engages that in all matters relating to commerce and navigation, the subjects of His Majesty the Emperor of All the Russias shall, in the British dominions, be entitled to every privilege, favour, and immunity which is actually granted, or may hereafter be granted, by Her Britannic Majesty to the subjects or citizens of any other Power."

Both of these Treaties include India, and are now terminable by twelve months' notice on either side.

The aim and intent of the most-favoured-nation stipulations contained in the above quoted Treaties, and in others to a similar effect, is, that the goods of either Contracting State shall be placed in the territories of the other in no worse position than goods of any other country. It is certainly not meant that they should enjoy preferential treatment either to native goods—or to goods of the most favoured third country—and the question arises how far it is open to either Contracting Party, by Governmental administrative act, to secure for its goods the preferential position in the markets of the other which it was not designed by the Treaty that they should enjoy.

It has long been admitted internationally that natural circumstances, independent of Government agency or control, may be invoked in order to justify a prohibition of, or special treatment of, goods arriving under certain special conditions, although similar goods are admitted freely when such conditions are not present, notwithstanding the existence of Treaty stipulations guaranteeing most-favoured-nation treatment in these respects.

It is sufficient to cite as examples the restrictions imposed in Great Britain and in various other countries on the importation of cattle and plants suspected of disease, and the precautions frequently adopted to prevent the importation or circulation of rags and other substances supposed to be capable of transmitting infection.

It is true that express stipulations providing for a derogation from most-favoured-nation treatment in such cases are now frequently inserted in Commercial Treaties, but the precautions above alluded to are also taken in cases where most-favoured-nation clauses exist without any exception or qualification.

Lord Salisbury desires, however, in the present instance, to direct your attention more particularly to the case where a Government, by its own administrative act, overrides the spirit of the most-favoured-nation clause, and creates in favour of its own goods an inequality which it is the object of the Treaty to prevent, and which does not result from any natural or economic cause.

An instance in point is afforded by "The Foreign Prison-made Goods Act, 1897" [60 and 61 Vict., cap. 63], (Paper E). Although under this Act the importation of prison-made goods into the United Kingdom has been effectively stopped, notwithstanding the admission of similar goods not prison-made, no representations against the operation of the Act have been received by Her Majesty's Government from any foreign Power with whom most-favoured-nation clauses have existed, or do now exist.

The Government of the United States have for some years passed redressed by countervailing duties the inequality created by bounties on production or export, and you will find in Paper (F) a short statement of the arguments advanced by that Government to justify their action, to which I am to call your especial attention.

It will be within your recollection that the Law Officers of the Crown have on two previous occasions (see Opinions, Papers G and H) expressed opinions somewhat adverse to the action which has now been taken by the Indian Government, but I am also to inclose a legal opinion which has been given by Sir J. Edge, Q.C., and Sir A. Wilson (Paper I), to the effect that the Indian Act is not inconsistent with Treaty engagements.

Lord Salisbury is of opinion that the great extension and development of the bounty system in recent years constitutes a grave menace to British industry and enterprise, and is disinclined to admit that it is open to any Government to override by its own act the clear intention of Treaty stipulations, without its being open to the other Contracting Party, by corresponding legislative action, if such should seem to be expedient, to redress the balance of trade, which has been thus artificially disturbed.

I am therefore to invite your attention to the Papers now laid before you, and I am to inquire whether, having regard to the fact that representations on the subject of the Indian Act have been received from Austria-Hungary and from Russia, you would concur in a reply being made in the sense of the foregoing paragraph, accompanied by an intimation that, if either of these foreign countries be not willing to accept that view, Her Majesty's Government are prepared to give notice of termination of the Treaty.

I am further to request that you will also favour his Lordship with any general observations on the subject, if such should seem to you to be required.

In view of the fact that the Attorney-General is now in Paris, engaged in the Venezuelan Arbitration Case, his Lordship does not propose to trouble him for his opinion on this matter.

I have, &c.

Report.

I think that a reply may be properly made to Austria-Hungary and to Russia in the sense proposed.

The Indian Act is not, in my opinion, a breach of the Treaties with either of these countries. The Act imposes upon bounty-fed sugars, from whatever country they come, an additional duty equal to the amount of the bounty. This is not giving preference to one country over another; it is treating all countries alike. The meaning of the Treaties seems to me to be that no higher duties shall be imposed in respect of the fact that the goods come from Austria-Hungary or Russia. The countervailing duty is not imposed in respect of the fact that the goods come from these countries. It is imposed on goods which come thence only because they are bounty-fed, and the Act would apply in the same way to the goods of any other country.

Other considerations would arise, if a condition imposed nominally on the goods of all countries alike were such that, owing to natural circumstances, it would affect one country prejudicially as compared to others. Bounties are given at the will of the foreign Government, and any foreign State can escape the operation of the countervailing duty by putting an end to the artificial state of things created by the grant of such bounty.

The "Foreign Prison-made Goods Act" and the Indian Act seem to me, for this purpose, to stand on the same footing. If it be a breach of these Treaties to impose a countervailing duty on goods which are bounty-fed, it is also a breach to prohibit the importation of goods produced in a foreign prison. The answer in each case is that the duty or the prohibition is not imposed in respect of the fact that the goods come from a particular country, or in respect of any natural circumstances applying to one country rather than another, but in respect of the fact that the goods have been produced or exported under artificial conditions the existence of which depends entirely upon the will of the foreign Government.

Foreign Office, June 20, 1899.

My Lord,

Countervailing duties in India on bounty-fed sugar.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to an Act passed this year by the Indian Government (Paper A) for the purpose of imposing countervailing duties on foreign sugar when imported into India under bounties.

The additional duties which are to be levied, as shown in Paper (B), are believed to be, as far as possible, exactly equivalent to the bounties granted, whether on production or export, in the respective foreign countries named.

A considerable amount of bounty-fed sugar is exported to India from Austria-Hungary, and it is believed that, although the amount of Russian sugar imported into India is at present inappreciable, the trade might possibly be greatly extended in the future.

Under these circumstances, representations have been made by these two countries respecting the bearing of the recent Indian Act upon international obligations.

"ARTICLE II.

"The produce and manufactures of, as well as all goods coming from, Austria-Hungary which are imported into the territories and possessions, including the Colonies and foreign possessions, of Her Britannic Majesty, and the produce and manufactures of, as well as all goods coming from, British possessions which are imported into the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, whether intended for consumption, warehousing, re-exportation, or transit, shall therein, during the continuance of this Treaty, be treated in the same manner as, and in particular shall be subjected to no higher or other duties than, the produce and goods of any third country, the most favoured in this respect.

"ARTICLE III.

"Every reduction in the Tariff of import and export duties, as well as every favour or immunity that one of the Contracting Parties grants to the subjects and commerce of a third Power, shall be participated in simultaneously and unconditionally by the other."

The Treaty of the 12th January, 1859, between Great Britain and Russia (Paper D), contains the following engagements:—

"ARTICLE II.

"No other or higher duties shall be imposed on the importation into the dominions and possessions of Her Britannic Majesty of any article the growth, produce, or manufacture of the dominions and possessions of His Majesty the Emperor of All the Russias, from whatever place arriving, and no other or higher duties shall be imposed on the importation into the dominions and possessions of His Majesty the Emperor of All the Russias of any article the growth, produce, or manufacture of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions and possessions, from whatever place arriving, than are or shall be payable on the like article, the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country; nor shall any prohibition be imposed on the importation of any article the growth, produce, or manufacture of the dominions and possessions of either of the two Contracting Parties into the dominions and possessions of the other, which shall not equally extend to the importation of the like articles being the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other country."

"ARTICLE X.

"Her Britannic Majesty engages that in all matters relating to commerce and navigation, the subjects of His Majesty the Emperor of All the Russias shall, in the British dominions, be entitled to every privilege, favour, and immunity which is actually granted, or may hereafter be granted, by Her Britannic Majesty to the subjects or citizens of any other Power."

Both of these Treaties include India, and are now terminable by twelve months' notice on either side.

The aim and intent of the most-favoured-nation stipulations contained in the above-quoted Treaties, and in others to a similar effect, is, that the goods of either Contracting State shall be placed in the territories of the other in no worse position than goods of any other country. It is certainly not meant that they should enjoy preferential treatment either to native goods—or to goods of the most favoured third country—and the question arises how far it is open to either Contracting Party, by Governmental administrative act, to secure for its goods the preferential position in the markets of the other which it was not designed by the Treaty that they should enjoy.

It has long been admitted internationally that natural circumstances, independent of Government agency or control, may be invoked in order to justify a prohibition of, or special treatment of, goods arriving under certain special conditions, although similar goods are admitted freely when such conditions are not present, notwithstanding the existence of Treaty stipulations guaranteeing most-favoured-nation treatment in these respects.

It is sufficient to cite as examples the restrictions imposed in Great Britain and in various other countries on the importation of cattle and plants suspected of disease, and the precautions frequently adopted to prevent the importation or circulation of rags and other substances supposed to be capable of transmitting infection.

It is true that express stipulations providing for a derogation from most-favoured-nation treatment in such cases are now frequently inserted in Commercial Treaties, but the precautions above alluded to are also taken in cases where most-favoured-nation clauses exist without any exception or qualification.

I desire, however, in the present instance, to direct your Lordship's attention more particularly to the case where a Government, by its own administrative act, overrides the spirit of the most-favoured-nation clause, and creates in favour of its own goods an inequality which it is the object of the Treaty to prevent, and which does not result from any natural or economic cause.

An instance in point is afforded by "The Foreign Prison-made Goods Act, 1897" [60 & 61 Vict., cap. 63], (Paper E). Although under this Act the importation of prison-made goods into the United Kingdom has been effectively stopped, notwithstanding the admission of similar goods not prison-made, no representation against the operation of the Act have been received by Her Majesty's Government from any foreign Power with whom most-favoured-nation clauses have existed or do now exist.

The Government of the United States have for some years past redressed by countervailing duties the inequality created by bounties on production or export, and you will find in Paper (F) a short statement of the arguments advanced by that Government to justify their action, to which I have to call your especial attention.

It will be within your recollection that the Law Officers of the Crown have on two previous occasions (see Opinions, Papers G and H) expressed opinions somewhat adverse to the action which has now been taken by the Indian Government, but I have also to inclose a legal opinion which has been given by Sir J. Edge, Q.C., and Sir A. Wilson (Paper I), to the effect that the Indian Act is not inconsistent with Treaty engagements.

I am of opinion that the great extension and development of the bounty system in recent years constitutes a grave menace to British industry and enterprise, and am disinclined to admit that it is open to any Government to override, by its own act, the clear intention of Treaty stipulations, without its being open to the other Contracting Party, by corresponding legislative action, if such should seem to be expedient, to redress the balance of trade which has been thus artificially disturbed.

I have therefore to invite your Lordship's attention to the papers now laid before you, and to inquire whether, having regard to the fact that representations on the subject of the Indian Act have been received from Austria-Hungary and from Russia, you would concur in a reply being made in the sense of the foregoing paragraph, accompanied by an intimation that, if either of these foreign countries be not willing to accept that view, Her Majesty's Government are prepared to give notice of termination of the Treaty.

I have further to request that you will also favour me with any general observations on the subject, if such should seem to you to be required.

I have, &c.

Opinion by the Lord Chancellor.

I entertain a very clear opinion that the imposition of countervailing duties, where the only objection to them arises from the operation of the most-favoured-nation clause, is no breach whatever of that clause in any of the Treaties.

I think it is comparatively immaterial to consider the exact language of any Treaty wherein the most-favoured-nation clause is either expressly or impliedly contained in such Treaty. I think the opinions of the Law Officers, with which I am unable to agree, have been founded on the mere language of the Treaties submitted to them without sufficiently considering the international understanding upon which those Treaties have been based.

But I think, also, without reference to this consideration, that if I were simply considering the instruments themselves, apart from the considerations to which I will advert presently, I should, nevertheless, be unable to concur with the views which those opinions support. Wherever either the substance or the words of the Treaty involve an agreement for equality of treatment, and the substance, of course, of all agreements which I have been describing involved that no undue favour shall be given to one nation in preference to another, and to no one part of the commerce of one nation in preference to that of another nation, there is, to my mind, no undue preference in making the circumstances under which such commerce is admitted equal in respect of treatment by the nation whose obligation is to treat all foreign commerce alike.

I think it would be true to say, even in an ordinary contract, that a wilful effort by one of the Contracting Parties to render more difficult, or, indeed, impossible the performance of his contractual obligation by the other party to the contract would both excuse the non-performance, and give a right to compensation to the party against whom such intentional obstruction was presented.

The mere difference of circumstances will justify differential treatment—a principle which is very familiar to the administration of the law, and has been repeatedly affirmed by Judges of great eminence in the Court of Common Pleas when they had judicially to decide whether a Railway Company was guilty of undue preference under the provisions of the Railways and Canal Traffic Act; and this observation, of course, becomes more conclusive when one is dealing, not with an unintended, and, in that sense, accidental difference of circumstance, but with acts deliberately intended to defeat the operation of the contract.

Now, it cannot be doubted that giving the bounty to a particular produce (say, sugar) will enable it to come into this country under very different circumstances from produce to which no bounty is given by the country of its export, and I think that upon the mere language of the contract such a preference could properly be defeated by countervailing duties.

But I think in respect of international relations a far wider question arises. One has to look not only at the language of the particular instrument. The relation of one country to another involves a consideration not only of the particular words of the Treaty, but the relation in which one country stands to the other in respect of that Treaty, and I think it would be true to say that there is an overriding understanding between all countries in respect of the most-favoured-nation clause, that nothing shall be done to interfere with the substance and effect of that clause, which is to provide for equality of treatment all round.

I think the bounties are themselves a breach of that understanding, and I entertain no doubt that countervailing duties may properly be imposed as a defence against that inequality of treatment which the bounties are intended to procure.

I am not able to rely upon the circumstance which is urged in one of the opinions submitted to me, that the bounty system did not exist when some of the Treaties were entered into. I see a note attached to that opinion that it is not the fact, but if it were the fact, I should say that it is immaterial, because, assuming them to be in existence at the time of the entering into the Treaty, in my view the bounty-giving nation was bound, if it observed good faith in carrying out the Treaty into which it entered, to cease doing that which necessarily created an undue preference on its side.

I entirely agree with the American view also that, as a mere measure of self-protection, the countervailing duties are defensible, for in no construction of the Treaty can it be supposed that this country agreed to place its produce at a disadvantage when contracting in terms for equal treatment to all.

Peace Conference.

Adaptation of principles of Geneva Convention to maritime warfare.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the Papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the proceedings of the Second Commission of the Peace Conference at The Hague, which has been considering the question of embodying in a Convention the Additional Articles to the Geneva Convention of 1864, framed in 1868 for the purpose of adapting the principles of the Geneva Convention to maritime warfare.

Sir J. Pauncefote, in his despatch No. 29 of the 17th ultimo (Paper B), transmitted the Articles as revised by the Commission, and after certain words had been added to the Xth Article, as reported in his Excellency's despatch No. 38 of the 23rd ultimo (Paper G), Lord Salisbury informed him, in his despatch No. 32 of the 29th ultimo (Paper I), that Her Majesty's Government agreed to the Articles, as revised, being embodied in a Convention.

At the meeting held by the Commission on the 20th ultimo (Sir J. Pauncefote, No. 38, 23rd June, Paper G), Captain Mahan, one of the Delegates of the United States proposed the addition of three further Articles relating to the status of combatants who, pending or after a naval engagement, may be saved from drowning by a neutral vessel.

Sir J. Pauncefote, in his despatch No. 50 of the 1st instant (Paper J), forwards a copy of a Report drawn up by Professor Renault on behalf of the Comité de Rédaction to which the Articles proposed by Captain Mahan were referred, and also a copy of a note on the second Additional Article proposed by Captain Mahan which has been furnished to his Excellency by Professor Renault at his request.

Sir J. Pauncefote considers that the propositions laid down by Professor Renault are hardly consistent with the rights secured to neutrals by international law, and he suggests that, even supposing that the Additional Articles proposed by Captain Mahan are acceptable to Her Majesty's Government, some declaration or reservation should be made on their behalf respecting the construction placed by Professor Renault on Article IX of the revised Articles, and touching any doctrines laid down in his Report to which Her Majesty's Government are not prepared to assent.

Sir J. Pauncefote's despatch has been communicated to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty for their observations, and a copy of their reply, dated the 7th instant, is inclosed (Paper K).

Their Lordships are of opinion that the British Delegates should be instructed not to accept the three Additional Articles proposed by Captain Mahan, and they consider that the interpretation placed by M. Renault on the revised Articles should not be accepted by Her Majesty's Government.

They concur with Sir J. Pauncefote as to the necessity of a declaration being made on behalf of Her Majesty's Government respecting the construction placed by M. Renault on Article IX, but they suggest that, before his Excellency is instructed to make such a declaration, it would be advisable to obtain your opinion on the revised Articles and on the Report presented by M. Renault.

I am accordingly to request that you will take the Papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury, at your early convenience, with your opinion on the revised Articles and on M. Renault's Report, and with any general observations which you may have to make on the matters dealt with in the inclosed correspondence.

Report.

In my opinion the British Delegates ought not to accept the three Articles which Captain Mahan proposes. They involve an admission that the neutral flag does not protect the passenger.

I further think that a declaration should be made on behalf of Her Majesty's Government that the interpretation placed by M. Renault on the revised Articles cannot be accepted.

This interpretation appears to me to be in no way supported by the terms of the Articles and to be contrary to international law.

I ought to point out that Article X, adopted by the Conference, is one which could not be carried out in this country except under powers conferred by an Act of Parliament. The acceptance of this Article might be supposed to involve an undertaking to take the steps necessary to give effect to it, and I do not think that Her Majesty's Government should enter into any such undertaking.

The alternative would be to refuse shelter to wounded belligerents, which in the interests of humanity, ought to be granted.

The other Articles do not seem to be open to any special objection.

As to signature of Convention for pacific settlement of International differences.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 22, 1899.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list relating to the proceedings of the Peace Conference which recently assembled at the Hague.

The results of the deliberations of the Conference are recorded in a document entitled the "Acte Final" (Paper A), which has been signed by the Representatives of all the Powers who sent Delegates to the Hague.

To this document are appended three Conventions and three Declarations which are submitted by the Conference for the signature of the Plenipotentiaries of the various Powers, and which will be kept open for such signature until the 31st December next.

The first of the Conventions annexed to the "Acte Final" is entitled "Convention pour le règlement pacifique des Conflits Internationaux" (Paper B), and is the only one of the documents submitted for signature which his Lordship thinks necessary to refer to you for consideration.

The nature and scope of this Convention are very clearly and fully explained in the Report made to the Conference by the Chevalier Descamps, one of the Delegates of Belgium, who presided over the Committee specially charged with the question of Arbitration (Paper C).

It will be observed that the Convention has been already signed by sixteen out of the twenty-six Powers represented at the Conference.

I am to request that you will take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether the Convention, as it now stands, may properly be signed on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, and also with any general observations you may have to offer on the subject.

Report.

In our opinion, the Convention, as it now stands, may properly be signed on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

The qualifications which it contains and the optional character of its provisions are, we think, sufficient to prevent danger from its adoption.

Articles XXX to LVII will require consideration when any proposal for a particular arbitration is accepted. It would be beyond the scope of this Report to discuss the details of those Articles, but the important incident which during the sitting of the British Guiana–Venezuela Boundary Arbitration Tribunal occurred in Paris on Wednesday, the 6th September, with reference to the desire expressed by some members of the Tribunal to see a confidential document, and the refusal of Great Britain to produce it, shows the kind of question which may arise under an Article worded as Article XLIV is now framed; and which might necessitate some modification of its terms in certain cases.

We should also have regarded Article XLVIII (which gives power to the Tribunal of Arbitration to determine the extent of the reference and of its powers) with some misgiving but for the fact that its operation may, under Articles XXX and XXXI, be limited or, if necessary, excluded.

Convention as to Laws and Customs of War.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list relating to the Convention concerning the laws and customs of war which has been framed by the Peace Conference at The Hague, and submitted for the signature of the various Governments.

This Convention (see Document B), has been already signed by some of the Powers represented at the Conference, and will be kept open for the signature of such other of those Powers as may desire to adhere to it until the 31st December next.

Lord Salisbury has consulted the Secretary of State for War on the question whether Her Majesty's Government may properly sign this Convention, and his opinion is contained in the letter from the War Office of the 11th instant (Document A).

I am to draw your special attention to the Report made to the Conference by M. Rolin, the Reporter of the Commission appointed by the Conference to consider this question, and also to a Memorandum on the subject by Major-General Sir John Ardagh, the British Military Delegate. Both these documents will be found as inclosures in Sir Julian Pauncefote's despatch No. 52 of the 6th July (Document C).

The text of the Geneva Convention of the 22nd August, 1864, referred to in M. Rolin's Report, will be found in the accompanying volume (Document D), Part B, pp. 2–6, and that of the proposals made at the Conference of Brussels in 1874 in the same volume, Part B, pp. 8–13.

I am to request that you will examine the various points submitted for consideration in the second inclosure to the letter from the War Office (Document A), and favour Lord Salisbury, at your earliest convenience, with your observations on those points so far as they raise any question of international or municipal law, and that you will generally advise his Lordship as to whether the Convention may properly be signed on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

The question of the Declarations recommended by the Peace Conference, and referred to in Inclosure 4 of the War Office letter, is reserved for further consideration.

Interpretation of "bay" in North Sea Fisheries Convention.

I HAVE the honour to inform you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, that the Danish Minister at this Court has represented to his Lordship the desirability of arriving at an understanding as to the precise interpretation to be placed upon the word "bay" in Article II of the North Sea Fisheries Convention by the officers charged by the British and Danish Governments with the execution of that Agreement.

With this object in view a Conference of Representatives of this Office, the Admiralty, the Board of Trade, and the Scottish Office was held to discuss the subject, and it was by them agreed that the term "bay" in the Article in question might, with advantage, be defined as including all indentations of the coast, irrespective of size.

Though the North Sea Fisheries Convention is appended as a Schedule to "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1883," the term "bay" as there employed is not further defined either in the Act or the Convention; nor has it, so far as Lord Salisbury is aware, been the subject of any judicial interpretation.

Under these circumstances, I am to request that you will furnish his Lordship with your opinion as to whether, for the purposes of "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1883," a "bay" may safely be taken to include all indentations of the coast irrespective of size, or, if not, what definition (if any) you would suggest as preferable.

His Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) MARTIN GOSSELIN.

Report.

In our opinion, it is not expedient to define a bay for the purposes of "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1883," as including all indentations of the coast irrespective of size. As no coast is quite straight, such a definition will occasion great inconvenience in practice.

We do not think it expedient that any attempt should be made further to define the term. Each case should be decided as it arises. It is quite clear that a bend in the coast, very shallow in proportion to its lateral extension, is not a bay, and no limit can be fixed by way of general definition. On the other hand, to define bay as including what are generally called gulfs might lead to difficulties of another sort, as territorial jurisdiction is, in many cases, claimed over gulfs, though more than 10 miles across if they extend far inland.

Consular Fees O.s in C. for China and Corea and for Japan.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to two proposed Orders in Council establishing new Tables of Consular Fees in China and Corea and in Japan, respectively.

An Interdepartmental Committee was appointed to consider the question of modifying these fees, and a copy of their Report is transmitted to you (Paper A), together with printed copies of the correspondence which the Committee had before them when deliberating upon the matter (Paper B). It will be seen that the Committee recommend the establishment of two separate Fee Tables—

1. For China and Corea,
2. For Japan,

drafts of which are inclosed (Papers C and D).

Orders in Council for the purpose of putting these Tables into force have been drafted by Mr. Gray (Papers E and F). They are in substitution for "The Consular Fees (China, Japan, and Corea) Order in Council, 1892" (Paper G).

I also inclose a copy of "The Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891" (54 & 55 Vict., cap. 36), under the authority of which it is proposed to issue these Orders (Paper H).

The draft Fee Tables have already been submitted to, and approved by, the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, and I am to request that you will take the draft Orders in Council into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether they are right and proper to be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

In connection with Article 4 of the China and Corea Order, and the notes appended to Fees 17 and 37 in the China and Corea Table, I am to explain that a special local Regulation applicable to the port of Swatow, made on the 9th May, 1864, and ultimately legalized by "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1881," contains provisions similar to, though not identical with, those to be introduced by these notes for all Chinese ports. It is necessary that the new Order in Council should repeal the local Regulation applicable to Swatow, of which a copy is annexed (Paper I), in order to prevent any clashing with the general provisions of the Fee Table.

As it is believed that Her Majesty the Queen may hold a Council before the end of the year, Lord Salisbury would be glad if these Orders could be submitted for approval on that occasion. I am therefore to request that your Report may be transmitted to his Lordship at your early convenience.

We approve the draft Orders as initialled by us.

As regards the dates fixed by Article 5 of the Chinea and Corea Order, and Article 3 of the Japan Order, it would, perhaps, be better to fix a later date, but this can, if necessary, be dealt with under the subsequent words of the Article.

Although the matter scarcely falls within our province, we should have doubted the advisability of imposing a fee on registration where such registration is compulsory. (See Fee 64, China and Corea Table, and Fee 65, Japan Table.)

Japan (Consular and Marriage Fees) Order in Council, 1899.

WHEREAS by "The Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891," Her Majesty the Queen is authorized by Order in Council to fix the fees to be taken in respect of any matter or thing done by a Consular officer in the execution of his office, and to vary such fees by way of increase or decrease, and to abolish fees and to create new fees;

And whereas by "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," and by "The Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1892," made in pursuance of that Act, it is provided that certain things may or shall be done on payment of the proper fee, and that Act further provides that the proper fee shall be such fee as may for the time being be fixed under the first recited Act, and that the fee so fixed as respects a Consul shall be the fee which shall be taken by any marriage officer;

And whereas under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," Her Majesty in Council has power to make Orders in Council, and also to revoke or vary Orders in Council made or deemed to have been made in pursuance of that Act;

And whereas it is expedient that the Table of Fees fixed by "The Consular Fees (China, Japan, and Corea) Order in Council, 1892," should in certain respects be amended, and that the whole of the fees to be taken by Consular officers and marriage officers in Japan should be stated in sterling currency and should be fixed by an Order in Council made under the provisions of "The Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891:"

Now, therefore, in pursuance of the before-mentioned Acts, it is hereby ordered by Her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as "The Japan (Consular and Marriage Fees) Order in Council, 1899."

2. The several fees set forth in the Tables annexed to this Order are hereby established, and the said Tables and notes thereto shall be construed as part of this Order.

3. This Order shall come into force on the 1st day of April, 1900, or at such later day as in the case of any particular Consular jurisdiction or part thereof, one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, by any general or particular instructions, may from time to time direct.

4. On and after the day on which this Order comes into operation in any place in Japan, "The Consular Fees (China, Japan, and Corea) Order in Council, 1892," shall be repealed as to that place, but this repeal shall not affect any right or liability existing at the time when this Order so comes into operation.

5. In this Order the expression "Consular jurisdiction" means and includes the district, place, or places for which a Consular officer acts.

6. This Order shall extend to all places in Japan.

And the Marquess of Salisbury, K.G., one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein accordingly.

China and Corea.

"The China and Corea (Consular and Marriage Fees) Order in Council, 1899."

WHEREAS by "The Consular Salaries and Fees Act," 1891, Her Majesty the Queen is authorized by Order in Council to fix the fees to be taken in respect of any matter or thing done by a Consular officer in the execution of his office, and to vary such fees by way of increase or decrease, and to abolish fees, and to create new fees.

And whereas by "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," and by "The Foreign Marriages Order in Council," 1892, made in pursuance of that Act, it is provided that certain things may or shall be done on payment of the proper fee, and that Act further provides that the proper fee shall be such fee as may for the time being be fixed under the first recited Act, and that the fee so fixed as respects a Consul shall be the fee which shall be taken by any marriage officer:

And whereas under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," Her Majesty in Council has power to make Orders in Council, and also to revoke or vary orders in Council made or deemed to have been made in pursuance of that Act:

And whereas it is expedient that the Table of Fees fixed by "The Consular Fees (China, Japan, and Corea) Order in Council, 1892," should in certain respects be amended, and that the whole of the fees to be taken by Consular officers and marriage officers in China and Corea should be fixed by an Order in Council made under the provisions of "The Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891."

Now, therefore, in pursuance of the before-mentioned Acts, it is hereby ordered by Her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as "The China and Corea (Consular and Marriage Fees) Order in Council, 1899."

2. The several fees set forth in the Tables annexed to this Order are hereby established, and the said Tables and notes thereto shall be construed as part of this Order.

3. Such provisions of any Order in Council made or continued in force under the provisions of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," and relating to China or Corea, as are inconsistent with anything in this Order, are hereby revoked; and the provisions of this Order and of the said Tables shall be and are hereby substituted for such last-mentioned provisions and shall be taken accordingly.

4. The Regulations for steamers engaged in the coasting trade between Foochow and Hong Kong and intermediate ports, made on the 9th May, 1864, are hereby repealed.

5. This Order shall come into force on the [?] 1st day of April, 1900, or at such later day as in the case of any particular Consular jurisdiction or part thereof, one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, by any general or particular instructions, may from time to time direct.

6. On or after the day on which this Order comes into operation in any place in China or Corea "The Consular Fees (China, Japan, and Corea) Order in Council, 1892," shall be repealed as to that place, but this repeal shall not affect any right or liability existing at the time when this Order so comes into operation.

7. In this Order the expression "Consular jurisdiction" means and includes the district, place, or places for which a Consular officer acts.

8. This Order shall extend to all places in China and Corea.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 18, 1899.

Somali and Brunei (Repeal) Order in Council.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to state that the draft Order in Council for the Somaliland Protectorate, which formed the subject of your Report of the 18th September last, received the approval of the Queen in Council on the 7th October.

Lord Salisbury's attention has, however, been drawn to the fact that the Somaliland Order in Council of 1889, which, owing to certain practical difficulties, was never brought into force, has not been expressly repealed by the recently passed Order of 1899. Copies of both Orders are inclosed herewith.*

Although it is unquestionable that the Order of 1889 has no operation, the necessary directions for putting it into force never having been given by the Secretary of State, it appears possible that misunderstanding and inconvenience may arise if it be maintained on the list of effective Orders in Council.

Lord Salisbury understands that the removal of the Order in question from that list can only be effected by repeal, and I am accordingly to transmit the accompanying draft of an Order in Council which has been framed to meet the case.

It has been thought advisable to take advantage of the opportunity afforded by the repeal of the Somali Order in Council to repeal at the same time "The Brunei Order in Council, 1890." This Order was passed under a misapprehension as to the numbers of British subjects affected by it, but it has never been brought into force by the means provided in Articles 116 (3) and 117.

Sir Charles Mitchell, the Governor of the Straits Settlements, when he visited Brunei in 1896 in his capacity of High Commissioner and Consul-General for the Sultan's territory, was empowered to exercise his discretion in bringing the Order into operation. He, however, reported that he had decided, after a very full consideration, not to complete the technical steps necessary to make it of force. and that he did not recommend that he should be directed to take such steps. Sir Charles stated, as his reasons for arriving at this decision, that the British subjects resident in Brunei were not of British birth; that the machinery necessary for bringing an appeal was altogether too cumbrous; and that the simpler system—which still obtains—of asking the intervention and assistance of Her Majesty's Consul was all that was really necessary.

It was at that time suggested by the Colonial Office that an Order in Council should be passed suspending the Order of 1890 until the Secretary of State should instruct the Consul to exhibit it in his office at Brunei, but as the latter Order had never come into force, Lord Salisbury considered that the better course would be to repeal the Order on the first favourable opportunity which occurred for this being done, without thereby drawing attention to the delay which had occurred in bringing it into force.

The draft Order for the repeal of the Somaliland Order in Council of 1889 has accordingly been drawn so as to include in its provisions the repeal of the Brunei Order in Council of 1890.

I am to inclose, for convenience of reference, a copy of "The Brunei Order in Council, 1890,"† together with a copy of the paragraph in Sir C. Mitchell's Report, which deals with the question.‡

I am to request that you will take the draft "Somali and Brunei (Repeal) Order in Council, 1899," into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether it can properly be submitted to Her Majesty in Council in its present form, and, if not, that you will indicate such amendments or modifications as you may consider necessary or desirable.

I have, &c.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 13, 1899.

L.O.R. 1897 (Conf. 7058), p. 70.

WITH reference to the report on the then condition of the case of the steamship "Utopia," with which you favoured the Marquess of Salisbury on the 30th November, 1897, I have now the honour, by his Lordship's direction, to transmit to you the correspondence noted in the accompanying list, dealing with the further stages through which the proceedings instituted in the Neapolitan Courts against Messrs. Henderson Bros., as managing owners of the "Utopia" have subsequently passed.

In accordance with your advice, Messrs. Henderson were at the time informed that before Her Majesty's Government could consider the propriety of making diplomatic representations on their behalf to the Italian Government, the appeal to the Court of Cassation must be proceeded with, unless a distinct opinion could be obtained from Italian lawyers of eminence that an appeal to that Court would be useless (letters to Messrs. Henderson of the 10th December, 1897, and the 2nd February, 1898, marked respectively AB and AF).

Messrs. Henderson, whilst unable to produce an opinion to this effect, nevertheless continued strongly to urge that unless pressure were brought to bear upon the Italian Government at that stage, the appeal to the Court of Cassation would prove entirely fruitless. In consideration of the admitted difficulty of the position in which the British firm found itself placed, and the gravity, from the point of view of British shipping interests generally, of the issues involved, Lord Salisbury, whilst expressing his inability to depart from the decision arrived at, authorized Her Majesty's Ambassador at Rome once more to approach the Italian Government unofficially with reference to the case, should such a step appear to His Excellency likely to serve a useful purpose (instruction to Sir Clare Ford, No. 5, Consular, the 5th March, 1898. Paper marked AK).

The Ambassador thereupon took an opportunity of speaking to the Secretary-General of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, who, however, only repeated the intimation made on a previous similar occasion, that his Government could not in any way interfere in a case which was the subject of a law suit pending before the Tribunals of the country, and respecting which the parties dissatisfied with the decisions already pronounced, were free to appeal to a higher Court.

The conversation which took place on this occasion will be found reported in the despatch from the late Sir C. Ford, No. 6, Consular, of the 18th March, 1898. (Paper marked AM.)

Messrs. Henderson on learning the result of the Ambassador's action, now finally arranged to proceed with the appeal, and, in accordance with a suggestion made by them, Lord Salisbury instructed the Ambassador to retain the services of an Italian advocate, of standing and distinction, to watch the proceedings before the Court of Cassation on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, with the view to his making a Report thereon to His Excellency. The gentleman eventually selected for this purpose was Professor Enrico Pessina, Senator and President of the Society of Advocates at Naples. The instruction given to Signor Pessina was to attend the hearing of the case, and, on its termination, to furnish a Report, giving his expert opinion as to whether the proceedings and ultimate judgment of the Court were in accordance with the practice and principles of the law of Italy governing the matter, and, if not, in what respects either the procedure followed or the decision given, might be impeached as unsound. (Telegram to Sir P. Currie, the 16th December, 1898. Paper marked AW.)

After repeated delays the case came on for hearing on the 28th January last. The judgment pronounced the same day, but not published until the 27th February, confirmed, on all the principal points, the previous judgments of the lower Courts. The text of the final judgment, and an English translation of it will be found, as Inclosures 1 and 2, in the despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Rome, No. 8 Consular, of the 31st March last (Papers marked BB, BB1, and BB2), which, itself, gives a clear and succinct statement of the various phases through which the case has successively passed in the Neapolitan Tribunals.

The Ambassador forwarded at the same time an English translation of Signor Pessina's Report (Paper BB 3), as well as a copy of a Memorandum drawn up by Mr. Embleton, representing Messrs. Henderson, in which he comments upon the final judgment (Paper BB 4).

All these documents Lord Salisbury decided, in the first instance, to submit to Messrs. Henderson, who had already laid before his Lordship a statement dealing with the several issues involved for their further observations. That firm have now communicated a further series of comments by their solicitor regarding Signor Pessina's Report (letters from Messrs. Henderson of the 23rd March and 2nd May, 1899, marked AZ and BE respectively). Having exhausted all the legal remedies open to them, Messrs. Henderson conclude by appealing to Her Majesty's Government to obtain redress for the gross injustice which they allege has been inflicted upon them as a result of the proceedings in the Neapolitan Courts.

Lord Salisbury will be glad if you will take the papers now submitted into your consideration, and will favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government are now in a position to make a formal protest to the Italian Government, and, if so, on what special grounds such formal protest or remonstrance may most properly and advantageously be based, and what particular form of redress might be suggested as best meeting the justice of the case. His Lordship will be glad at the same time to be favoured with any observations or suggestions of a more general nature which you may have to offer with regard to the present position of the case.

A copy of your previous Report of the 30th November, 1897, accompanied by the correspondence then before you, is re-transmitted herewith, for convenience of reference, and with this same view the papers to which specific allusion is made in my present letter, have been arranged in a separate bundle and distinguished by a blue pencil mark.*

Report.

In our opinion, Her Majesty's Government is now in a position to make a formal protest to the Italian Government on behalf of Messrs. Henderson.

We do not indeed think that the competency of the Italian Courts to entertain the action could be successfully disputed.

It further appears to us that there was a clear case of negligence on the part of the captain of the "Utopia" leading to the disaster, and that although the procedure of the Italian Courts in refusing to allow evidence on this point to be adduced was, according to our ideas of procedure, irregular, no substantial point can be made on this head on behalf of Messrs. Henderson.

But it appears to us that grave injustice has been done to Messrs. Henderson by holding them subject to liability without limit.

In the first place we think that the contract ought to have been treated as being governed by the law of the flag, that is, English law, and, therefore, subject to the limit of liability which that law prescribes. The general rule is clear that, in the absence of provisions in the contract to the contrary, the law of the flag governs the liability of the shipowner with reference to the contract for the use of his ship, either for passengers or for goods. In the present case it does not appear that there was anything in the terms of the contract to exclude this general rule.

But, further, even if it could be maintained that the Italian Courts were justified in applying Italian law on the question of the liability of Messrs. Henderson, we think it quite clear there has been a miscarriage of justice.

It was sought to exclude the right of Messrs. Henderson to limitation of liability to the amount of the value of the ship and freight on the ground that they had been guilty of personal default. Personal default was charged in two respects:—

1. An insufficient supply of coal.
2. Deficiency of life-saving apparatus on board the "Utopia."

Both these grounds appear to us quite idle.

As a matter of fact, there were 22 tons of coal on board the "Utopia," and the statement of the captain that he had only 5 or 6 was unfounded, but even if he had been short of coal, this would not be personal default on the part of Messrs. Henderson immediately connected with the disaster. There is nothing to show that the shortage of coal, if it existed, was due to any fault of theirs; on the contrary, the captain could have supplied himself at Naples, and even if it existed, it was not the cause of the disaster. It might have led to the captain trying to enter the port at night, but this was not the cause of the disaster; the cause was the negligence of the captain in the way in which he entered.

As to deficiency of life-saving apparatus it is manifest it had nothing whatever to do with the disaster. The circumstances were such that it would not have saved life had it been there.

It was further contended that the liability of Messrs. Henderson was unlimited because they were under personal liability within the meaning of Article 491 of the Italian Code, by reason of the contract to carry. We entirely concur in the strictures passed upon the decisions of the Italian Courts on this point in the Report of Professors Pessina and Fiore, and have nothing to add to their observations. It appears to us to be perfectly clear that the mere fact that the shipowner has entered into a contract with regard to the use of the ship does not exclude his right to limitation of liability under that Article. The personal liability which excludes his right within the meaning of that Article is confined to cases where he has himself been guilty of some act or default which makes him liable. We are at a loss to conceive on what grounds any Court could take the view which was taken in the Italian Courts against Messrs. Henderson upon this point as the reasoning of Professors Pessina and Fiore seems to us to be incontrovertible.

Upon the whole it appears to us that injustice of a very grave kind has been done to Messrs. Henderson by the judgment of the Italian Courts, and that Her Majesty's Government may properly present a remonstrance to the Italian Government.

We need hardly point out that, apart from the injustice to Messrs. Henderson in the particular case, the action of the Italian Courts in this instance is calculated most seriously to prejudice the interests of British ship-owners whose vessels touch at Italian ports.

"Utopia": Draft Protest to Italian Government against Judgment of Court of Cassation.

Gentlemen,

WITH reference to your letter of the 26th ultimo, relative to the case of the steam-ship "Utopia," I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith the draft of a despatch which his Lordship proposes to address to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Rome, instructing him to make a protest to the Italian Government in respect to the grave injustice which will be inflicted on the owners of the vessel by the execution of the Judgment delivered by the Neapolitan Court of Cassation on the 28th January last.

Lord Salisbury would be glad to be informed, at your early convenience, whether you concur in the terms of the proposed instruction, or whether you consider that it may be advantageously modified or amended in any, and, if so, in what, respects.

For convenience of reference, the papers enumerated in the accompanying list, which were before you when you advised his Lordship in this case, are retransmitted herewith, together with your letter of the 26th ultimo.

Draft of Despatch from the Marquess of Salisbury to Sir G. Bonham.

(No. .)

Foreign Office, July 1899.

Sir,

I HAVE conferred with the Law Officers of the Crown with regard to the final decision given in the case of the British steam-ship "Utopia" by the Court of Cassation in Naples, which formed the subject of Lord Currie's despatch No. 8, Consular, of the 31st March last.

~~You are aware of the deep interest taken by British ship-owners generally in the important issues involved in this case, and of the solicitude with which Her Majesty's Government have watched the proceedings before the Neapolitan Courts.~~ You are aware that the importance of that decision is not confined to the particular case of the "Utopia." It affects the interests of all British ship-owners trading from Italian ports, and Her Majesty's Government have therefore watched the proceedings with great solicitude, not only in the interests of Messrs. Henderson, but also in those of the shipping trade in general. It seems unnecessary here to set out in detail the circumstances out of which the litigation has arisen, but it will be convenient briefly to recapitulate the principal features of the case:—

The steam-ship "Utopia," of Glasgow, owned by Henderson Brothers, of that city, sailed from Naples on the 12th March, 1891, bound for New York, with 815 Italian emigrants on board. Before she left Naples, the Italian port authorities issued a certificate to the effect that the vessel was fully provided and furnished according to law, with everything necessary for undertaking the voyage. At the same time, a security amounting to 97,000 lire was, in accordance with Italian law, given by Messrs. Holme and Co., the owners' agents at Naples, as guarantee for the due fulfilment of the obligations incurred towards the passengers. The "Utopia" reached the Bay of Gibraltar on the night of the 17th March, 1891, ~~but~~ and, in endeavouring to ~~enter~~ reach the ~~port, for the purpose of coaling, she foundered, after~~ anchorage behind the New Mole in the port of Gibraltar, came into collision with Her Majesty's ship "Anson" and sank. Part of the crew and 564 of the Italian emigrants lost their lives.

On the following day, the master of the "Utopia" made a declaration, technically called a "protest," before a notary public at Gibraltar, in which he ascribed the disaster to the accident of the collision and to the strong gale and heavy sea prevailing at the time. A Coroner's inquest was, on the same day, opened on the ship-wrecked bodies, and a verdict of "accidental death" was returned. A few days later, a Marine Court of Inquiry was assembled, to hold an investigation into the circumstances of the disaster. In the course of the evidence taken, the master of the "Utopia" stated that, in ~~steering the course which brought him into collision with the "Anson,"~~ endeavouring to enter the port, instead of lying outside till morning, he had been largely influenced by the shortness of his coal supply, the actual amount on board at the time of the collision being estimated by the third engineer at about 6 tons.

The Marine Court unanimously decided that the master of the "Utopia" had "committed a grave error in judgment:—

"1. In attempting to enter the anchorage behind the New Mole without having first opened out and ascertained what vessels were there;

"2. In attempting to turn his ship out across the bows of Her Majesty's ship "Anson.""

The charge involved in this finding, namely, that of a grave error in judgment, was in due course inquired into at an adjourned meeting of the Marine Court, who thereupon declared unanimously "that the decision already recorded sufficiently marks the finding of the Court, and that it is not deemed by the Court necessary to deal in any way with the master's certificate."

There was no evidence given at the inquiry, nor could there have been that the course steered by the master in endeavouring to reach the anchorage was in any way affected by the alleged deficiency of coal.

The "Utopia" was eventually raised by order of the Gibraltar authorities, when it was found that there were fully 22 tons of coal in her hold. The vessel was taken to the Clyde, where she still remains.

Within a few months of the disaster a Syndicate of Neapolitan lawyers, in the name of the relatives of the persons who had been drowned, instituted proceedings against Messrs. Henderson, as owners of the "Utopia," and against Messrs. Holme and Co., as their agents, in order to obtain compensation for the loss of life, and an indemnity in respect of the breach of the contract of transport.

It was held by the Court of First Instance at Naples, before which the case was tried, that the Italian Courts had no jurisdiction over a British ship lost in British waters, but this decision was reversed on appeal, on the ground that the Italian Courts were undoubtedly competent to deal with all questions arising in connection with the non-fulfilment of the contracts entered into at Naples with the Italian passengers by the agents of Messrs. Henderson. The case was consequently sent back for trial before the Court of First Instance at Naples, who delivered their Judgment on the 27th February, 1896.

This Judgment was adverse to the defendants on all the main issues. It was in turn confirmed by the Neapolitan Court of Appeal on the 18th June, 1897, and, on further appeal, finally upheld, save on one point, which was not, however, considered of sufficient importance to invalidate the decision, by the Judgment delivered by the Court of Cassation on the 28th January of this year, and published on the 27th February last. The principal points of importance in the final decision are ~~these~~ as follows:—

The claims of the plaintiffs are declared to be purely such as arise out of the non-fulfilment of the contract entered into by the owners of the "Utopia" with the Italian emigrants. It was accordingly for the defendants to show, if they could, that the disaster was of the nature of an accident, in respect to which no responsibility rested with them. The plea to this effect put forward by Messrs. Henderson is rejected by the Italian Courts on the following grounds:

That the responsibility of the master of the vessel for the disaster must be considered as clearly established by his own statement, made when giving evidence before the Marine Court at Gibraltar, that he was obliged ~~to shorten his course~~ to endeavour to enter the port owing to lack of coal, whereby he was prevented from opening out the vessels at anchor behind the New Mole before entering the port of Gibraltar. That the neglect of this precaution was by the same Marine Court found to have constituted a grave error in judgment. That the fatal manœuvre ordered by the master was, therefore, caused, not by any accidental circumstance beyond his control, but by his consciousness of the lack of coal; that the deficiency of coal ~~really existed~~ was ~~declared to be equally~~ proved by the master's own—and at the time uncontradicted—admission before the Marine Court. That it was therefore ~~considered~~ unnecessary, and entirely useless, to hear or take cognizance of the evidence which Messrs. Henderson repeatedly asked to be allowed to offer in order to prove that the disaster was not caused by any negligence on the part of the master; ~~that the decision of, and the evidence given before, the Marine Court at Gibraltar would not in any proceedings before an English Court be admitted as constituting proof of such negligence~~; and that, so far from there being a deficiency of coal, 22 tons of coal were found in the hold of the vessel when she was subsequently raised.

The shortage of coal and the responsibility of the master of the "Utopia" for the accident being thus considered as clearly established, it ~~is~~ was further declared that his employers, that is to say the owners of the vessel, ~~are,~~ were, on their part, responsible for the non-fulfilment of the contracts with the passengers who lost their lives.

Messrs. Henderson had further pleaded, ~~subsidiarily,~~ that even if they could be held thus responsible, at least their liability should be limited to the value of the ship and freight (which they were ready to abandon) in accordance with the provisions of Article 491 of the Italian Commercial Code. With reference to this plea, the Court of Cassation, confirming the decision of the lower Courts, declare~~s~~d that the limitation of liability ~~can~~ could not be accorded to Messrs. Henderson because they contracted a "personal" obligation towards the passengers, principally in entering, through their agents at Naples, into the contracts to carry the passengers to their destination, and secondarily in not supplying their ship with the necessary amount of coal.

As a result of the several judgments of the Italian Courts, Messrs Henderson, besides having to bear not only their own costs, but also almost the whole of the costs incurred by the plaintiffs in the prolonged proceedings, now stand condemned "to make good all the damages resulting from the wreck, including passage money and effects lost by those who were wrecked," the precise amount of the damages to be assessed by an Arbitrator appointed by the Neapolitan Court of First Instance, or should his decision not be acceptable to the parties, by that Court itself.

This final sentence appears to Her Majesty's Government to involve a great injustice to the owners of the "Utopia," and to be calculated most seriously to prejudice the interests of all British ship-owners whose vessels touch at Italian ports.

Her Majesty's Government do not wish to dispute the competency of the Italian Courts to entertain the action. Nor do they contest the fact that there was a ~~clear~~ case of negligence on the part of the master of the "Utopia," leading to the disaster; and although the procedure of the Italian Courts in refusing to allow evidence on this point to be adduced was, according to the views of procedure prevailing in English Courts, undoubtedly irregular, Her Majesty's Government do not desire to press this point unduly.

But it appears to Her Majesty's Government that grave injustice has been done to Messrs. Henderson by holding them subject to liability without limit:

1. In the first place in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government the contract between the owners of the "Utopia" and the passengers ought to have been treated as being governed by the law of the flag, that is, English law, and therefore subject to the limit of liability which that law prescribes. The general rule is clear that in the absence of provisions in the contract to the contrary, the law of the flag governs the liability of the ship-owner with reference to the contract for the use of his ship, either for passengers or for goods. In the present case it does not appear that there was anything in the terms of the contract to exclude the application of this general rule. This point is of the greatest general importance and is one which Her Majesty's Government must most strongly press. It was English and not Italian law which governed the contract of carriage, and it is quite clear that by English law the liability of the ship-owners was not unlimited.

2. But further, if it could be maintained that the Italian Courts were justified in applying Italian law on the question of the liability of Messrs. Henderson, it appears to be abundantly clear that there has been a miscarriage of justice. It was sought to exclude the right of Messrs. Henderson to limitation of liability to the amount of the value of the ship and freight on the grounds that they had been guilty of personal default, and that they were under personal liability within the meaning of Article 491 of the Italian Code, by reason of the contract to carry.

As regards the first of these grounds, personal default was originally charged in two respects: first, an insufficient supply of coal; secondly, deficiency of life-saving apparatus on board the "Utopia." On this second point, however, the Court of Cassation did not uphold the decision of the lower Courts, but declared that for the purposes of the action it was clearly sufficient for the owners of the ship to have complied, as they did comply, in regard to the carriage of life-saving apparatus, with the requirements of Italian law.

There remains, therefore, the alleged insufficiency of the coal supply, as a ground for personal default. But this ground is surely quite idle, and beside the point. As a matter of fact, there were 22 tons of coal on board the "Utopia," as could have been readily proved if the Italian Courts had not refused to allow proof to be adduced; and the statement made ~~by the third engineer of the vessel~~ before the Marine Court at Gibraltar that there were only about 6 tons of coal on board was, in truth, unfounded and contrary to fact. But even had there been a deficiency of coal, this would not constitute, on the part of the owners, personal default ~~immediately connected with the disaster~~. There is nothing to show that the shortage of coal, if it existed, was due to any fault of theirs. On the contrary, the captain could have supplied himself at Naples. And, lastly, if the shortage existed, it was not the cause of the disaster. It might have led to the master trying to enter the port at night; but this again was not the cause of the disaster—the cause was the negligence of the master in the way in which he entered.

With regard to the contention that the liability of Messrs. Henderson was unlimited, because they were under "personal" liability by reason of the contract to carry, Her Majesty's Government are at a loss to conceive on ~~that~~ what grounds any Court could take upon this point the view which was taken in the Italian Courts. Article 491 of the Italian Commercial Code provides as follows:—

"Ship-owners are responsible for the acts of the master and other members of the crew, and are answerable for all liabilities contracted by the master in so far as the ship and the voyage are concerned.

"All owners and part owners, however, who shall not have contracted personal liabilities, may in every case, by the abandonment of the ship- and freight-money paid or still due, free themselves from the responsibilities and liabilities aforesaid, save as regards salaries and wages for officers and crew."

The all-important question arising out of the provisions of this Article in connection with the present case is: What constitutes the contracting of a "personal" liability on the part of the owners of a vessel? It appears to Her Majesty's Government perfectly clear, and they are so advised by eminent experts in Italian law, that the mere fact of having entered into a contract with regard to the use of his ship, does not exclude the ship-owner's right to limitation of liability under the Article above quoted.

As a general principle, it may be admitted that the non-fulfilment of a contract would properly give rise to a claim for damages. But whether such claim must be recognized in a particular case, and to what extent, depends upon the causes of the failure to carry out the contract. The failure may be due to the direct acts or intervention of the ship-owner, who would in that case be rightly held to have contracted personal liability in respect to all consequences flowing from such acts or intervention, and would on this ground be denied the right to limit his responsibility to the abandonment of the ship and freight-money. If, on the other hand, the failure to execute the contract be due to circumstances over which the ship-owner has no control, and which cannot therefore be laid to his personal charge, he cannot be ~~held answerable under Article 1226 of the Italian Civil Code, which provides that "the debtor shall be under no obligation to make amends for damages, whenever, by circumstances beyond his control or accident unforeseen, he shall have been prevented from giving or doing that which he had undertaken."~~ denied the right to limitation of liability under Article 491.

Yet, again, if the failure arises out of acts done or liabilities incurred by the master of the vessel on his own initiative and in respect to a matter in which he alone has, by law, authority to decide and act—such as the navigation of his ship—then, indeed, under the provisions of the first paragraph of Article 491 of the Commercial Code already quoted, the ship-owner is to be held responsible for the master's acts, but his responsibility is, under the second paragraph of the same Article, limited to the value of the ship and freight.

It is not denied that by the issue of passage tickets a ship-owner incurs the obligation to convey the passenger to the stipulated destination. He does so, however, under the conditions laid down by law. One of these conditions is clearly defined in Article 107 of the Italian Code, which provides that—

"The command of a ship, as regards its management and navigation, belongs exclusively to the master. Any special arrangement tending to elude the provisions of this Article is forbidden."

The ship-owner cannot consequently avoid intrusting the master with the management and navigation of the ship. And if, owing to an accident to the vessel, there arises a failure to carry out the contract made with the passengers, the question whether or not the owners should be held "personally" responsible therefor must obviously be answered according as the accident was due to a cause which the owners had power to prevent, or one which was beyond their control. But, according to the decisions of the Italian Courts, in this case the owners of a vessel are held to have incurred "personal" and unlimited liability by reason merely of the contract involved in the issue of passage tickets by their agents. If such a decision were good in law, then it would seem clearly impossible for ship-owners, under any circumstances whatever, to escape unlimited liability, since the carriage not only of passengers but of every kind of cargo is invariably undertaken in virtue of some species of contract stipulating for the conveyance of such passengers or cargo to a certain destination. The provisions of the second part of Article 491 of the Commercial Code would therefore be entirely meaningless and nugatory.

To put the matter in a more concrete form: ~~If a ship-owner had contracted to carry a number of passengers to a certain port, and had made use, for this purpose, of a vessel which was not seaworthy, then he would rightly be held personally liable for any accident directly caused by the unseaworthiness of the vessel, inasmuch as he would undoubtedly be personally answerable for the quality of the ship employed for carrying out the contract made with the passengers.~~

If, ~~on the other hand,~~ a ship, fit in every respect to take the sea, and properly manned and equipped according to law, be wrecked in direct consequence of an error in judgment committed by the master in manœuvring or navigating his ship, it cannot be pretended that the consequent failure to carry out the contract made with the passengers embarked on the vessel, constitutes "personal" default on the part of the owner, for which he must be held answerable without limit of liability. The owner cannot be "personally" responsible for the mistaken order given by the master relative to the navigation of his ship, for the law expressly forbids any attempt on his part to relieve the master from any responsibility under this head. Such a mistaken order accordingly constitutes, in respect to the owner, a circumstance physically and legally altogether beyond his control, and a failure of contract caused entirely by such a circumstance is clearly not one in regard to which the owner can be held to have incurred "personal" liability.

In the result, therefore, it appears to Her Majesty's Government that injustice of a very grave kind has been done to Messrs. Henderson by the judgments of the Italian Courts, and that the case is one in which it is their duty to present a strong protest to the Italian Government. It is, of course, not for me to suggest in what particular manner the Italian Government should afford the redress to Messrs. Henderson which Her Majesty's Government consider to be due to them. But I request you, in making a representation to the Minister for Foreign Affairs in the sense of this despatch, to express on behalf and in the name of Her Majesty's Government the earnest hope that the Italian Government will take such steps as they may consider best calculated to insure that the owners of the "Utopia" are indemnified for any losses which would be unjustly imposed upon them in the event of the decision of the Court of Cassation being enforced against them.

Her Majesty's Government also claim that the attention of the Italian Government should be drawn to the very serious effects which any such decisions in the future would have upon trade by English vessels with Italian ports, and to the necessity of steps being taken to prevent any recurrence of such injustice in other cases.

You are authorized to read this despatch to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and to leave a copy of it with his Excellency should he desire it.

I am, &c.

No. 36.

[January 23, 1899.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, January 6, 1899.

Gentlemen,

Status of British Colonial subjects in Japan under Treaty of 1894.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the question of the status of colonial subjects of Her Majesty residing in, or trading with, Japan as affected by the Treaty between this country and Japan of the 16th July, 1894, which will come into force on the 17th July, 1899.

By that Treaty (Paper A) the right of extra-territorial jurisdiction now possessed by the Queen over Her Majesty's subjects in Japan is surrendered, while, on the other hand, such subjects acquire full liberty to travel, reside, or trade in any part of the Japanese dominions, instead of being restricted in these matters, as hitherto, to the Treaty ports.

Moreover, in accordance with the Tariff annexed to the Treaty, British goods, as regards the articles enumerated therein, are admitted into Japan at a lower rate of duty than that provided by the Japanese General Tariff.

Other privileges and advantages are secured to British subjects under the new Treaty, into which, however, for the purposes of this reference, it seems unnecessary to enter more fully.

Article XIX provides that the stipulations of the Treaty shall be applicable, so far as the laws permit, to all the Colonies and foreign possessions of Her Majesty, except—

India,
The Dominion of Canada,
Newfoundland,
The Cape of Good Hope,
Natal, and the Colonies of Australasia.

It was further provided that the stipulations of the Treaty should apply to any of the above-named Colonies on whose behalf notice to that effect should have been given within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications.

Of the above-named Colonies and possessions Natal and Queensland are the only ones on whose behalf the prescribed notice has been given, although quite recently the Government of India have expressed the desire that India should be included in the Treaty if this is still possible, the time allowed for a decision having expired, and this question is now before the Japanese Government.

All the other Colonies named declined to take advantage of the provision in the Treaty above referred to, and in a letter dated the 18th June, 1897 (Paper B), the Colonial Office inquired what would be the position in Japan of British subjects "domiciled" in Colonies which have refused to be included in the Treaty, and of the trade and commerce of such Colonies with Japan when the Treaty comes into operation.

The question put by the Colonial Office has reference specifically to the position of British subjects "domiciled" in non-adhering Colonies. It appears, however, to be a matter worthy of consideration whether, if any discrimination adverse to British subjects in non-adhering Colonies can properly, under the terms of the Treaty, be applied by the Japanese Government, the test of its application is not afforded by residence, rather than domicil, in such a Colony on the part of the British subjects affected.

If the ability or disability of a British subject to enjoy the full benefits of the Treaty is dependent on whether he be not, or be, domiciled at the moment in a non-adhering Colony, then such British subject so domiciled will continue to be prejudicially affected, although he may be resident in an adhering Colony or in the United Kingdom; and conversely a British subject domiciled in the United Kingdom or in an adhering Colony will not be adversely affected, although he be for the time resident in, and carrying on business from, a non-adhering Colony.

On the other hand, the test afforded by residence, though more easy of determination, and possibly in itself more logical than that supplied by "domicil," might probably turn out in practice to be somewhat difficult of application, and inequitable in its operation.

Some of the objections to such a test are forcibly set forth in the accompanying Memorandum by Mr. Farnall, of this Department; and the alternative suggestion made therein, to the effect that the proper course for Japan to follow, and for Great Britain to allow, would be to exclude from the operation of the Treaty all such persons as would be excluded if the non-acceding Colonies concerned were not portions of Her Majesty's dominions but of foreign States not parties to the Treaty, seems worthy of consideration.

In the reply of this Department, dated the 2nd July, 1897 (Paper C), it was stated that Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô, who was then at home on leave of absence, observed that he had thought it unadvisable, by putting a question on the first point to the Japanese Government, to suggest that the position of British colonial subjects would be different from that of other British subjects.

That the Civil Code of Japan, as at present worded, provided that foreigners would have all the civil rights enjoyed by Japanese subjects, except such as are expressly denied to them by legislation, as, for instance, the right to hold land in fee simple, and that of owning and publishing newspapers.

That the position of the trade and commerce of the Colonies not acceding to the Treaty would, no doubt, be affected, as they would be governed by the Japanese General Tariff instead of by the Conventional Tariff under the Treaty with Great Britain.

Subsequently a correspondence took place between this Department, the India Office, and Messrs. Freshfields and Williams (Papers D, E, F, G, H) as to whether Mr. Tata, a Parsee merchant of Bombay, is, or is not, entitled to all the advantages which an Englishman would have as regards residing and trading in Japan; in consequence of which a reference was made to Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô, in which he was requested to furnish his observations on the subject.

Sir Ernest Satow, in his reply (Paper K), states that primâ facie he is inclined to the opinion that the privileges stipulated for on behalf of British subjects in the Treaty would not extend to British subjects domiciled in any of the Colonies and possessions enumerated in Article XIX, unless the Governments of those Colonies or possessions have acceded to the Treaty.

He, however, observes that he has no grounds for supposing that the Japanese Government contemplate treating British subjects from India or the Colonies now in question differently from those who are domiciled in Great Britain, and that the press, in discussing the non-accession of India and the Colonies, has pointed out the difficulty of exercising discrimination between them. On the other hand, in the case of Colonies which have legislated, or are contemplating legislation, against the immigration of Japanese subjects (a question on which the Japanese Government feel very strongly), and in order to reserve to themselves complete freedom of action in this respect, have declined to accede to the Treaty, would Japan be justified, Sir E. Satow asks, in treating persons domiciled in such Colonies differentially?

Mr. Wilkinson, the Judge of Her Majesty's Court for Japan, in the Memorandum which he has furnished to Her Majesty's Minister, and a copy of which is annexed to his despatch, would appear to hold the views that while all British subjects without exception are entitled under the Treaty to trade, travel, or reside in any part of the Japanese dominions and possessions, there are certain portions of the dominions and possessions of Her Majesty where Japanese subjects will not have a corresponding right in virtue of the Treaty of the 16th July, 1894.

I am to observe, with regard to the above train of argument, that if Mr. Wilkinson's view be correct, the provisions of the Treaty would not be entirely reciprocal, a point to which the Japanese Government have throughout the negotiation of the new Treaties with the Powers attached the utmost importance.

I am to request that you will take the question into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to the reply which should be sent to Sir E. Satow, who asks that he may be furnished with instructions as to the language which he should hold to the Japanese Government on the subject should the occasion arise.

His Lordship would further be glad to receive any observations of a general character in regard to the question which you may desire to offer.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion Article XIX of the Treaty has not the effect of limiting the rights of British subjects connected with non-adhering Colonies or possessions. The question who are British subjects for the purposes of the Treaty is one of British law. Many of the persons resident in the Colonies would be British subjects even if they had been born in a foreign country, as being the children, or grand-children, of natural-born subjects, and it is impossible to suppose that such persons lose the benefits of this Treaty owing to the fact that they have been born in a British Colony and not in a foreign country.

No test can be suggested for discrimination against persons connected with non-adhering Colonies or possessions. The inhabitants of such Colonies or possessions are generally, and not locally merely, British subjects. They enjoy the privileges of citizenship all over the Empire.

The reasons given in the papers before us show that the test of domicil could not be applied in practice, and the suggested test of residence appears to us to be even more impracticable, as residence varies from time to time, and it could not be said of any colonist who came to Japan that he was then resident in the Colony.

We cannot see that the test suggested in Mr. Farnall's Memorandum would meet the case. It is quite impossible to say who are the persons who would cease to be British subjects if the Colonies in question ceased to be part of the British Empire.

It must be recollected that British subjects inhabiting non-adhering Colonies and dependencies are affected by this Treaty, inasmuch as when it comes into force it puts an end to the earlier Treaties under which they enjoyed a right to exterritoriality.

We think that the fair meaning of the Treaty is that all persons who by British law are recognized as possessing the rights of British citizenship all over the world are entitled to the benefits of its stipulations, and this test includes the inhabitants—being British subjects—of all Colonies and dependencies, whether they adhere to the Treaty or not.

Article XIX, in our opinion, does not discriminate between different classes of British subjects, nor create a distinction unknown to British law and almost impossible of definition. Its effect is, in our opinion, merely to provide that the privileges and obligations of the Treaty shall not enure for the benefit of non-adhering Colonies and dependencies. For instance, goods the produce or manufacture of a non-adhering Colony or dependency would not be entitled to the Tariff prescribed by the Treaty.

We advise that, if the question arises, Her Majesty's Minister in Japan should be instructed to advocate the construction of the Treaty which we suggest. He should point out the impossibility of the proposed distinction, and that the discrimination introduced by Article XIX, is territorial merely, and not personal.

Draft Order in Council abolishing Consular jurisdiction.

BY Article XX of the Treaty between Great Britain and Japan of the 16th July, 1894, of which a copy is inclosed, it was agreed that that Treaty should be substituted in the place of the previous Convention and of all arrangements and agreements subsidiary thereto, and that the jurisdiction exercised by British Courts in Japan and all the exceptional privileges, exemptions and immunities enjoyed by British subjects in that country should cease and determine from the date when the Treaty came into force.

In compliance with the stipulations of Article XXI, the Japanese Minister gave notice on the 17th July, 1898, that it was the wish of the Japanese Government to have the Treaty brought into operation on the 17th July, 1899, but they have since consented, as will be seen from Sir E. Satow's despatch No. 104 of the 15th June, 1899, which is also inclosed, that Her Majesty's Courts in Japan shall continue to exercise jurisdiction until the 4th August next.

I have the honour to transmit to you by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a draft Order in Council which has been prepared by Mr. A. Gray, in accordance with the precedent of the accompanying Tunis Order in Council of the 31st December, 1883, providing that as regards all matters and cases affected by the Treaty with Japan, of the 16th July, 1894, the operation of the jurisdictional Orders in Council now applicable to Japan shall cease to be in force, and operative within that Empire on and after the 4th August, 1899, except as regards any judicial matters pending in the British Consular Courts at that date.

His Lordship requests that you will be so good as to inform him at your earliest convenience whether you approve the terms of the draft Order in Council.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has power and jurisdiction in the Empire of Japan:

And whereas the exercise of the power and jurisdiction aforesaid is now regulated by "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1865," and subsequent amending Orders in Council:

And whereas by Treaty between Her Majesty and the Emperor of Japan, signed at London on the 16th July, 1894, it was agreed that from the date when that Treaty should come into force, certain Conventions, Arrangements, and Agreements with respect to Her Majesty's jurisdiction in Japan should cease to be binding, and in consequence that the jurisdiction then exercised by British Courts in Japan, and all the exceptional privileges, exemptions, and immunities then enjoyed by British subjects as a part of, or appurtenant to, such jurisdiction, should absolutely cease and determine, and thereafter all such jurisdiction should be assumed and exercised by Japanese Courts:

And whereas the said Treaty came into force on the 17th day of July, 1899, but it has been agreed by and between Her Majesty and the Emperor of Japan that its operation as regards Her Majesty's Consular jurisdiction should be suspended until the 4th day of August, 1899, ~~under the provisions of the said Treaty, as modified by subsequent arrangement, it has been agreed that the said Treaty shall come into force on the 4th day of August, 1899~~.

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

As regards all such matters and cases as come within the jurisdiction of the Japanese Courts, the operations of the Orders in Council regulating Her Majesty's Consular jurisdiction in the Empire of Japan shall cease to be in force and operation within the said Empire as from

~~on and after~~ the 4th day of August, 1899, except as regards any judicial matters pending in any of Her Majesty's Consular Courts in Japan on the day above mentioned.

And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Salisbury, K.G., one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, and the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty are to give the necessary directions herein as to them may respectively appertain.

[October 13, 1899.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 21, 1899.

Protection in Japan of Industrial Property of British Indian and Colonial subjects.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the question of the rights of Indian and Colonial subjects of Her Majesty to the protection of their industrial property in Japan as affected by the Treaty between this country and Japan of the 16th July, 1894, which came into force on the 17th July last (see Paper A), and by the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, signed at Paris on the 20th March, 1883 (Paper G).

On the 6th January last you were consulted as to the interpretation of Article XIX of the Treaty dealing with the general status of British subjects belonging to Colonies or possessions that had not adhered to the Treaty, and you were furnished with a Memorandum, drawn up by Mr. Justice Wilkinson, Judge of Her Majesty's Court for Japan, in which certain Articles were expressly enumerated, to the benefit of which British subjects, no matter where domiciled or resident, were, in his opinion, entitled (see Papers B and C).

Among these Articles was No. XVII, which runs as follows:—

"The subjects of each of the High Contracting Parties shall enjoy in the dominions and possessions of the other the same protection as native subjects in regard to patents, trade-marks, and designs, upon fulfilment of the formalities prescribed by law."

In your reply, dated the 23rd January (see Paper D), you reported that in your opinion "all persons who, by British law, are recognized as possessing the rights of British citizenship all over the world are entitled to the benefits of its" (i.e., the Treaty's) "stipulations, and this test includes the inhabitants, being British subjects, of all Colonies and dependencies whether they adhere to the Treaty or not" (see Paper D).

Although Article XVII was not specifically mentioned in your Report, no exception was taken to its inclusion by Mr. Justice Wilkinson among those to the benefit of which all British subjects were entitled.

Your opinion was communicated to Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô for his guidance, and a despatch has now been received from him (see Paper F) pointing out the absence of any specific reference to Article XVII in your Report, and suggesting the advisability of his being furnished with explicit instructions as to the view taken by Her Majesty's Government in regard to the rights under that Article of British subjects residing or domiciled in any of the British Colonies or possessions that have not adhered to the Treaty.

I am to request that you will be so good as to inform Lord Salisbury what instructions should, in your opinion, be sent to Sir E. Satow on this point.

A further question arises in consequence of both Great Britain and Japan being parties to the International Convention of the 20th March, 1883, for the Protection of Industrial Property (Paper G), to which certain British Colonies and possessions have not adhered.

That Convention, like the new Treaty between Great Britain and Japan, treats industrial property from the point of view of the owner, and does not appear to admit, between Colonies that have and Colonies that have not adhered to it, any such geographical discrimination in regard to industrial property as will, in accordance with the opinion expressed in your Report of the 23rd January last (Paper D), arise, under the Treaty of 1894 (Paper A), in regard to the produce of the several British Colonies. Article II of the Convention contains the following provision:—

"Les sujets ou citoyens de chacun des États Contractants jouiront, dans tous les autres États de l'Union, en ce qui concerne les brevets d'invention, les dessins ou modèles industriels, les marques de fabrique ou de commerce et le nom commercial, des avantages que les lois respectives accordent actuellement ou accorderont par la suite aux nationaux."

According to the opinion expressed in your Report of the 23rd January last (Paper D), a British subject, who is one owing to his connection with a British Colony or possession which has not adhered to the Treaty between Great Britain and Japan, is, nevertheless, entitled under that Treaty to the privileges granted by it to "British subjects" in Japan.

Lord Salisbury would be glad to be furnished with your opinion as to whether British subjects residing or domiciled in British Colonies or possessions which have not adhered to the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property are, under Article II of that instrument, entitled in Japan to the benefits secured by the Convention to the subjects of States which are parties to it.

I am also to request that you will favour his Lordship with any general observations that you may have to make on the matters dealt with in the papers now submitted to you.

Report.

In our opinion, British subjects though residing, or domiciled in Colonies or possessions which have not adhered, are entitled to the benefits of Article XVII of the Treaty, and of Article II of the Convention.

The right is conferred on those who are British subjects, and is not lost by their being resident or domiciled either in a foreign country, or in a Colony which has not adhered.

The right under the Convention is also conferred by Article III on foreigners domiciled in one of the Contracting States. Of course, domicil in a non-adhering Colony would not be effectual for this purpose, as the test is, in this instance, local, not personal as in the case of British subjects. This distinction is also illustrated by Articles IV and VI of the Convention, which would not apply in the case of non-adhering Colonies.

Import duties in Japan on goods of British Colonies not parties to Treaty of 1894.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, October 6, 1899.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the question of the import duties to be paid in Japan on goods the produce or manufacture of British Colonies or possessions which are not parties to the Treaty between Great Britain and Japan of the 16th July, 1894.

A copy of the Treaty, followed by a Protocol signed on the same day, is inclosed (Paper A).

In your Report of the 23rd January last (Paper B), you stated your opinion that the fair meaning of the Treaty is that all persons who by British law are recognized as possessing the rights of British citizenship all over the world are entitled to the benefits of its stipulations; that Article XIX does not discriminate between different classes of British subjects, and that its effect is merely to provide that the privileges and obligations of the Treaty shall not enure for the benefit of non-adhering Colonies or dependencies. That, for instance, goods, the produce or manufacture of a non-adhering Colony or dependency, would not be entitled to the tariff prescribed by the Treaty.

Your opinion was communicated to Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô for his guidance (to Sir E. Satow, No. 23, February 22, Paper C), and he took an opportunity of informing the Japanese Government of the views of Her Majesty's Government on the matter (Sir E. Satow, No. 125, July 21, Paper D).

In two previous despatches from Sir E. Satow (No. 6, January 9, Paper E, and No. 13, January 13, Paper H) the question is, however, raised whether British Colonies and possessions not parties to the Treaty, although they are excluded from participation in the advantages conferred by it, are not entitled to the benefits of the Tariff annexed to the Protocol of the same date.

The same question is raised in a letter from the Colonial Office of the 8th September (Paper I), which is also inclosed, together with Minutes written on it in this Department. The inclosure in this letter argues that, no reference being made in the Protocol to Article XIX of the Treaty, and the Protocol being made to regulate certain matters "apart from the Treaty," British Colonies which have not adhered to the Treaty are nevertheless entitled to the benefits of the Tariff annexed to the Protocol, although not to the benefit of the most-favoured-nation and other stipulations contained in the Treaty.

I have the honour to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on this point, and with any general observations which you may have to make on the matters dealt with in the inclosed papers.

Report.

The construction contended for on behalf of Canada is by no means an impossible one, and if Her Majesty's Government would be justified in contending that the arrangement embodied in the Protocol constituted a bargain between Great Britain and Japan, independently of the Treaty, we think that contention might be supported.

It is, however, quite clear that the Treaty and the Protocol were negotiated together as part of one arrangement, and, under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the Protocol, with its Schedule, must be read as applying, after the coming into force of the Treaty of 1894, only to such of the Colonies and possessions enumerated in Article XIX as accede to the Treaty.

Moreover, the Treaty and Protocol were signed on the same day; the ratification of the Treaty was to constitute approval of the Protocol, and the reference to Articles V and XV of the Treaty seems to indicate that the scope of the two was to be co-extensive. We attach no importance to the omission of any reference to Article XIX; the only Articles which are referred to are those which might modify the amount of the duties, and it seems to be contemplated that these Articles were to apply to all Colonies and possessions to which the Protocol applied after the Treaty came into force.

We therefore think upon the whole that the expression "the dominions and possessions of Her Britannic Majesty" in the Protocol were to be the same to which the Treaty applied when it began to operate.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 23, 1898.

Navigation of territorial waters of British Honduras and Mexico.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Mexico relative to the question of the navigation of the territorial waters of British Honduras and Mexico.

L.O.R. 1898 (Conf. 7199), p. 56.

On the receipt of your Report of the 23rd August last, of which a printed copy is inclosed for convenience of reference, Her Majesty's Minister was instructed to communicate the substance of it, in such manner as he might think most convenient, to the Mexican Government.

Sir H. Dering's despatch contains an account of an interview which he had in consequence with Señor Mariscal, the Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs, on the subject.

It will be seen that M. Mariscal accepts all the conclusions at which you arrived on the various questions submitted to you in my letter of the 10th August, except with regard to one point, namely, the conveyance of prisoners on board Mexican public vessels which have obtained permission to pass through the territorial waters of the Colony.

M. Mariscal suggests a modification to the effect that vessels which obtain permission to traverse British territorial waters shall carry no prisoners for ordinary offences nor prisoners of war other than such as are of Mexican nationality; and he states that with this modification he would be willing to embody the Regulations in a Convention, which would be binding on both parties.

It appears to Lord Salisbury that, in view of the proposal that the matter should be made the subject of a formal Convention, it is important that care should be taken to avoid creating what might turn out to be an inconvenient precedent by appearing to yield as matter of right a point which Her Majesty's Government may only be prepared to concede as a matter of courtesy, and in view of the special circumstances attaching to the case now under consideration.

At the same time, having regard to the friendly spirit in which the Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs has received the representations made to him by Sir H. Dering, Lord Salisbury would be glad to meet his views, if possible, in the matter.

Moreover, so long as the conveyance of the prisoners through the territorial waters of British Honduras is confined to prisoners of Mexican nationality, on board of Mexican public ships, and so long as it is clearly understood that even such limited conveyance cannot be claimed by Mexico, and is not allowed by Great Britain, as matter of right, his Lordship does not apprehend that there can be any great objection to granting it as a matter of courtesy in the special and somewhat peculiar circumstances of the present case.

It is, moreover, suggested that, in the somewhat unlikely event of such a prisoner, while within the territorial waters of the Colony, attempting to sue out a writ of habeas corpus, any practical difficulty which might, under other circumstances, arise, would be avoided by the fact that the process of the Queen's Courts could not be executed on board of a public vessel in the naval service of a foreign Government.

I am to request that you will take the matter into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Sir H. Dering on the subject.

His Lordship would also be glad to receive any general observations which you may desire to offer in connection with the question.

Report.

We understand that M. Mariscal is willing to confine the power of bringing prisoners through British territorial waters, whether for common offences, or prisoners of war, to the case of Mexicans.

We do not think that any distinction between these two classes is desirable, and we consider that, if permission to carry prisoners is granted, it should apply without distinction.

The phrase "prisoners of war" is not strictly applicable to the case of Indians who are at the outside mere insurgents.

We think that M. Mariscal's proposal may be acceded to in the case of all prisoners who are Mexican subjects carried on Mexican war vessels or transports.

If, as a matter of policy, it is considered desirable to give a licence facilitating the deportation of Indian or other prisoners, Her Majesty's Government is, in our opinion, entitled to give such licence.

We do not think the case should be dealt with by Convention. Her Majesty's Government does not propose to enter into any permanent engagement, and we think that a despatch stating the terms upon which Her Majesty's Government propose to grant a licence for passage through the British territorial waters would answer all purposes. It should be distinctly stated that the licence may be at any time revoked at the pleasure of Her Majesty's Government.

Gentlemen,

Communication to Mr. H. Grey of copies of his letters to Globe Venture Syndicate as to expedition in "Tourmaline" to Sûs.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, copies of the correspondence noted in the accompanying List, relative to a request received from Mr. Henry Grey to be furnished with copies of certain documents which are in the possession of the Foreign Office, or, failing that, to be allowed at least to have access to them.

L.O.R. 1898 (Conf. 7199), p. 59.

Mr. Grey was a member of the expedition dispatched in the course of last year to the Sûs districts of Morocco under the auspices of the Globe Venture Syndicate, an account of whose proceedings was contained in the letter addressed to you from this Office on the 25th May last (Paper J), and having on that occasion landed in Morocco and been arrested by the soldiers of the Sultan, he was eventually brought to Tangier, tried in the Consular Court on a charge of smuggling, and sentenced to a term of imprisonment.

On the receipt of Mr. Grey's first application (Papers A, B, C, and H) to be furnished with copies of the letters sent to the Globe Venture Syndicate warning them of the illegal character of the enterprise, he was informed (Paper D) that the originals of any such letters were presumably in the possession of the Syndicate, and that he should consult his solicitors as to the means by which discovery and inspection of those documents might be obtained, and their production at the time of his action, if necessary, be secured.

Mr. Grey has, however, since explained (Papers E, F, and G) that it is with a view to arriving at a decision as to whether he has good ground of action against the Syndicate—no action having as yet been begun—that he desires to have copies of the warnings sent to them, or, if that is not possible, to be allowed to read them.

I am, accordingly, to request that you will take the papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to what answer should be returned to Mr. Grey.

Report.

In our opinion, copies of the letters passing between the Foreign Office and the Globe Venture Syndicate should not at present be shown to Mr. Grey.

In the event of his taking proceedings against the Syndicate, he may become entitled to obtain copies or information as to their contents, but in the present stage of the proceedings he should be left to take such action as he thinks fit. He should be informed that Her Majesty's Government are not able to give him the information he desires, or to permit inspection of the copies of documents in their possession.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Mr. J. Godden's complaint against authorities of Curaçao and Aruba.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, October 18, 1899.

I AM directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit herewith the accompanying Papers, as specified in the inclosed list, relating to the complaint of Mr. John Godden against the action of the Netherland Colonial authorities in the Islands of Curaçao and Aruba.

This case, as appears from the Foreign Office Memorandum of March 1888, has been brought to the notice of successive Law Officers of the Crown on three separate occasions.

Mr. Godden's first complaint referred to the assessment of his estate at Santa Barbara in Curaçao for purposes of taxation. The local authorities, it seems, decided to tax the land according to its mineral value rather than according to its value as agricultural land. The amount payable by Mr. Godden was consequently greatly increased. The matter was referred in March 1886 by the Earl of Rosebery to the then Law Officers of the Crown and to Dr. Deane, Q.C., who were of opinion that the interpretation placed upon the terms of the Ordinance No. 20 of the 20th December, 1881, by the Netherland Government was not incorrect, and that the case afforded no ground for the further intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Godden subsequently submitted a statement of his grievances against the Colonial authorities of Curaçao and Aruba in respect of a Concession of lands obtained by him in the latter island for agricultural and breeding purposes.

The right to work the lime phosphate deposits was, however, put up for public tender and granted, notwithstanding Mr. Godden's protest, to another concessionnaire, who afterwards transferred his rights to the Aruba Phosphate Company, whose operations, as Mr. Godden alleged, were prejudicial to his agricultural interests.

He further complained that he was not permitted to blast stones on Aruba, although the right to do so was conceded to the Aruba Phosphate Company.

A third grievance was that he was not allowed to store gunpowder in Aruba, the Regulations in force in Curaçao not being applicable in that island, while the Aruba Phosphate Company kept their powder close to their works.

The system of assessment applied in the case of Santa Barbara estate was again brought forward, and, owing to the refusal of the authorities to supply the complainant with a copy of the Register of Mortgages for the Island of Aruba, and this further (and fifth) grievance was submitted at a later period.

MUSCAT.

[March 8, 1899.]

Statement of Case for Opinion.

Independence of Muscat: Position of Her Majesty's Government towards France as to.

IN 1862 "Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and His Majesty the Emperor of the French, taking into consideration the importance of maintaining the independence of His Highness the Sultan of Muscat (and of His Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar), have thought it right to engage reciprocally to respect the independence of those Sovereigns." Thereon their Plenipotentiaries declared in consequence "that their said Majesties take reciprocally that engagement."

2. Her Majesty's Government have in various ways exercised a preponderant influence in Muscat affairs. In 1856, when disputes arose between the sons of a former Sultan as to the possession of Zanzibar and Muscat, Lord Canning acted as Arbitrator, and decided that Zanzibar should be severed from Muscat, and should pay annually 40,000 crowns to the Muscat Sultan. Zanzibar has, since 1873, ceased to pay this subsidy; but the Government of India has undertaken to pay it so long as the Sultan "continues faithfully to fulfil his Treaty engagements and to manifest his friendship towards the British Government." Each Sultan of Muscat, since the death of Sultan Said in 1856, has received the formal recognition of the British Government; and at the present moment a rival claimant is being detained in India. On several occasions the Indian Government has intervened to uphold the Sultan's authority against internal revolt by using its naval forces for the purpose. Certain Chiefs were warned in 1895 that the Government of India would not permit attacks on Muscat, and when the French Government deprecated unilateral action of this nature, Lord Dufferin was instructed on the 4th April, 1896, to state that there was "no intention on the part of Her Majesty's Government to depart from the engagement of 1862." British trade interests are predominant in Muscat, and the police of the seas of Oman has been exercised for years past by Her Majesty's ships alone.

3. On the 20th March, 1891 the present Sultan did "pledge and bind himself, his heirs and successors, never to cede, to sell, to mortgage, or otherwise give for occupation, save to the British Government, the dominions of Muscat and Oman or any of their dependencies." Owing to the breach of this and other Treaty stipulations, and of personal assurances formally entered into by the Sultan, a Memorandum was recently presented to the Sultan by the Government of India which, after recapitulating the engagements of the Sultan of Muscat to Her Majesty's Government, and the acts of friendliness and of material support afforded to them, particularly in checking the attacks of hostile tribes on Muscat, made the following demands upon the Sultan:—

(a.) The abrogation of a cession of a piece of territory for a coaling station to France (to which he had agreed without the knowledge of Her Majesty's Government).

(b.) The dismissal of a confidential adviser, Abdul Aziz, who was notoriously inimical to British interests.

(c.) Payment of interest on certain sums due as an indemnity to British subjects.

(d.) Cessation of the levy of taxes on British subjects which were not compatible with his Treaty engagements.

(e.) The issue of orders to his subjects for the exclusive use of the Muscat flag.

Under threat of force the Sultan formally complied with these terms, and wrote to the French Consul declining to receive Abdul Aziz (who was the Consul's Munshi) as French Agent.

4. Under this statement the Law Officers are requested to advise the Secretary of State on two questions:

(1.) Does the Declaration of 1862 (paragraph 1 above) require the British Government to abstain from exercising a preponderant influence in Muscat? It is admitted that neither party to it may acquire by lease or otherwise practical sovereignty over any portion of the territory of Muscat. But the whole trend of our policy, as shown in paragraph 2 above, both before and since 1862, has been to assert and exercise a preponderant influence over the administration of Muscat by its independent Ruler, who has been recognized and protected and subsidized by the Government of India.

2. Should we be justified, notwithstanding the Declaration of 1862, in punishing and even deposing a particular Sultan who having entered into engagements with us deliberately broke them? The Sultan has been required to dismiss his adviser who is notoriously hostile to ourselves, and this and other demands, as shown in paragraph 3, have been presented to him and accepted by him. Should he now fail to carry out his acceptance, should we be precluded from deposing him until the French gave their assent? If so, would the answer be the same if he committed some outrageous breach of international law and refused reparation?

Opinion.

1. The Declaration of 1862 does not, in our opinion, require the British Government to abstain from exercising a preponderating influence in Muscat, so long as that influence is not exerted in any way inconsistent with the independence of Muscat. For instance the subsidy, and the terms on which it was made payable, involved no breach of the Declaration.

2. We think that the British Government would be justified in punishing or even deposing a particular Sultan who broke his engagements with the British Government. The undertaking contained in the Declaration is an engagement to respect the independence of the Sovereigns of Muscat as representing the country, and does not carry with it an inability to punish any particular Sovereign for breaches of Treaty or of international law. For this the consent of France is not necessary. But it would be a breach of the Declaration if, after deposing a particular Sultan, a successor was set up who was not independent.

We should add that, whilst the question whether the Sultan could consistently with the Declaration be required to dismiss a particular adviser must depend on the special circumstances of the case, it is hardly compatible with the independence of Muscat that the Sultan should be compelled to accept Ministers and advisers who are acceptable to the British Government.

ROBERT B. FINLAY.

Law Officers' Department,
March 8, 1899.

Mr. Godden also stated that he had appealed to the Courts of Law, but that no qualified person would undertake the conduct of his case.

The points raised in Mr. Godden's complaints involved a number of questions of Dutch law, and Her Majesty's Minister at the Hague was requested to obtain the opinion of a Netherland jurist thereon. In the meanwhile a sixth complaint was received from Mr. Godden, who stated that a Decree of the Government of Curaçao, dated the 23rd November, 1868, No. 654, permitted concessionnaires on Aruba, who had been in possession for three years, as from the 1st January, 1869, to acquire the ownership of the soil by paying into the Colonial Treasury a reasonable amount for the properties. Mr. Godden, however, declared that on applying to the authorities for leave to take advantage of this Regulation, the Governor of Aruba had replied that the Government was "not disposed, for the present, to grant in property grounds in Aruba to any one, whomsoever it may be." This point was submitted with the other to the legal expert at the Hague, who afterwards gave it as his opinion that none of Mr. Godden's complaints were well founded.

The case was then again laid before the Law Officers of the Crown, who dissented from the view taken by the Netherland jurist in respect of Mr Godden's first complaint, viz., that in granting to Mr. Godden his agricultural Concession in Aruba, the Netherland authorities had reserved the minerals, and were entitled to grant to other parties the right to work them.

The Law Officers considered that the language of the Ordinance relating to such Concessions (May 8–9, 1867, No. 4) did not amount to a reservation of the property in the minerals, and still less of any right of going upon the land in order to take them. They held that the Colonial Government was not authorized to put up to tender, and to grant to another concessionnaire a licence to go upon Mr Godden's laud and extract minerals therefrom.

They further thought that Mr. Godden ought not to be expected to sue Netherland subjects in a Netherland Court of Justice for wrongs due to the action of the Netherland Government; and they stated that in their opinion a claim could be made for payment to Mr. Godden and those claiming under him, of a fair equivalent for the profit made by the Aruba Phosphate Company out of the deposits on his land.

The Law Officers also considered that the refusal of the local authorities to give Mr. Godden a copy of the register of mortgages was a substantial grievance.

The Netherland Government denied all liability in respect of the extraction of the phosphates from Mr. Godden's land, and referred him to the Courts of Law. They, however, admitted that an error had been committed in refusing a copy of the Register of Mortgages, and expressed their regret.

The reply of the Netherland Government was referred to the Law Officers, who were of opinion that the explanations given by them should be accepted.

L.O.R. 1888 (Conf. 5785), p. 48.

As regards Mr. Godden's other complaints, their view coincided with those of the Netherland expert.

Mr. Godden was accordingly informed that no further representations would be made on his behalf.

This was the state of the case in March 1888.

On the 24th July last Mr. Godden again addressed a letter to the Marquess of Salisbury in support of his claims, transmitting copies of certain documents relative to the action taken by him.

The first of these is a statement in which he recapitulates his grievances against the Administration of Curaçao. He begins by adducing a number of Ordinances which he alleges to have been contravened to his prejudice, and states that the local Government have received 235,000*l.* for royalty, export duty, and share of profits in the phosphates out of the land in dispute, and that the Aruba Phosphate Company has made a net profit of over 136,000*l.*

In 1891 Mr. Godden addressed a memorial to the Netherland Minister for the Colonies. In this he emphasizes the fact that the Concession granted to work certain estates in Aruba gives the owners the right to work them for agricultural purposes, "which right necessarily implies the prerogative to hold and use the surface of the soil to the exclusion of every other person." The grant of Concessions to another person or persons to work phosphate deposits was, he considered, a direct infringement of his rights.

Another point to which he draws attention is that in the Concession granted to Mr. Sewell (who afterwards sold it to the Aruba Phosphate Company), it is stipulated that "the concessionnaire is obliged to allow upon the lands granted, the exercise of rights to those who may have obtained them, upon any portion of such lands for the purposes of agriculture.

It is undoubtedly the case that the operations of the Phosphate Company must interfere with agriculture as the phosphate deposits from the actual surface soil of that part of the island.

Mr. Godden then proceeds to dilate on the delays to which his suit has been exposed in the Courts of Justice at Curaçao, and states that the counsel for the defendants has openly declared that it is proposed to endeavour to delay proceedings until the deposits are exhausted.

He next points out that there is a clause in the Concession of the Aruba Phosphate Company which prescribes that the Concession shall be null and void whenever the concessionnaire fails to carry out any of the obligations imposed on him. Mr. Godden contends that the Government of Curaçao ought to apply this clause because his rights have been infringed by the Phosphate Company, although the Administration recognizes the existence of these rights by receiving every year the special tax levied on his Concession. He then alludes to the refusal of the Governor of Curaçao to entertain his request to be permitted to acquire the ownership of the soil by payment to the Treasury.

Mr. Godden requested the Netherland Minister of the Colonies to cause the nullity clause to be applied to the Aruba Concession, to sell the ownership of the land to himself or rather to the Alliance Phosphate Company (which he represented, being Managing-Director and chief shareholder) and to cause a portion of the sum of 2,324,500 guilders to be paid to him.

The Netherland Minister for the Colonies refused to accede to these requests.

In a letter to the Minister for the Colonies, Mr. Godden contests the reasons on which this refusal is founded, more especially with reference to the request to acquire the ownership of the land.

From the Foreign Office Memorandum of March 1888, p. 5, it will be perceived that the Netherland's legal expert was of opinion that Mr. Godden had no "right" to have his Concession in Aruba converted into ownership.

The Dutch Government, however, contended that only the concessionnaires of the three years 1869, 1870, and 1871 could have acquired the ownership, whilst persons who obtained their Concessions only in 1873 and 1874 (Mr. Godden purchased his on the 1st December, 1875), were debarred from any such right. Mr. Godden points out that this argument was not employed by the Lieutenant-Governor of Aruba, who based his refusal to accede to Mr. Godden's request on his own arbitrary will and pleasure.

The Netherland Minister for Foreign Affairs would not modify the decision previously come to with regard to Mr. Godden's case.

Mr. Godden has obtained both a Dutch and an English legal opinion on the Law of the 23rd November, 1868, by which concessionnaires who have been in possession for three years can acquire absolute ownership, in support of his contention that this Law does not only apply to the years 1869, 1870, and 1871, and that the Netherland Government are bound to compensate him for the infringements of his rights by the grant of a Concession to the Aruba Phosphate Company. The English legal expert considers that the interpretation placed on the Law by the Dutch Minister of the Colonies is not in accordance with the principles of general jurisprudence.

There is one point which calls for observation, although it has not been specifically raised by Mr. Godden himself. It certainly does not seem to be equitable, whether it be in accordance with the letter of Dutch law or not, that he should be called upon to pay taxes upon the estimated mineral value of his land while another party enjoys the sole right of working the minerals therein to the detriment of the operations carried on by Mr. Godden as agricultural concessionnaire.

I am to request that you will be good enough to consider the inclosed papers, and to favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether, on a consideration of the fresh arguments now adduced by Mr. Godden in support of Mr. Godden's claims, any, and, if so, what, grounds present themselves on which a renewed representation to the Netherland Government in his favour may properly be based.

Report.

We do not think there is any ground for renewed representations to the Netherland Government in favour of Mr. Godden.

The Concession to Mr. Godden was only for agricultural purposes. It is, in our opinion, quite clear that he had not under this Concession any right to remove the phosphates. His claim, therefore, can at the outside be only for disturbance of agricultural operations. This is not the claim which he makes, and his claim to the value of the phosphate which has been realized appears to us to be quite unfounded.

In this respect we think the Report of the Law Officers of the 30th March, 1887, went too far in suggesting that a claim might be made for the profit made in working the phosphates.

It is, in our opinion, open to very serious question whether Mr. Godden has any claim even for damage to his agricultural operations. The question depends upon Dutch law, and we are not in a position to dissent from the view which M. de Brauw takes as to the effect of the reservation of minerals. If phosphate of lime be included in this reservation, it is possible that there would be a right on the part of the Government to authorize the breaking up the surface for the purpose of getting these minerals, even though they themselves formed the surface of the ground. It is, however, enough to say that Mr. Godden's claim is not for damage sustained by him in pursuit of agriculture.

It appears from M. de Brauw's supplementary opinion that the effect of the Resolution of the 23rd November, 1868, has been misunderstood by Mr. Godden and his advisers. According to M. de Brauw, this Resolution had not the force of law, but was a mere Resolution of the Executive Government which might, or might not, be acted on at their discretion, and upon this view, from which we see no reason to dissent, it conferred no right upon any one to the acquisition of the fee. Moreover, M. de Brauw states that this Resolution has been mistranslated by Mr. Godden, and, according to the translation which he gives as being correct, the Resolution was only in favour of those who had occupied for three years consecutively, reckoning from the 1st January, 1869. This Resolution, if M. de Brauw is correct in his translation, would have no application to Mr. Godden.

We should add that it is by no means clear that acquisition under the Resolution would enlarge the rights of the concessionnaire so as to confer a title to the minerals.

Upon the whole we are unable to advise Her Majesty's Government further to press Mr. Godden's case.

NICARAGUA.

No. 43.

[November 3, 1899.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, October 18, 1899.

Gentlemen,

Commercial Treaty with Nicaragua.

I AM directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit herewith papers, as specified in the inclosed list, relating to a Treaty of Commerce which it is proposed to conclude between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Nicaragua.

Certain amendments having reference more particularly to the VIth and IXth Articles of the draft Treaty inclosed have been suggested by the Board of Trade, and have been accordingly inserted in the draft in red ink.

As regards Article VI, the alteration proposed is as follows:—

"In all that relates to the succession to personal estate by will or otherwise and the disposal of property of any sort in any manner whatsoever which they may lawfully acquire, the subjects of each Contracting Party shall enjoy, in the dominions and possessions of the other, the same privileges, liberties, and rights, and shall be subject to no other or higher imposts or charges than native subjects, or subjects or citizens of the most favoured nation."

The grounds on which the Board of Trade base their view of the desirability of this change, is that in its original form the Article might, under certain circumstances, have been found to conflict with existing legislation—as, for instance, in the case of a Nicaraguan citizen dying while domiciled in the United Kingdom, and leaving personal property in Nicaragua.

In such a case the Board point out that "our Courts would hold that the personalty descended according to English law," and this would be in opposition to the Treaty provision as it originally stood.

In the case of Article IX, the Board of Trade were asked, in the first instance, whether any provision existed in English law under which effect could be given to that part of the Article which deals with the indemnification by Government for losses incurred by vessels on account of embargo.

The Board thereupon obtained a legal opinion on the point, and in consequence of the criticism therein contained the word "movable" has been inserted before the words "property belonging to subjects or citizens of one of the Contracting States" in the first paragraph, to which the following addition has been made:—"or on conditions not less favourable to such party than those applicable to natives or to subjects and citizens of the most favoured nation."

The second paragraph of Article IX has been omitted as unnecessary.

In Article XXV the word "Customs" has been inserted before "dues or charges," as it is pointed out by the Board of Trade that dock and quay dues should not be exempted from payment, because docks and quays are not as a rule under Government administration in the United Kingdom.

Lord Salisbury desires me to request you to favour him with any observations you may have to offer on the draft Articles as amended in accordance with the suggestions of the Board of Trade.

The remaining Articles of the draft Treaty call for no observations, as they have been drawn up in strict accordance with the precedents observed in framing similar instruments which are already in force.

I have, &c.

Report.

Article VI, as originally drafted, seems to us to have been intended to apply to immovable property only as the succession to movable property had been dealt with by Article V. We think Article VI should be retained with the alterations we have suggested.

Article VI, as altered by us, deals with the holding of immovable property, and states the rule of succession to such property with the qualification of most-favoured-nation treatment if there should be any modification in favour of any other nation—an event which in this country is very unlikely.

The Article VI, as proposed by the Board of Trade, deals with a different subject, which has already been adequately dealt with by Article V, subject to the insertion therein after "nations" of the words "or subjects or citizens of the most-favoured-nation."

We approve of the first paragraph of Article IX as altered by the Board of Trade, subject to the drafting alteration which we have made in black ink.

We agree with the Board of Trade that the second paragraph of Article IX had better be left out.

We have altered the last paragraph of Article IX, and subject to these alterations we approve of it.

Our reasons for these alterations are the following:—

The Article should, we think, extend to immovable as well as movable property, as British citizens should be secured against having their lands in Nicaragua taken without compensation.

This involves leaving out the arbitration clause, the machinery of which is not applicable to lands taken in England.

The provision should not be confined to the case of persons resident in the territory of the Power taking or using the property, they should be protected though they reside elsewhere.

We suggest the omission of the word "legitimate"—the provision should apply to the acts of any de facto Government.

Subject to these observations and to the alterations and additions which we have made in black ink,[*] we approve of the draft initialled by us.

Annex.

Draft Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation between Her Majesty and the President of the Republic of Nicaragua.

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and His Excellency the President of the Republic of Nicaragua, being desirous of maintaining and strengthening friendly relations, and of promoting commercial intercourse between the dominions of Her Britannic Majesty and the territories of the Republic of Nicaragua, have resolved to conclude a Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation, and have appointed as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland,

His Excellency the President of the Republic of Nicaragua,

Who, after communicating to each other their respective full powers, found to be in due and proper form, have agreed on the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

There shall be perpetual peace and friendship between Great Britain and the Republic of Nicaragua, and between their respective subjects and citizens, without exception of persons or places.

---

ARTICLE II.

There shall be reciprocal, full, and entire freedom of commerce and navigation for the subjects and ships of the two High Contracting Parties in the towns, ports, and other places the entry to which is at present, or may be hereafter, permitted to the subjects and citizens and to the ships of any other nation.

ARTICLE III.

British subjects and citizens of Nicaragua respectively may, with full liberty, enter, travel, or remain in any part of the territories and possessions of the other High Contracting Party, and shall enjoy, with regard to their persons and property, the same protection and security as natives. They may, in each of the two countries, carry on their trades and transact business, wholesale or retail, own and rent any houses, manufactories, warehouses, shops, or lands that they may require, transport merchandize and money from place to place, and receive consignments from the interior or from abroad on the same conditions as natives. They may conduct their business personally or by appointing duly authorized persons to represent them, whether it be for the purchase or sale of goods, property, and merchandize, or for making declarations at the Custom-house, or for the loading, unloading, or dispatching of ships. They shall not be subject to other charges, contributions, taxes, or imposts of any kind than those established by law for natives.

ARTICLE IV.

The subjects and citizens of both nations shall enjoy in both countries complete protection for their persons and properties. They shall have the power to have recourse to the Courts of Justice to obtain their rights in all the instances and grades of jurisdiction established by law. They shall have the power to employ counsel, attorneys, and agents of any kind whom they may think necessary to represent them, in conformity with the laws of the country; they shall, in a word, enjoy, in all the matters referred to in this Article, the same rights and privileges as natives, and shall be subject, for the enjoyment of these rights, to the same conditions as natives.

The dwellings, manufactories, warehouses, and shops of the subjects and citizens of each of the Contracting Parties in the dominions and possessions of the other, and all premises appertaining thereto, destined for purposes of residence or commerce, shall be respected. Except under the conditions and with the forms prescribed by the laws for natives of the country, such dwellings and premises shall be exempt from search or domiciliary visit, and books, papers, or accounts shall be exempt from examination or inspection.

ARTICLE V.

The subjects of Great Britain in Nicaragua, and the citizens of Nicaragua in Great Britain, shall have the power, in the same manner as natives, to acquire, hold, and alienate, by succession, will, donation, or in any other manner, movable property, without being obliged to pay other or higher succession or transmission duties than those which either natives or subjects or citizens of the most favoured nation would have to pay in the same circumstances. ~~With regard to the holding of immovable property, the subjects and citizens of the two High Contracting Parties shall be treated in the same manner as the subjects and citizens of the most favoured nation.~~

ARTICLE VI.

~~In all that relates to the succession to personal estate by will or otherwise, and the disposal of property of any sort in any manner whatsoever which they may lawfully acquire, the subjects of each Contracting Party shall enjoy, in the dominions and possessions of the other, the same privileges, liberties, and rights, and shall be subject to no other or higher imposts or charges than native subjects, or subjects or citizens of the most favoured nation.~~

With regard to the holding of immovable property, the subjects and citizens of the two High Contracting Parties shall be treated in the same manner as the subjects or citizens of the most favoured nation.

The succession to immovable property shall be governed by the laws of the country in which it is situated, provided that most-favoured-nation treatment shall be enjoyed in this respect by the subjects and citizens of the High Contracting Parties.

ARTICLE VII.

The subjects of Great Britain in Nicaragua, and the citizens of Nicaragua in Great Britain, shall be exempted from personal service in the army or navy, or in the national guard or militia, as well as from war contributions and forced loans, unless the imposts and contributions fall upon landed property situated in the country, in which case they must pay them under the same conditions as natives.

ARTICLE VIII.

The subjects or citizens of each of the Contracting Parties shall have, in the dominions and possessions of the other, the same rights as natives in regard to patents for inventions, trade-marks, and designs, upon fulfilment of the formalities prescribed by law.

ARTICLE IX.

Ships, cargoes, merchandize, or other movable property belonging to subjects or citizens of one of the Contracting States shall not in the other be subjected to embargo, or retained for military expeditions, or for any public purpose, except upon agreement with the interested party, or on conditions not less favourable to such party than those applicable to natives or to subjects and citizens of the most favoured nation.

~~It is likewise stipulated that~~ In the event of the property of a subject or citizen of either of the High Contracting Parties ~~resident in the territories of the other~~ being taken, used, or injured by the ~~legitimate~~ authorities of the other High Contracting Party ~~that country~~ for public purposes, full indemnity or compensation shall be paid to him by the Government of the country in which the measure is taken. ~~And in case the amount of such indemnity cannot be arranged in an amicable manner, the determination thereof shall be submitted to Arbiters named, the one by the Government author of the embargo or measure which gives rise to the claim, and the other by the Government of the nation to which the vessel detained, or proprietor injured, may belong. In case these Arbiters cannot agree, the final determination, without appeal, shall be referred to the Government of a third friendly Power.~~

ARTICLE X.

The subjects and citizens of either State shall enjoy in the other complete liberty of conscience and of worship. They shall not, therefore, be disturbed or molested on account of their religious belief, nor in the legitimate exercise of their worship in the chapels or places of worship set apart for that object, or in private houses, provided that in so doing they observe the decorum and respect owed to divine worship and to the laws of the country. They shall also be at liberty to bury their dead in suitable and adequate places set apart and appropriated by the local authorities for their co-religionists, or in such as they may themselves choose, with the approval of the said authorities where there are no special cemeteries.

ARTICLE XI.

If, unfortunately, the peace should be broken between the two countries, and war should be declared, it is agreed, in order to lessen the evils therefrom ensuing, that the subjects and citizens of the one country residing in the towns, ports, or territories of the other, and engaged in commerce or any industry or profession, shall be free to continue their business so long as they do not commit any offence against the laws of the country. In the event of their conduct being such as to cause them to lose this privilege, or of the Government concerned thinking it necessary to order them to leave, they shall be given sufficient time to arrange their affairs. In no case, even should their be war or hostility between the two nations, shall the property, of whatever nature it be, of the subjects or citizens of one country be put under embargo or confiscated, by the other, or other charges and contributions levied than those to which natives or subjects or citizens of the most favoured nation are subject. Nor shall it be possible to put under embargo, sequestrate, or confiscate letters of credit, bank-notes, or any other papers belonging to the subjects or citizens of the other State, on account of war, to their prejudice and for the benefit of the country in which the said property is.

ARTICLE XII.

In case of any canal, railway, road, or other mode of transit, either by land or water, being established in Nicaragua, British subjects, commerce, and navigation of all kinds shall enjoy, as regards such transit, the same rights and privileges in all respects, and subject to the same conditions, as the most favoured nation.

ARTICLE XIII.

The two High Contracting Parties agree to grant to the Envoys, Ministers, and Agents each of the other the same privileges, favours, and immunities that are enjoyed, or that hereafter shall be enjoyed by the Envoys, Ministers, or Agents of the most favoured nation.

The two High Contracting Parties, being desirous to avoid anything that might disturb their friendly relations, agree that their Diplomatic Representatives shall not interfere officially, unless for the purpose of obtaining amicable settlements, in the claims or complaints of private persons concerning matters within the cognizance of the Civil or Criminal Courts, and which are before the Judges and Tribunals of the country, excepting in cases of denial of justice, delay of proceedings contrary to usage or law, or of the non-execution of judgments passed in due form.

ARTICLE XIV.

Each of the Contracting Parties may appoint Consuls-General, Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Consular Agents to reside respectively in towns or ports in the dominions and possessions of the other Power, each one of them reserving the right of excepting those place where it may not appear convenient to admit them whenever this exception is extended to the Consular functionaries of all other nations.

Such Consular officers, however, shall not enter upon their functions until after they shall have been approved and admitted in the usual form by the Government to which they are sent. They shall exercise whatever functions, and enjoy whatever privileges, exemptions, and immunities are, or may hereafter be, granted there to Consular officers of the most favoured nation.

ARTICLE XV.

The Consuls-General, Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Consular Agents of each of the Contracting Parties, residing in the dominions and possessions of the other, shall receive from the local authorities such assistance as can by law be given to them for the recovery of deserters from the vessels of their respective countries.

ARTICLE XVI.

Joint Stock Companies and other Associations, commercial, industrial, and financial, constituted in conformity with the laws in force in either of the Contracting States, may exercise in the dominions and possessions of the other all their rights, including that of appearing before Tribunals for the purpose of bringing an action or of defending themselves, with the sole condition, in exercising such rights, of always conforming themselves to the laws in force in the respective countries.

It is understood that these dispositions shall be applicable as well to the Companies and Associations constituted and athorized previously to the signature of this Treaty as to those which may subsequently be so constituted and authorized.

ARTICLE XVII.

No other or higher duties shall be imposed on the importation into the dominions and possessions of Her Britannic Majesty of any article, the produce and manufacture of Nicaragua, from whatever place arriving; and no other or higher duties shall be imposed on the importation into Nicaragua of any article, the produce or manufacture of the dominions and possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, from whatever place arriving, than on the like article produced or manufactured in any other foreign country; nor shall any prohibition be maintained or imposed on the importation of any article, the produce and manufacture of the dominions and possessions of either of the High Contracting Parties, into the dominions and possessions of the other, from whatever place arriving, which shall not equally extend to the importation of the like article, being the produce or manufacture of any other country. This last provision is not applicable to the sanitary and other prohibitions occasioned by the necessity of protecting the safety of persons, or of cattle, or of plants useful to agriculture.

ARTICLE XVIII.

No other or higher duties or charges shall be imposed in the dominions and possessions of either or the High Contracting Parties on the exportation of any article to the dominions and possessions of the other than such as are, or may be, payable on the exportation of the like article to any other foreign country; nor shall any prohibition be imposed on the exportation of any article from the dominions and possessions of either of the two Contracting Parties to the dominions and possessions of the other, which shall not equally extend to the exportation of the like article to any other country.

ARTICLE XIX.

The two High Contracting Parties engage not to grant to the subjects or citizens of any other nation, in the matter of navigation and commerce, any privilege without making it extend to the commerce and navigation of the other High Contracting Party; and both nations shall reciprocally enjoy all privileges, favours, and immunities that have been granted, or that may hereafter be granted, to any other nation. Goods belonging to the subjects or citizens of one of the High Contracting Parties in transit through the territory of the other shall not be subjected to other or higher dues than those for which goods of the subjects of the most favoured nation are, or may be, liable. Nevertheless, the special Laws of each State shall remain in force with regard to articles the transit of which is, or may be, forbidden; and the two High Contracting Powers reserve the right to make the transit of arms and munitions of war subject to special permission.

ARTICLE XX.

In all that concerns the police of the ports, the loading and unloading of vessels, and the storing of goods and merchandize, the subjects or citizens of both countries shall submit to the local Laws and Regulations, but in none of these respects shall they be subjected to any restrictions or Regulations more onerous than those to which native subjects or citizens, or the subjects or citizens of any other nation, are, or may be, liable.

ARTICLE XXI.

British ships arriving at Nicaraguan ports, and Nicaraguan ships arriving at British ports, with cargoes or in ballast, shall not pay higher tonnage, port, light, pilotage, or any other dues than those to which either native ships or the ships of the most favoured nation are, or may hereafter be, subjected.

In all that concerns the treatment and location of ships, their loading and unloading, taxes, and dues of whatever kind, and generally with regard to all formalities or provisions to which merchant-vessels, their crews and cargoes, may be subjected, the ships of the two High Contracting Parties shall enjoy the same privileges, favours, and advantages as are, or may be, enjoyed by native ships or the ships of the most favoured nation.

ARTICLE XXII.

Navigation, tonnage, and other dues which are determined by the capacity of the ship shall be levied in accordance with the papers and certificates in possession of their ship's officers, issued by the proper authorities in conformity with the laws of the respective countries, and certified by the Consul of the other Power (if there is one) at the port from which the vessel sails.

ARTICLE XXIII.

The coasting trade and the fishing industry remain regulated by the laws of the respective High Contracting States, provided that the subjects and ships of the High Contracting Parties shall not be subjected to less favourable conditions and Regulations in these respects than are applied to the subjects and ships of the most favoured nation.

ARTICLE XXIV.

Whenever the subjects or citizens of one of the Contracting Parties are obliged, by stress of weather, or from any other cause, to take refuge with their ships in the ports, roadsteads, rivers, or in any part of the territory of the other, they shall be received and treated with all the friendly consideration due to their position, without prejudice to the precautionary measures which the Governments may think it necessary to take against smuggling.

They shall accordingly be granted every facility for repairing the damage they have suffered, for procuring provisions, and for continuing their voyage, without obstacle or impediment of any kind. The merchant-vessels of one of the High Contracting Parties may engage seamen in the territory of the other, so long as they conform to the local Laws and Regulations, and so long as the engagement is entirely voluntary on the part of the seamen.

ARTICLE XXV.

When a ship belonging to the subjects or citizens of one of the High Contracting Parties is wrecked or suffers any damage on the coasts or within the territory of the other, she shall receive the same assistance and protection which is granted to the ships of natives in the country where the accident occurs. If necessary, the ship may be unloaded, without the goods and merchandize having to pay any customs ~~dues or charges~~ duties, unless cleared for consumption, in which case they are to be treated in the same manner as the goods of the most favoured nation under the same circumstances.

ARTICLE XXVI.

The ships of war of the two High Contracting Parties may enter, remain in, and take in provisions in each other's ports. They shall be subject to the same Regulations, and shall enjoy the same honours, advantages, and exemptions as those of the most favoured nation.

ARTICLE XXVII.

In cases where the Government of Nicaragua may accord special rates of customs duties to the products of any other Central American State, it is understood that such special rates cannot be claimed by Great Britain by reason of the right of the most favoured nation, so long as they are not also accorded to any third State which does not form part of the Central American Republics.

ARTICLE XXVIII.

Any disputes which may arise with regard to the interpretation or execution of the present Treaty, or in consequence of any violation of the same, shall be submitted to the decision of an Arbitrator, when all means of settling them directly by friendly arrangement have been tried in vain. The method of arbitration shall be decided upon by mutual agreement between the two High Contracting Parties. The Award of the Arbitrator shall be binding upon both Governments.

ARTICLE XXIX.

The stipulations of the present Treaty shall not be applicable to any of Her Britannic Majesty's Colonies or possessions beyond the seas, unless notice to that effect shall have been given, on behalf of any such Colony or possession, by Her Britannic Majesty's Representative at Guatemala to the Nicaraguan Minister for Foreign Affairs, within one year from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of the present Treaty.

It is understood that, under the provisions of this Article, Her Majesty's Government can, in the same manner, give notice of adhesion on behalf of any British Protectorate or sphere of influence, or on behalf of the Island of Cyprus, in virtue of the Convention of the 4th June, 1878, between Great Britain and Turkey.

ARTICLE XXX.

The present Treaty shall continue in force for ten years from the day of the exchange of the ratifications; and in case one of the two High Contracting Parties shall not have given notice twelve months before the expiration of the said period of ten years, of its intention to terminate the present Treaty, it shall remain in force until the expiration of one year from the day on which one of the two High Contracting Parties has given notice of termination.

Her Britannic Majesty's Government shall also have the right to separately terminate the present Treaty at any time on giving twelve months' notice to that effect, on behalf of any British Colony, possession, or Dependency, as specified in Article XXIX, which may have acceded thereto.

ARTICLE XXXI.

The present Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged as soon as the formalities prescribed by the Constitutional Laws of the two States have been complied with.

In faith whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed their seals.

Memorandum by the Law Officers as to the Executive Powers which can, according to English Law, be conferred on the Special Commissioner sent to Samoa.

Executive powers of Special Commissioner to Samoa.

WE do not think that any difficulty can arise or any question be properly raised in respect of any action taken by the three Commissioners against subjects of other nations than those of the three Powers appointing the Commissioners. The case is different from that of the New Hebrides, and as far as we know without exact precedent. The three Powers parties to the Berlin Act establish by means of the three Commissioners a Provisional Government with full executive authority. This authority must include any measures necessarily taken for the restoration of peace and good order, including, if necessary, the punishment of persons endangering or preventing the restoration of peace. The Acts of the Commissioners would be regarded as Acts of State, and no action could be brought in respect of any punishment inflicted by the Commissioners upon a Samoan or upon a subject of any nation other than the three Powers.

As regards action against British subjects or the subjects of Germany or the United States, the question is more difficult, but in case of extreme necessity, as, for instance, putting down armed resistance or riot, any necessary exercise of force could, we think, be justified.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, January 28, 1899.

Production of F. O. papers in Lord Mayor's Court respecting importation of arms into Persia.

I AM directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to a request which has been made by Messrs. Stacpoole, Batten, and Stacpoole, that, in an action pending before the Lord Mayor's Court at Guildhall, the authenticity of certain letters from this Office respecting the importation of arms into Persia may be proved and the accuracy of the statements in them confirmed.

The circumstances leading to this request are as follows: Messrs. Stacpoole represent Messrs. C. W. Andrews, a Birmingham and London firm of gunmakers, who sold to Messrs. Malcolm, Blunker, and Co., of London, 500 rifles "for forward delivery at an English port." It is admitted that Messrs. Andrews must have known that these arms were purchased for shipment to Muscat or Bushire. 300 out of the 500 rifles were shipped in the steam-ship "Baluchistan," which vessel was seized in December 1897 off Muscat by Her Majesty's ship "Lapwing." Messrs. Malcolm accepted delivery of these 300 rifles and paid for them, but have refused to take delivery of the remaining 200, and plead in an action brought against them by Messrs. Andrews that the plaintiffs entered into such contract in breach of the law laid down by Her Majesty's Government for the regulation of the trade with Persia, and are, therefore, not entitled to enforce the said contract, which is void.

The defendants, having been interrogated upon oath, allege that the law referred to was a Regulation made by order of Her Majesty's Minister for Foreign Affairs on or after the 12th December, 1897; that they do not know how, when, or where such Regulation was made or published, except that after the date above mentioned they found that it was known and enforced by the authorities at the ports of London and Manchester, and rendered it impossible to put any arms on board a vessel for importation to Persia.

Messrs. Stacpoole thereupon addressed a letter to this Office, dated the 8th November, 1898 (Paper A), explaining these circumstances, and asking to be supplied with particulars and evidence as to the existence or publication of the Regulation in question.

A reply was returned to them on the 16th November (Paper B) describing the nature of the only Regulations or Notifications in connection with the subject known to this Department, none of which corresponded with the description of the Regulation given in their letter, and stating that the Foreign Office had no knowledge of any Regulation of the character described by them.

Shortly afterwards, in a letter dated the 25th November, the plaintiffs, Messrs. C. W. Andrews, inquired whether there was any restriction as to the shipment to Bunder Abbas of cartridge-filling implements for Martini-Henry rifles and shot-guns (Paper C).

They were informed in reply, on the 2nd December, that as the importation of arms and ammunition into Persia had been prohibited by the Persian Government, it would be necessary to refer the matter to them for decision, and that inquiry would be made through Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran (Paper D). This inquiry was duly made, but no reply has yet been received from Her Majesty's Minister.

Messrs. Stacpoole have now stated in a letter, dated the 18th instant (Paper E), that the defendants in the action refuse to admit the authenticity of the two letters from this Office (Papers B and D), addressed to Messrs. Stacpoole and Messrs. Andrews respectively, and the plaintiffs' solicitors ask that a gentleman may attend the hearing of the action at the Lord Mayor's Court on the 3rd proximo to prove the authenticity of the letters in question and the accuracy of the statements made in them.

Lord Salisbury is of opinion that the request of Messrs. Stacpoole may be complied with to the extent of sending a gentleman from this Office to attend the sitting of the Court with authority to prove the authenticity of the two letters in question by verifying the signatures of the originals now in the hands of Messrs. Stacpoole, and also to produce such documents as it may be considered possible to give without detriment to the public interest in support of the statements made in the letters in question. But his Lordship considers that any evidence which is tendered by this Department in support of those statements should be strictly confined to the production and identification of documents which will speak for themselves as to their own contents, and should not purport to be based on the personal knowledge of the gentleman sent to the Court on behalf of this Office.

The first of the letters (Paper B) enumerates three Regulations or Notifications, which are the only ones known to this Office in connection with the subject.

Firstly, there is a Notification and Proclamation by the Sultan of Muscat, dated the 13th January, 1898.

In proof of this statement, it is proposed to produce official translations of the Persian texts of the Notification and Proclamation respectively, which form two of the inclosures in a despatch addressed by the Political Resident in the Persian Gulf to the Government of India on the 22nd January, 1898 (see Paper F, Inclosure 2, last page). This despatch was communicated by the Viceroy of India to the India Office, whence it was forwarded in a letter to this Department dated the 4th March, 1898 (Paper F).

It is naturally impossible, within the limits of time remaining before the case comes on for hearing, to produce technically conclusive evidence of the accuracy of the translations of these documents; but if it should be necessary to prove the signatures of the Viceroy of India and of the members of the Supreme Council respectively, a gentleman could attend from the India Office for that purpose.

Secondly, reference is made to a Regulation issued by the Persian Government in 1881. No copy of this Regulation exists in the archives of this Department, but it is proposed to produce a despatch from Mr. R. Thomson, at the time Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran, dated the 12th July, 1881, inclosing the translation of a note from the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs announcing that the Shah had issued orders prohibiting the importation of arms into the country (Paper G). In support of the assertion that this prohibition was subsequently renewed, it is proposed to produce a paraphrase of the opening sentence, as marked, of the telegram from Mr. Hardinge, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tehran, of the 26th March, 1898 (Paper H), showing that the Shah reiterated the order of prohibition in 1891.

It is not thought desirable in the public interest to produce the rest of the telegram.

Thirdly, there is a Notice to exporters issued by Her Majesty's Board of Customs on the 26th February, 1898. Although the proof of the genuineness of this Notice should properly be furnished by the Board, Lord Salisbury thinks that probably the Court would regard as sufficient the production of the Notice and the Order accompanying it, as forwarded in the letter from the Treasury to this Office of the 5th March, 1898 (Paper I).

With regard to the letter to Messrs. Andrews of the 2nd December, 1898 (Paper D), no necessity appears to arise for verifying the statements contained in it.

I am to request that you will be good enough to take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury at your earliest convenience with your views as to whether all the papers proposed may be properly produced in the manner suggested, and, if not, whether any of them, and, if so, which should be withheld.

Lord Salisbury would be also glad to receive any general observations which you may wish to offer on the course of procedure to be followed.

In our opinion, all the papers proposed may be properly produced in the manner suggested.

Questions may arise as to the legal sufficiency of the evidence, but this is a matter for the parties.

We think that the Foreign Office does all that can be reasonably expected of it by producing these papers as proposed. The gentleman who attends with them should not give any evidence as to the facts, but only produce the papers.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, August 5, 1899.

Gentlemen,

Issue of bank notes in violation of Concession to Imperial Bank.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit the papers noted in the accompanying list relating to the issue of paper money by various Associations in Persia, which is held to constitute an infringement of the Concession signed in 1889 by the Persian Government granting to the Imperial Bank of Persia the monopoly of the issue of notes throughout that country.

Under the terms of Article 3 of this Concession (Paper A) the Imperial Bank, as the State Bank, was to have the exclusive right of issuing notes to bearer payable at sight; and the Persian Government engaged not to issue any kind of paper money during the term of the Concession, nor to authorize the creation of any other bank or other institution possessing a like privilege.

In a despatch dated the 16th February last (Paper B) Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran brought the question of the issue of native notes to Lord Salisbury's notice, and an inclosure to that despatch shows that as early as 1892 the Manager of the local branch of the bank at Shiraz called the attention of the Chief Manager in Tehran to the fact that bank notes were being issued by a firm calling itself the "Fars Trading Company."

In January 1893 the Chief Manager protested officially to the Sadr Azam against what he considered as an infringement of the Bank Concession, at the same time forwarding to his Highness a specimen of the notes issued by the Fars Trading Company. The Persian Government accordingly sent orders on the 21st January, 1893, to Shiraz to stop the illegal issue of notes, but their instructions were evaded and soon became a dead letter. On the 26th December, 1895, the matter was placed by the Bank in the hands of Her Majesty's Legation.

During the next three years the Bank made repeated representations, both through Her Majesty's Legation and direct to the Persian Government, but although stringent orders were sent from Tehran the issue of notes by firms other than the Imperial Bank continues in many of the principal towns of Persia.

In February last, all representations to the Persian Government proving to be useless, Sir M. Durand recommended (Paper B) that, as the case involved serious injustice to the Bank, a formal demand should be presented to the Persian Government for the withdrawal of all bank notes issued by firms other than the Imperial Bank, and suggested that a period of one month might be fixed within which the withdrawal should take place.

On the 31st March last Sir M. Durand was authorized by telegraph (Paper C) to make the demand he proposed, but to extend the period during which the withdrawal of notes was to take place to two months instead of one month. At the same time he was not to pledge himself to any ulterior action.

Meanwhile, a letter was addressed to the Bank asking for further details (Paper D), and requesting that, if possible, some specimens of the notes complained of might be furnished for Lord Salisbury's inspection.

On the 21st July last the Imperial Bank of Persia forwarded an extract (Paper E) of a letter from their Acting Manager at Tehran with specimens of the notes, and reported that they were still largely in circulation at Shiraz and Bushire.

On the 27th July Sir M. Durand (Paper F) reported by telegraph that the Persian Government admitted that the notes issued at Bushire and by the Fars Trading Company were illegal, and declared their firm resolution to suppress all notes having the appearance and character of bank notes. The Persian Government, however, gave no definition of a bank note, and proposed to authorize firms to issue to holders of illegal notes, in place of such notes, others payable to bearer on demand and not requiring endorsement. Sir M. Durand refused to concur in this proposal, and has submitted the matter to the decision of Lord Salisbury.

Lord Salisbury feels some doubt whether the failure of the Persian Government to restrain by penalty the native Trading Companies from issuing these notes does, in fact, constitute an infraction of the Concession. He is rather disposed to interpret the wording of the Concession as limiting to the Imperial Bank of Persia the right of issuing notes which are legal tender, and thinks that it would even be a strained interpretation of the text to construe it as meaning that no promissory notes other than those issued by the Imperial Bank should be enforceable on the issuer in a court of law. But in Lord Salisbury's opinion, as at present advised, the further contention that it is now illegal and a punishable offence for any one to negotiate or sign a transferable cheque in Persia except the Imperial Bank would be altogether outside the language of the Concession.

I am to request that you will take the papers herewith transmitted into your consideration, and that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion on these points, and on the question whether Her Majesty's Government have sufficient grounds for objecting to the failure of the Persian Government to punish the acts referred to. Lord Salisbury would be glad also to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case, and on the principles by which Her Majesty's Government should be guided in regard to it.

Report.

The 3rd Article of the Concession appears to us to relate only to the issue of bank notes, i.e., notes to bearer at sight issued by a person carrying on the business of banking.

No bank other than the Imperial Bank is to issue such notes; they are to be legal tender, and the Government is not to issue, or authorize any other institution to issue, paper money. This seems to us to be the effect of the 3rd Article.

As regards its restriction on other bankers, it is analogous to the restriction imposed in England by Statute upon bankers other than the Bank of England.

It does not invalidate promissory notes issued by other persons, nor does it interfere with transferable cheques given in the ordinary course of business. The whole effect of the Article is to prevent other banks from competing with the Imperial Bank as banks of issue, and to make the notes of the Imperial Bank the only paper money which is legal tender.

It would appear from the statement of facts that the notes complained of are not mere promissory notes given in payment for goods, or similar mercantile transactions, but are issued by persons who, whether they call themselves bankers or not, are, in fact, carrying on the business of banking, and for circulation as bank notes.

We therefore think that the Concession is being violated by the permission of the issue of these notes, and that Her Majesty's Government have sufficient ground for objecting to the failure of the Persian Government to prevent the continuance of the acts referred to.

No. 46.

[February 8, 1899.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, January 24, 1899.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith the papers, as noted in the accompanying list, relating to the question of registration in Siam, in connection with which a Report was furnished by you on the 31st July, 1897. (Print No. 18, p. 24.) Registration in Siam.

I am in the first place to invite your attention to the instructions addressed to Mr. Greville, Her Majesty's Minister Resident and Consul-General in Siam, on the 14th September, 1897, and to his reply of the 18th February last, which will be found in Nos. 26 and 41 on pp. 28 and 36 of the printed Papers (B) respectively.

Upon receipt of this last-mentioned despatch from Mr. Greville fresh instructions were drafted in this Department, which will be found on p. 43 of the print. These instructions were first submitted for the concurrence of the Secretary of State for India in Council and of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, whose views and observations will be found in the letters of September 14th and 22nd, respectively Nos. 44 and 45 of printed Papers, pp. 45 and 46.

Certain controversial questions arose in consequence with respect to the registration of the wives of British subjects of Asiatic origin, and of their issue born in Siam, and they will be found set out in Mr. Robertson's Memorandum of the 7th November (Paper C), and succinctly summarized in Sir Martin Gosselin's Memorandum of the same date (Paper D).

By Lord Salisbury's direction, these points were referred for the decision of the Lord Chancellor on the 18th November, 1898 (see Paper E). His Lordship's opinion, dated the 10th instant, is also inclosed (see Paper F), and it will be seen, upon reference to Paper (G), that the portion of the draft instructions to Mr. Greville, which relates to this part of the subject, has been amended in accordance with it.

The paragraph which has been inserted in consequence may therefore be looked upon as definitively settled.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion—

1. As to whether you concur in the changes which it is proposed in Paper (C) to make in Rule 4 of the Regulations (see Paper H); and

2. Whether, subject to any specific alterations you may think it desirable to suggest, you concur generally in the terms of the proposed instructions to Mr. Greville.

Report.

We concur in the changes which it is proposed to make in Rule 4 of the Regulations,* subject to the alteration which we have inserted.†

2. In other respects we concur in the proposed despatch, subject to the following observations:—

We think that these Regulations should be embodied in an Order in Council. They cut down the right to be registered as British subjects in the case of delay in the application, and in the case of those born in Siam of the second generation of Asiatic parents. This seems to us to go rather beyond the scope of Regulations under the Order in Council. It might be contended that such Regulations are ultra vires, and we think it would be better that there should be a Supplementary Order in Council embodying them, in which the case of those entitled to be registered as British-protected persons, as distinguished from British subjects strictly so-called, might also be dealt with.

Annex.

Draft Rules for Guidance of Her Majesty's Consular Officers in Siam in regard to Registration.

PERSONS, other than those of Asiatic descent, entering Siam, and applying to be registered as British subjects, shall be registered at the discretion of Her Majesty's Consul or Vice-Consul after such inquiry as he deems fit.

2. The children and grand-children of natural-born British subjects, other than persons of Asiatic descent, registered as British subjects, shall also be registered as British subjects, provided always that they are entitled to such status in contemplation of English law. No illegitimate child of a natural-born British subject shall be registered as a British subject.

3. Persons of Asiatic descent, provided with a passport as British subjects from British India, or a British Colony, entering Siam shall be registered as British subjects, provided that if they fail to register themselves within one month after their arrival, in accordance with Article 94 of "The Siam Order in Council, 1889," they shall not be so registered unless they can excuse their failure to so register themselves to the satisfaction of Her Majesty's Consul or Vice-Consul.

4. Persons of Asiatic descent entering Siam unprovided with a passport shall be registered as British subjects on their filing an affidavit or sworn declaration with any other proof which Her Majesty's Consul or Vice-Consul may require, showing that they were born within the Queen's dominions, or within the territory of any Prince or State in India under the suzerainty of, or in alliance with, the Queen, or naturalized within the United Kingdom, and containing such other particulars as Her Majesty's Consul or Vice-Consul may require, provided that natives of Upper Burmah or the British Shan States shall not be registered as British subjects, if it appears that they became domiciled in Siam before the 1st January, 1886, and that they do not intend to return to their respective countries of origin, and do not own property there.

5. Persons of Asiatic descent entering Siam unprovided with a passport, and failing to register themselves within one month after their arrival, in accordance with Article 94 of "The Siam Order in Council, 1889," shall be registered as British subjects if they can excuse their failure to so register themselves to the satisfaction of Her Majesty's Consul or Vice-Consul, provided that any such person applies to be registered as a British subject only. After the institution of a complaint, action, or prosecution against him, Her Majesty's Consul or Vice-Consul may refuse to register him as a British subject.

6. Widows of persons of Asiatic descent registered as British subjects shall themselves be registered as British subjects if their name appears on the husband's certificate before his death.

7. The sons born in Siam of persons of Asiatic descent, registered as British subjects, shall be registered as British subjects if their birth occurred subsequently to the date of their father's registration, and they may be registered as British subjects notwithstanding the non-registration or tardy registration of the father, if it appears that owing to special causes it was not in the father's power to obtain registration at all or previously to his son's birth.

8. The lists kept at Her Britannic Majesty's Consulates in Siam shall be open to the inspection of a properly authorized Representative of the Siamese Government on proper notice being given, and if the Siamese Government itself claim jurisdiction over any person of Asiatic descent whose name is inscribed in the said lists as a British subject, an inquiry shall be likewise held, under the provisions of Article 9, to determine the jurisdiction under which the person of Asiatic descent in question properly falls.

9. The inquiry contemplated in Clause 8 shall be held at Her Britannic Majesty's Consulate by Her Britannic Majesty's Consul-General; and a Representative of the Siamese Government shall be invited to attend.

If the person, in respect of whom the inquiry is held, come within the conditions for registration laid down in the preceding clauses, he may, if not yet registered, forthwith be registered as a British subject and provided with a certificate of registration at Her Britannic Majesty's Consulate; otherwise he shall be recognized as falling under Siamese jurisdiction, and if already on the lists of Her Britannic Majesty's Consulate his name shall be erased.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, April 14, 1899.

Gentlemen,

Imprisonment of A. Quintal, a Portuguese, in British Consular gaol, and his forcible removal in a British ship.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the correspondence, noted in the inclosed list, relative to the case of one Antonio Quintal, in connection with which a question has arisen as to the legality or correctness of certain proceedings on the part of Her Majesty's Consul at Bangkok.

The facts of the case, so far as they are material to the question at issue, may be briefly stated as follows:—

Antonio Quintal, apparently a Portuguese subject resident at Bangkok, having been cited for some offence before the Portuguese Consular Court at that place, was ordered by the presiding Consul-General to be removed to Macao—whether in execution of a sentence of deportation, or for the purpose of undergoing trial before a higher Court at Macao, is not quite clear.

It appears that there is no Portuguese Consular gaol at Bangkok, and that Portuguese ships do not visit that place except on very rare occasions, so that the Portuguese Consular Court had at its disposal no means of giving effect to its own decision. With a view, therefore, of getting this order carried out, and of securing the man's detention pending removal, the Portuguese Consul-General had recourse to the good offices of Her Majesty's Consul, Mr. Archer, who was accordingly asked to issue a warrant to the master of any British ship which might be available, directing him to convey Quintal to Hong Kong, whence, with the assistance of the British Colonial authorities, he would be handed over to the Macao police. Pending the issue of such warrant, it was requested that Quintal should be imprisoned in the British Consular gaol.

To these requests Mr. Archer acceded. Quintal was lodged in the Consular gaol and subsequently sent in charge of the (British) Consular Constable on board a British steamer, and delivered to the Captain with a warrant, of which a copy is annexed to Consul Archer's Report inclosed in Mr. Greville's despatch No. 12, Consular, of the 1st July, 1898.

In a subsequent despatch (forwarded by Her Majesty's Minister on the 8th February last) Consul Archer quotes a number of precedents in support of the correctness of the action taken by him as regards the temporary detention of Quintal in the gaol of the Consulate, as well as the issue of the warrant to the Captain of the British ship, and explains that in complying with requests of this kind made from time to time by foreign Consular Officers at Bangkok, he and his predecessors had thought they were fulfilling an obligation of international courtesy, and had acted not in the capacity of judicial officers exercising the functions vested in them under British Orders in Council, but in virtue of the general authority inherent in the Consular office.

Lord Salisbury is, however, doubtful whether the explanations furnished and the precedents quoted can be held to be sufficient warrant for proceedings which involve the imprisonment in a British Consular gaol, and the forcible removal in a British ship, of a foreign subject, by one of Her Majesty's Consuls, acting not under the authority and in the execution of a Judgment or Order duly pronounced by a British Consular, or other competent British Court of Law, but solely at the private request of a foreign Consular Officer.

I am accordingly to ask that you will take the matter into your consideration and favour his Lordship with your opinion as to—

1. Whether the action of Her Majesty's Consul in ordering the imprisonment and deportation of a foreign subject in the circumstances described, is such as should receive the approval of the Secretary of State; and, in the event of your answer to the foregoing question being in the negative;

2. Whether you can suggest some other mode of procedure on the part of Her Majesty's Consuls, which would not be open to the same objection, and by adopting which they might yet be able to meet, at least in a measure, the wishes of such of their foreign colleagues as may in future apply to them for assistance in similar circumstances.

I have, &c.

Report.

We are of opinion that there is no substantial objection to the course pursued with reference to the detention of prisoners of other nationalities in the Consular prison at Bangkok. The use of the prison for this purpose is given to the Consular authorities of the nation to which prisoner belongs. It ought, however, to be made clear in the answer to any such applications that the detention by the gaoler will be upon the warrant of the foreign Power, and not under the orders of Her Majesty's Consul, who merely permits such power to use the British gaol for this purpose.

The warrant of the authorities of the prisoner's nation would be a complete answer to any application for a habeas corpus, if such an application were possible.

We think that the course taken in issuing a warrant for the deportation of the foreign prisoner is objectionable. The British Consul has no authority to issue any such warrant to the master of a British ship.

There is no valid objection to the course taken in 1892 so far as the deportation to Hong Kong is concerned. In cases of urgent necessity the British Consul may properly use his friendly offices on behalf of a foreign Power to secure the carriage of a prisoner in a British ship to another port, but he ought not to issue any warrant or order for the purpose. The transport must be effected solely on the responsibility, at the expense, and under the indemnity of the Foreign Consul.

SPAIN.

No. 48.

[February 10, 1899.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, January 31, 1899.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith the papers enumerated in the accompanying list, with reference to the claim of the Western Railway of Havana (Limited) against the Spanish Government on account of the damage occasioned to their property in Cuba during the insurrection in that island.

Claim of Western Railway of Havana on Spanish Govt. for damages during insurrection.

On the 17th January, 1896, the Company brought to the notice of the Secretary of State (Paper A) the injury that was being done to their property by the insurgents in Cuba, with a view to proper steps being taken, when the time should arrive, to protect the Company's interests and to secure to them compensation. They were informed, in reply (Paper B), that Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in supporting any claim on behalf of the Company unless it could be shown that the Spanish Government had given compensation in similar circumstances to its own subjects or the subjects of other countries.

In a further letter the Company endeavoured to establish the fact that the Spanish Government has granted compensation in similar cases; and they stated that Spain in such matters acts upon the principle of reciprocity, and that, as damages done by riots and tumults in England are compensated, "the Spanish Government would wish, as regards an English Company, to do the like."

The letters of the Company were referred to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Madrid, and in his Excellency's despatch No. 59 of the 15th March, 1896 (Paper D), will be found inclosed the opinion of Señor Azcarate, the Legal Adviser of the Embassy, to the effect that the Company has no right whatever to claim from the Spanish Government any indemnity for the damages caused by the Cuban rebels, but that at the conclusion of the war they might, with other parties who had suffered damage, solicit that an indemnity analogous to that granted on other occasions in similar circumstances be conceded to them as an act of grace.

On the 14th January, 1897, the Company once more (Paper E) called attention to their losses. They complained of the refusal of certain Judges in Cuba to allow them to lodge notarial protests putting on record the amount of the damages sustained, and they expressed a hope that their claim would be transmitted to the Spanish Government with due recommendation thereof.

On the 20th May of the same year (Paper F) the Company forwarded extracts from a Petition presented by their Manager to the Governor-General of Cuba setting forth their losses, and requesting that an order might be given for payment.

These papers also were forwarded to Sir H. D. Wolff, who, in his despatch No. 175 of the 6th July, 1897 (Paper G), transmitted further opinions by Señor Azcarate, adhering to the views he had previously expressed, and pointing out that there was no ground for representations on account of the denial of justice alleged by the Company by reason of the action of the Judges in Cuba.

The Company were informed of the purport of the views held by Señor Azcarate, but, as it was understood that they were in possession of legal opinions to a contrary effect, an assurance was given that, if they would communicate them, the whole case would be reconsidered in the light of those opinions, with a view, if necessary, to its submission to you.

The Company have since (Paper H) forwarded a Memorandum setting forth in detail the arguments upon which they rely in support of their claim to compensation as a matter of right; and they have also transmitted (Paper J) the legal opinion above referred to.

Briefly stated the arguments appear to be—

(a.) That Spanish subjects would in this country be entitled to compensation for losses sustained in similar circumstances; and that on the score of reciprocity British subjects are consequently entitled to compensation in Spain;

(β.) That the Spanish Government have in similar circumstances granted compensation; and (γ.) That the losses inflicted on the Company by the insurgents were in a large measure due to the action of the Spanish authorities.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the claim of the Company is one which Her Majesty's Government would be justified in supporting; and that you will be good enough to make in your Report any comments or observations which in your judgment may be of assistance to his Lordship in arriving at a decision on the case.

Report.

It must be remembered that the Company have no greater rights against the Spanish Government than a Spanish Company or subject would have had. We think, therefore, that the Company should be required to satisfy Her Majesty's Government that redress by legal proceedings in the Spanish Courts, or by other ordinary procedure, is impossible.

The Counsel to the Spanish Embassy advises that no such proceedings will lie, but a good many of the statements in the argument presented on behalf of the Company appear to suggest that there is a liability on the Spanish Government to indemnify the Company by Spanish law. It was probably, however, not intended to assert that this liability could be enforced by legal proceedings. If it be made clear that such legal proceedings are impossible, we think that Her Majesty's Government may properly make informal representations to the Spanish Government in support of the Company's claim.

The damage to the Company's property was the result of the use made by the Spanish military authorities of the railway line. It is stated that when the Spanish Government so used the line they knew that it was probable, if not certain, that the rebels would destroy the permanent way and the plant of the Company, in consequence of the use that the Government were making of them. We think that under these circumstances, there is ground for a claim to compensation analogous to the right to payment which exists when the "droit d'angarie" is enforced against the property of foreigners.

We think that representations should in the first instance be informal only. It will be a matter for subsequent consideration whether formal diplomatic representations on the subject should be made if the Spanish Government refuse to admit the claim.

Gentlemen,

Claim of Philippines Mineral Syndicate on Spanish Government for destruction of their explosives at Longos.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a letter from the Philippines Mineral Syndicate (Limited),* requesting his Lordship to intervene on their behalf in order to obtain redress from the Spanish Government for the loss incurred by the Syndicate through the seizure and destruction of certain explosives kept by them at their establishment at Longos in Luzon under licence for use in their mines in that island.

In June last the Spanish local authorities seized and destroyed these explosives, which are valued at 260*l*., and a protest against such seizure was made by the representation of the Syndicate before the Acting British Consul at Manila on the 27th October, 1898.

A copy of this protest is inclosed.

The Syndicate represent that the seizures of the explosives has prevented the further working of their mines, and they accordingly claim, in addition to the actual value of the explosives seized, and interest since their destruction at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, a sum of 2,500*l*. for indirect consequential losses.

Lord Salisbury would be disposed to support the claim for the repayment of the actual value of the property, together with 10 per cent. appreciation for compulsory seizure and interest, from the date of seizure to the date of repayment, at the ordinary legal rate prevailing in Luzon. But his Lordship, as at present advised, is disposed to question the propriety of advancing the further demand in respect of indirect consequential losses.

Before, however, formally supporting a claim even for the actual value of the explosives seized, his Lordship is desirous of having the advantage of your advice on the matter; and I am accordingly to request that you will be good enough to take these papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the claim advanced by the Syndicate is one which Her Majesty's Government can properly support to any, and, if so, to what extent.

His Lordship would at the same time be glad to be favoured with any observations of a general nature which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Report.

We are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government may properly support the claim for the value of the dynamite seized, and interest thereon from the date of seizure, but that the claim for losses consequential on the inability to use the dynamite ought not to be supported.

Consolidation of Ottoman Orders in Council.

Foreign Office, May 20, 1899.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to inclose, for your consideration, a revised draft of an Order which has been prepared for the purpose of consolidating and amending "The Ottoman Orders in Council, 1873–1896."

The cancelled type and the italicized type in this draft show respectively the eliminations and additions or amendments which have been made since the date of your Report of the 7th November, 1898.

I am to request that Lord Salisbury may be informed at your early convenience whether, in your opinion, the draft Order, as it now stands, may properly be submitted for the approval of the Queen in Council.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

Report.

As altered and initialled by us, the draft Order in Council may properly be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

(Signed) RICHARD E. WEBSTER.

Annex.

Draft Order in Council as approved by the Law Officers.

[The following words were added by Mr. Gray, subsequent to the approval by the Law Officers:—
In Article 11, after the words, "civil and criminal,"—"including any jurisdiction by this Order conferred expressly on a Provincial Court."]

WHEREAS by Treaty, Capitulation, Grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has jurisdiction within the dominions of the Ottoman Porte:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in Her Majesty vested, is pleased by and with the advice of Her Privy Council to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

PART I.—PRELIMINARY AND GENERAL.

1. This Order is divided into parts, as follows:—

Parts.	Subject.	Articles.
I	Preliminary and General	1—6
II	Constitution and Powers of Courts	7—24
III	Criminal matters	25—62
IV	Civil matters	63—135
V	Procedure, Criminal and Civil	136—149
VI	Ottoman and Foreign Subjects and Tribunals	150—157
VII	Miscellaneous	158—172
	Schedule of Repealed Orders.

2. The limits of this Order are the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, but, as respects Egypt, do not extend to any place south of the 22nd parallel of north latitude; and the expressions "Ottoman Dominions" and "Egypt" shall, for the purposes of this Order, be construed accordingly.

3. In the construction of this Order the following words and expressions have the meanings hereby assigned to them, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant thereto, that is to say:—

"Administration" means letters of administration, including the same with will annexed or granted for special or limited purposes or limited in duration.

"The Ambassador" means Her Majesty's Ambassador, and includes Chargé d'Affaires or other chief Diplomatic Representative of Her Majesty in the Ottoman dominions for the time being.

"Agent for Egypt" means Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General for Egypt, and includes any person temporarily appointed to act for that office.

"British merchant-ship" means a merchant ship being a British ship within the meaning of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894."

"British subject" includes a British protected person, that is to say, a person who either (a) is a native of any Protectorate of Her Majesty, and is for the time being in the Ottoman dominions; or (b) by virtue of Section 15 of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise, enjoys Her Majesty's protection in the Ottoman dominions.

"Consular district" means the district in and for which a Consular officer usually acts, or for which he may be authorized to act, for all or any of the purposes of this Order by authority of the Secretary of State.

"Consular officer" means a Consul-General, Consul, Vice-Consul, Consular Agent, or pro-Consul of Her Majesty resident in the Ottoman dominions, including a person acting temporarily, with the approval of the Secretary of State, as or for a Consul-General, Consul, Vice-Consul, or Consular Agent of Her Majesty so resident; and—

(a.) "Commissioned Consular officer" means a Consular officer holding a commission of Consul-General, Consul, or Vice-Consul from Her Majesty, including a person acting temporarily, with the approval of the Secretary of State, as or for such a commissioned Consular officer;

(b.) "Uncommissioned Consular officer" means a Consular officer not holding such a commission, including a person acting temporarily, with the approval of the Secretary of State, as or for such an uncommissioned Consular officer.

"Consulate" and "Consular office" refer to the Consulate and office of a Consular officer.

"The Court," except when the reference is to a particular Court, means any Court established under this Order, subject, however, to the provisions of this Order with respect to powers and local jurisdictions.

"Foreigner" means a subject or citizen of a State in amity with Her Majesty, other than the Sublime Ottoman Porte.

"Judge," in relation to any Court, includes any person temporarily appointed to act as Judge of that Court.

"Legal practitioner" includes barrister-at-law, advocate, solicitor, writer to the Signet, and any person possessing similar qualifications.

"Lunatic" means idiot or person of unsound mind.

"Master," with respect to any ship, includes every person (except a pilot) having command or charge of that ship.

"Month" means calendar month.

"Oath" and "affidavit" in the case of persons for the time being allowed by law to affirm or declare, instead of swearing, include affirmation and declaration, and the expression "swear," in the like case, includes affirm and declare.

"Offence" includes crime, and any act or omission punishable criminally in a summary way or otherwise.

"Office copy" means a copy made under the direction of the Court, or produced to the proper officer of the Court for examination with the original, and examined by him and sealed with the seal of the Court.

"Ottoman subject" means a subject of the Sublime Ottoman Porte.

"Ottoman Tribunal" means any Ottoman Tribunal of Commerce, Ottoman Civil Tribunal, or Ottoman Maritime Court, or other Ottoman Tribunal.

"Ottoman waters" means the territorial waters of the Ottoman dominions.

"Person" includes Corporation.

"Pounds" means pounds sterling.

"Prescribed" means prescribed by Rules of Court.

"Prosecutor" means complainant or any person appointed or allowed by the Court to prosecute.

"Proved" means shown by evidence on oath, in the form of affidavit, or other form, to the satisfaction of the Court or Consular officer acting or having jurisdiction in the matter, and "proof" means the evidence adduced in that behalf.

"Resident" means having a fixed place of abode in the Ottoman dominions.

"Rules of Court" means rules of Court made under the provisions of this Order.

"Secretary of State" means one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

"Ship" includes any vessel used in navigation, however propelled, with her tackle, furniture, and apparel, and any boat or other craft.

"The Treasury" means the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury.

"Treaty" includes any Convention, Agreement, or Arrangement, made by or on behalf of Her Majesty with any State or Government, King, Chief, people, or tribe, whether His Majesty the Sultan is or is not a party thereto.

"Will" means will. codicil, or other testamentary instrument.

Expressions used in any rules, regulations, or orders made under this Order shall, unless a contrary intention appears, have the same respective meanings as in this Order.

4.—(1.) Words importing the plural or the singular may be construed as referring to one person or thing, or to more than one person or thing, and words importing the masculine as referring to the feminine (as the case may require).

(2.) Where this Order confers any power or imposes any duty, then, unless a contrary intention appears, the power may be exercised and the duty shall be performed from time to time as occasion requires.

(3.) Where this Order confers a power, or imposes a duty on, or with respect to, a holder of an office, as such, then, unless a contrary intention appears, the power may be exercised and the duty shall be performed by, or with respect to, the holder for the time being of the office or the person temporarily acting for the holder.

(4.) Where this Order confers a power to make any rules, regulations, or orders, the power shall, unless a contrary intention appears, be construed as including a power exercisable in the like manner and subject to the like consent and conditions, if any, to rescind, revoke, vary, or amend the rules, regulations, or orders.

(5.) This Article shall apply to the construction of any rules, regulations, or orders made under this Order, unless a contrary intention appears.

5. The jurisdiction conferred by this Order extends to the persons and matters following, in so far as by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, or other lawful means, Her Majesty has jurisdiction in relation to such matters and things, that is to say:—

(i.) British subjects, as herein defined, within the limits of this Order.

(ii.) The property and all personal or proprietary rights and liabilities within the said limits of British subjects, whether such subjects are within the said limits or not.

(iii.) Ottoman subjects and foreigners in the cases and according to the conditions specified in this Order and not otherwise.

(iv.) Foreigners with respect to whom any State, King, Chief, or Government, whose subjects, or under whose protection they are, has by any Treaty as herein defined or otherwise agreed with Her Majesty for, or consents to, the exercise of power or authority by Her Majesty.

(v.) British ships with their boats, and the persons and property on board thereof, or belonging thereto, being within the Ottoman dominions.

6. All Her Majesty's jurisdiction exercisable in the Ottoman dominions for the hearing and determination of criminal or civil matters, or for the maintenance of order, or for the control or administration of persons or property, or in relation thereto, shall be exercised under and according to the provisions of this Order, and not otherwise.

PART II.—CONSTITUTION AND POWERS OF COURTS.

7.—(1.) There shall be a Court styled "Her Britannic Majesty's Supreme Consular Court for the Dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte" (in this Order referred to as the Supreme Court, and comprised in the term "the Court").

(2.) Subject to the provisions of this Order there shall be two Judges of the Supreme Court, that is to say, a Judge, and an Assistant Judge, who shall respectively be appointed by Her Majesty by warrant under Her Royal Sign Manual.

Each shall be at the time of his appointment a member of the Bar of England, Scotland, or Ireland, of not less than seven years' standing.

(3.) Each of the Judges may hold a Commission from Her Majesty as Consul-General or Consul.

(4.) The Judges shall sit together for the purposes described in this Order, and the Supreme Court so constituted is hereinafter in this Order referred to as "the Full Court."

(5.) There shall be attached to the Supreme Court a Registrar, a Marshal, and so many officers and clerks under such designations as the Secretary of State thinks fit; but unless and until the Secretary of State otherwise appoints, the Assistant Judge shall act as Registrar of the Supreme Court.

(6.) In case of the death, illness, or other incapacity, or of the absence or intended absence from the Consular district of Constantinople of either of the Judges, the Ambassador may, if he thinks fit, appoint a fit person to be Acting Judge, or Acting Assistant Judge, as the case may be. If the appointment has to be made to the office of Acting Judge, the Assistant Judge, if present and not incapacitated, shall, unless the Secretary of State otherwise directs, be appointed, and if he is so appointed, the Ambassador may, if he thinks fit, appoint a fit person to act as Assistant Judge.

(7.) The Secretary of State may temporarily attach to the Supreme Court such persons, being Consular officers, as he thinks fit.

A person thus attached shall discharge such duties in connection with the Court as the Judge, with the approval of the Secretary of State, may direct.

8.—(1.) Every commissioned Consular officer, with such exceptions (if any) as the Secretary of State thinks fit to make, shall for and in his own Consular district hold and form a Court, in this Order referred to as a Provincial Court.

(2.) Every uncommissioned Consular officer, with such exceptions (if any) as the Supreme Court, by writing under the hand of the Judge and the seal of that Court, thinks fit to make, shall for and in his own Consular district, subject to the provisions of this Order, hold and form a Court, in this Order referred to as a Local Court.

(3.) Every Provincial and Local Court shall be styled "Her Britannic Majesty's Consular Court at Smyrna" (or as the case may be).

(4.) Every reference in this Order to a Provincial Court in relation to a Local Court shall be deemed to be a reference to a Provincial Court held by the commissioned Consular officer, under whose superintendence the uncommissioned Consular officer holding the Local Court acts.

(5.) Every Provincial Court shall, with the approval of the Supreme Court, and every Local Court may, with the approval of the Provincial Court, appoint a competent person, or persons, to perform such duties and to exercise such powers as are by this Order and any Rules of Court imposed or conferred upon the Registrar and Marshal, and any person so appointed shall perform such duties and exercise such powers accordingly.

9.—(1.) The Secretary of State may, when he thinks fit, under his hand, appoint a competent person to act temporarily as Special Judge of the Supreme Court. He shall be a person qualified to be appointed a Judge of the Supreme Court under this Order.

(2.) The Secretary of State may by order assign any case, civil or criminal, and whether pending at or commenced after the commencement of this Order, to be tried by or before the Special Judge, and in relation to any case so assigned, all the powers, authority, and jurisdiction of the Supreme Court shall be vested in and exercised by the Special Judge, and if the Order so provides, the Judges shall not exercise any jurisdiction therein.

(3.) The Special Judge may, subject to any directions of the Secretary of State, sit in any part of the Ottoman dominions.

(4.) If in any criminal case so assigned the Special Judge is of opinion that a jury or assessors cannot conveniently be obtained, he may act without a jury or assessors.

(5.) If any civil case so assigned, whether before or after the commencement of this Order, is set down for rehearing, the same shall be reheard before the Special Judge, with or without either of the Judges of the Supreme Court, or, when the attendance of the Special Judge seems no longer necessary, before the full Court, as the Secretary of State may by the order or any subsequent order direct.

(6.) The remuneration and expenses of any Special Judge shall be paid as the Secretary of State, with the consent of the Treasury, directs.

10. The Supreme Court shall have a seal, bearing the style of the Court and such device as the Secretary of State approves, but the seal in use at the commencement of this Order shall continue to be used until a new seal is provided.

In each of the Provincial and Local Courts the official seal of the Consular officer shall be used.

11. All Her Majesty's jurisdiction, civil and criminal, including any jurisdiction by this Order conferred, expressly on a Provincial Court, shall for and within the district of the Consulate of Constantinople be vested exclusively in the Supreme Court as its ordinary original jurisdiction.

12. All Her Majesty's jurisdiction, civil and criminal, not under this Order vested exclusively in the Supreme Court, shall to the extent and in the manner provided by this Order be vested in the Provincial and Local Courts.

Provided that as regards all such matters and cases as come within the jurisdiction of any Egyptian Courts established with the concurrence of Her Majesty, the operation of this Order is hereby suspended until Her Majesty by and with the advice of Her Privy Council shall otherwise order.

13. The Supreme Court shall have in all matters, civil and criminal, an original jurisdiction, concurrent with the jurisdiction of the several Provincial and Local Courts, to be exercised subject and according to the provisions of this Order.

14. The Supreme Court shall ordinarily sit at Constantinople and as occasion requires at Alexandria or Cairo; but may, on emergency, sit at any other place within the Ottoman dominions, and may at any time transfer its ordinary sittings to any such place as the Secretary of State approves. Under this Article the Judges may sit at the same time at different places, and each sitting shall be deemed to be a sitting of the Supreme Court.

15.—(1.) The Registrars of the Provincial Courts at Alexandria and Cairo respectively shall be also District Registrars of the Supreme Court.

(2.) They shall, subject to Rules of Court, perform the like duties in respect of proceedings of the Supreme Court pending in their respective District Registries, as are performed by the Registrar of the Supreme Court in respect of proceedings pending in the Registry of the Court at Constantinople.

(3.) Summonses for the commencement of actions in the Supreme Court shall be issued by the District Registrars when thereunto required, and all such further proceedings as might be taken and recorded in the Registry of the Supreme Court at Constantinople may be taken and recorded in the District Registry in any actions pending in such District Registries respectively.

(4.) The exercise of powers and performance of duties by District Registries at Alexandria and Cairo shall be subject to the control and direction of the Provincial Courts of Alexandria and Cairo respectively in the same manner and to the same extent, subject to Rules of Court, as the exercise of powers and performance of duties by the Registrar of the Supreme Court at Constantinople are subject to the control and direction of a Judge of the Supreme Court.

Provided that where a Judge of the Supreme Court is present in Alexandria or Cairo the said control and direction shall be exercised exclusively by such Judge.

16. The Judge or under his directions the Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court may visit, in a magisterial or judicial capacity, any place in the Ottoman dominions, and there inquire of, or hear and determine, any case, civil or criminal, and may examine any records or other documents in any Provincial or Local Court, and give directions as to the keeping thereof.

17. A Provincial Court shall have in all matters, civil and criminal, an original jurisdiction concurrent with the jurisdiction of the several Local Courts (if any) held within its district to be exercised subject and according to the provisions of this Order.

18.—(1.) Where any case, civil or criminal, commenced in a Local Court, appears to that Court to be beyond its jurisdiction, or to be one which for any other reason ought to be tried in the Provincial Court or the Supreme Court, the Local Court shall report the case to the Provincial Court for directions.

(2.) Subject to any directions of the Supreme Court under this Article, a Provincial Court may of its own motion, or on the report of a Local Court, or on the application of any party concerned, require any case, civil or criminal, pending in a Local Court, to be transferred to the Provincial Court, or in the case of any such report or application, may direct that the case shall proceed in the Local Court.

(3.) Where any case, civil or criminal, commenced in a Provincial Court, or reported or transferred to that Court under this Article, appears to the Provincial Court to be beyond its jurisdiction, or to be one which for any other reason ought to be tried in the Supreme Court, the Provincial Court shall report the case to the Supreme Court for directions.

(4.) The Supreme Court may of its own motion, or upon the report of a Provincial Court, or on the application of any party concerned, require any case, civil or criminal, pending in any Provincial or Local Court to be transferred to, or tried in, the Supreme Court, or may direct in what Court and in what mode, subject to the provisions of this Order, any such case shall be tried.

19. The Supreme Court, and each Provincial Court shall, in the exercise of every part of its jurisdiction, be a Court of Record.

20.—(1.) Every Provincial and Local Court shall execute any writ or order issuing from the Supreme Court, and shall take security from any person named in a writ or order for his appearance personally or by attorney, and shall, in default of security being given, or when the Supreme Court so orders, send the person on board one of Her Majesty's vessels of war to Constantinople, or such other port as may be named in the order, or, if no vessel of war is available, then on board some British or other fit vessel.

(2.) The order of the Court shall be sufficient authority to the commander or master of the vessel to receive and detain the person, and deliver him up at the port named according to the order.

21. The Supreme Court, and each Provincial and Local Court, shall be auxiliary to one another in all particulars relative to the administration of justice, civil or criminal.

22. Each Provincial and Local Court shall at such time as may be fixed by rules of Court furnish to the Supreme Court an annual report of every case, civil and criminal, brought before it, in such form as the Supreme Court directs.

The report of a Local Court shall be sent through the Provincial Court.

23. Subject to the provisions of this Order, criminal and civil cases may be tried as follows:—

(a.) In the case of the Supreme Court, by the Court itself, or by the Court with a jury, or with assessors.

(b.) In the case of a Provincial Court, by the Court itself, or by the Court with assessors.

(c.) In the case of a Local Court, by the Court itself, without assessors or jury.

24.—(1.) Notwithstanding anything in this Order, the Court shall not exercise any jurisdiction in any proceeding whatsoever over the Ambassador, or over his official or other residences, or his official or other property.

(2.) Notwithstanding anything in this Order, the Court shall not exercise, except with the consent of the Ambassador signified in writing to the Court, any jurisdiction in any proceeding over any person attached to or being a member of, or in the service of, the Embassy.

(3.) If in any case under this Order it appears to the Court that the attendance of the Ambassador, or of any person attached to or being a member of the Embassy, or being in the service of the Embassy, to give evidence before the Court is requisite in the interest of justice, the Court may address to the Ambassador a request in writing for such attendance.

(4.) A person attending to give evidence before the Court shall not be compelled or allowed to give any evidence or produce any document, if, in the opinion of the Ambassador, signified by him personally or in writing to the Court, the giving or production thereof would be injurious to Her Majesty's service.

(5.) This Article shall apply to Her Majesty's Agency in Egypt, and the foregoing provisions shall for the purpose of this application be read as if "Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General" were substituted for "the Ambassador," and "Agency" for "Embassy," wherever those words respectively occur.

PART III.—CRIMINAL MATTERS.

25.—(1.) Except as regards offences against the Capitulations, Articles of Peace, and Treaties between Her Majesty and the Subline Ottoman Porte, or against any rules and regulations for the observance thereof, or for the maintenance of order among British subjects in the Ottoman dominions, made by or under the authority of Her Majesty, or against any of the provisions of this Order;—

Any act that would not by a Court or Justice having criminal jurisdiction in England be deemed an offence in England, shall not, in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction under this Order, be deemed an offence, or be the subject of any criminal proceeding under this Order.

(2.) Subject to the provisions of this Order, criminal jurisdiction under this Order shall, as far as circumstances admit, be exercised on the principles of, and in conformity with, the statute and other law for the time being in force in and for England, and with the powers vested in the Courts of Justice and Justices of the Peace in England, according to their respective jurisdiction and authority.

26.—(1.) If any person is guilty of an offence against this Order not distinguished as a grave offence against this Order, he is liable, on summary conviction—

(i.) To a fine not exceeding 5*l.*, without any imprisonment; or

(ii.) To imprisonment not exceeding one month, without fine; or

(iii.) To imprisonment not exceeding fourteen days, with a fine not exceeding 50*s.*

(2.) Imprisonment under this Article is without hard labour.

27.—(1.) If any person is guilty of an offence against this Order, distinguished as a grave offence against this Order, he is liable, on summary conviction before the Supreme Court or a Provincial Court—

(i.) To a fine not exceeding 10*l.*, without imprisonment; or

(ii.) To imprisonment not exceeding two months, without fine; or

(iii.) To imprisonment not exceeding one month, with a fine not exceeding 5*l.*

(2.) Imprisonment under this Article is, in the discretion of the Court, with or without hard labour.

28. Every Court may cause to be summoned or arrested, and brought before it, any person subject to, and being within the limits of, its jurisdiction, and charged with having committed an offence cognizable under this Order, and may deal with the accused according to the jurisdiction of the Court and in conformity with the provisions of this Order; or when the offence is liable and is to be tried in England, to take the preliminary examination, and to commit the accused for trial, and cause or allow him to be taken to England.

29. For the purposes of criminal jurisdiction every offence and cause of complaint committed or arising in the Ottoman dominions shall be deemed to have been committed or to have arisen, either in the place where the same actually was committed or arose, or in any place in the Ottoman dominions where the person charged or complained of happens to be at the time of the institution or commencement of the charge or complaint.

30. Where a British subject is charged with the commission of an offence the cognizance whereof appertains to the Court, and it is expedient that the crime or offence be inquired of, tried, determined, and punished within Her Majesty's dominions elsewhere than in England, the accused may (under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," section 6) be sent for trial to Bombay or Malta.

The Supreme Court may, where it appears so expedient, by warrant under the hand of the Judge and the seal of the Court, cause the accused to be sent for trial to Bombay or Malta accordingly.

The warrant shall be sufficient authority to any person to whom it is directed to receive and detain the person therein named, and to carry him to and deliver him up to Bombay or to Malta (as the case may be), according to the warrant.

Where any person is to be so sent to Bombay or to Malta, the Court before which he is charged shall take the preliminary examination, and shall bind over such of the proper witnesses as are British subjects in their own recognizances to appear and give evidence on the trial.

31.—(1.) The Supreme Court may adjudge punishment as follows:—

(a.) Imprisonment, not exceeding twenty years, with or without hard labour, and with or without a fine not exceeding 500*l.*; or

(b.) A fine not exceeding 500*l.*, without imprisonment; and

(c.) In case of a continuing offence, in addition to imprisonment or fine, or both, a fine not exceeding 1*l.* for each day during which the offence continues after the day of the commission of the original offence.

(2.) A Provincial Court may adjudge punishment as follows:—

Imprisonment not exceeding twelve months, with or without hard labour, and with or without a fine not exceeding 50*l.*; or

A fine not exceeding 50*l.*, without imprisonment.

(3.) A Local Court may adjudge punishment as follows:—

A fine not exceeding 5*l.*, without imprisonment; provided that a Local Court shall not hear and determine any charge unless the offence is punishable on summary conviction.

32.—(1.) Every accused person shall be tried upon a charge, which shall state the offence charged, with such particulars as to the time and place of the alleged offence, and the person (if any) against whom or the thing (if any) in respect of which it was committed, as are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged.

(2.) The fact that a charge is made is equivalent to a statement that every legal condition required by law to constitute the offence charged was fulfilled in the particular case.

(3.) Where the nature of the case is such that the particulars above mentioned do not give such sufficient notice as aforesaid, the charge shall also contain such particulars of the manner in which the alleged offence was committed as will give such sufficient notice.

33. For every distinct offence of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge, and every such charge shall be tried separately, except in the cases following, that is to say—

(a.) Where a person is accused of more offences than one of the same kind committed within the space of twelve months from the first to the last of such offences he may be charged with, and tried at one trial for any number of them not exceeding three.

(b.) If in one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction more offences than one are committed by the same person, he may be charged with and tried at one trial for every such offence.

(c.) If the acts alleged constitute an offence falling within two or more definitions or descriptions of offences in any law or laws, the accused may be charged with, and tried at one trial for each of such offences.

(d.) If several acts constitute several offences, and also, when combined, a different offence, the accused may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, the offence constituted by such acts when combined, or one or more of the several offences, but in the latter case shall not be punished with more severe punishment than the Court which tries him could award for any one of these offences.

(e.) If a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences, and any number of such charges may be tried at once; or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the offences; and if it appears in evidence that he has committed a different offence for which he might have been charged, he may be convicted of that offence, although not charged with it.

34. When more persons than one are accused of the same offence or of different offences committed in the same transaction, or when one is accused of committing an offence and another of abetting or attempting to commit that offence, they may be charged and tried together or separately, as the Court thinks fit.

35.—(1.) Any Court, if sitting with a jury or assessors, may alter any charge at any time before the verdict of the jury is returned or the opinions of the assessors are expressed; if sitting without jury or assessors, at any time before judgment is pronounced.

(2.) Every such alteration shall be read and explained to the accused.

(3.) If the altered charge is such that proceeding with the trial immediately is likely, in the opinion of the Court, to prejudice the accused or the prosecutor, the Court may adjourn the trial for such period as may be necessary.

36.—(1.) No error or omission in stating either the offence or the particulars shall be regarded at any stage of the case as material, unless the accused was misled by such error or omission.

(2.) When the facts alleged in certain particulars are proved and constitute an offence, and the remaining particulars are not proved, the accused may be convicted of the offence constituted by the facts proved, although not charged with it.

(3.) When a person is charged with an offence and the evidence proves either the commission of a minor offence, or an attempt to commit the offence charged, he may be convicted of the minor offence or of the attempt.

37.—(1.) If the accused has been previously convicted of any offence, and it is intended to prove such conviction for the purpose of affecting the punishment which the Court is competent to award, the fact, date, and place of the previous conviction shall be stated in the charge.

(2.) If such statement is omitted, the Court may add it at any time before sentence is passed.

(3.) The part of the charge stating the previous conviction shall not be read out in Court, nor shall the accused be asked whether he has been previously convicted, as alleged in the charge, unless and until he has either pleaded guilty to, or been convicted of, the subsequent offence.

(4.) If he pleads guilty to, or is convicted of, the subsequent offence, he shall then be asked whether he has been previously convicted, as alleged in the charge.

(5.) If he answers that he has been so previously convicted, the Court may proceed to pass sentence on him accordingly, but, if he denies that he has been so previously convicted, or refuses to, or does not, answer such question, the Court shall then inquire concerning such previous conviction, and in such case (where the trial is by jury) it shall not be necessary to swear the jurors again.

38.—(1.) In each of the two following cases, namely:—

(i.) Where the offence charged is felony; or,

(ii.) When it appears to the Court at any time before the trial, the opinion of the Court being recorded in the Minutes, that the offence charged, if proved, would not be adequately punished by imprisonment for three months with hard labour, or by a fine of 20*l.*, or both such imprisonment and fine—

The charge shall be triable with a jury or assessors (according to the provisions of this Order applicable to the Court); but may, with the consent of the accused, be tried without assessors or jury. In the Supreme Court, when the accused does not so consent, the charge shall be tried with a jury, unless the Court is of opinion that a jury cannot be obtained.

(2.) The Supreme Court may, for any special reason, direct that any case shall be tried with assessors or a jury, and a Provincial Court may, for any special reason, direct that any case shall be tried with assessors. In each such case the special reason shall be recorded in the Minutes.

39.—(1.) The Registrar of the Supreme Court when the duties of that officer are not performed by the Assistant Judge shall, subject to any directions of the Supreme Court, hear and determine such criminal cases in that Court as may, under this Order, be heard and determined without assessors or jury, and for this purpose shall exercise all the powers and jurisdiction of a Provincial Court.

(2.) The officer performing the duties of Registrar, in a Provincial or Local Court, shall, when required by the Court, act as public prosecutor, and conduct the prosecution in any criminal case.

40.—(1.) Where a charge made in a Provincial or Local Court appears to that Court to be one which ought under the provisions of this Order to be reported, the Provincial or Local Court shall proceed to make a preliminary examination of the charge in the prescribed manner, and shall send the depositions and a Minute of other evidence (if any) together with its Report, in the case of a Provincial Court, to the Supreme Court, or in the case of a Local Court, to the Provincial Court.

(2.) Where a charge, reported to a Provincial Court under this Article appears to that Court to be one which ought to be reported to the Supreme Court, the Provincial Court shall send the depositions, Minutes, and Report of the Local Court, with a covering Report, to the Supreme Court.

41.—(1.) Where a person charged with an offence is arrested on warrant issuing out of any Court, he shall be brought before the Court within forty-eight hours after the execution of the warrant, unless in any case circumstances unavoidably prevent his being brought before the Court within that time, which circumstances shall be recorded in the Minutes.

(2.) In every case, he shall be brought before the Court as soon as circumstances reasonably admit, and the time and circumstances shall be recorded in the Minutes.

42.—(1.) Where the accused is ordered to be tried before a Court with a jury or with assessors, he shall be tried as soon after the making of the order as circumstances reasonably admit.

(2.) As long notice of the time of trial as circumstances reasonably admit shall be given to him in writing, under the seal of the Court, which notice, and the time thereof, shall be recorded in the Minutes.

43.—(1.) Where an accused person is in custody, he shall not be remanded at any time for more than seven days, unless circumstances appear to the Court to make it necessary or proper that he should be remanded for a longer time, which circumstances, and the time of remand, shall be recorded in the Minutes.

(2.) In no case shall a remand be for more than fourteen days at one time, unless in case of illness of the accused or other case of necessity.

44.—(1.) The Court may in its discretion, admit to bail a person charged with any of the following offences, namely:—

Any felony.

Riot.

Assault on any officer in the execution of his duty, or on any person acting in his aid.

Neglect or breach of duty by an officer.

But a person charged with treason or murder shall not be admitted to bail except by the Supreme Court.

(2.) In all other cases the Court shall admit the accused to bail unless the Court, having regard to the circumstances, sees good reason to the contrary, which reason shall be recorded in the Minutes.

(3.) The Supreme Court may admit a person to bail although a Provincial or Local Court has not thought fit to do so.

(4.) The accused who is to be admitted to bail, either on remand or on or after trial ordered, shall produce such surety or sureties as, in the opinion of the Court, will be sufficient to insure his appearance as and when required, and shall with him or them enter into a recognizance accordingly.

45.—(1.) Where after a preliminary examination the accused is ordered to be tried, the Court shall bind by recognizance the prosecutor and every witness to appear at the trial to prosecute, or to prosecute and give evidence, or to give evidence (as the case may be).

(2.) If a British subject refuses to enter into such recognizance the Court may send him to prison, there to remain until after the trial, unless in the meantime he enters into a recognizance.

(3.) But if afterwards, from want of sufficient evidence or other cause, the accused is discharged, the Court shall order that the person imprisoned for so refusing be also discharged.

(4.) Where the prosecutor or witness is not a British subject, the Court may require him either to enter into a recognizance or to give other security for his attendance at the trial, and if he fails to do so may in its discretion dismiss the charge.

46.—(1.) Where an accused person is convicted of murder, the proper officer of the Supreme Court, under the direction of the presiding Judge, shall, in open Court require the offender to state if he has anything to say why judgment of death should not be recorded against him.

(2.) If the offender does not allege anything that would be sufficient in law to prevent judgment of death if the offence and trial had been committed and had in England, the Judge may order that judgment of death be entered on record.

(3.) Thereupon the proper officer shall enter judgment of death on record against the offender, as if judgment of death had been actually pronounced on him in open Court by the Judge.

(4.) The presiding Judge shall forthwith send a Report of the Judgment, together with a copy of the Minutes and of the notes of evidence and any observations which he thinks fit to make, to the Secretary of State for his direction respecting the punishment to be actually imposed.

(5.) The punishment actually imposed shall not in any case exceed the measure of imprisonment and fine which the Supreme Court is empowered by this Order to impose.

47.—(1.) The Court may, if it thinks fit, order a person convicted of an assault to pay to the person assaulted by way of damages any sum not exceeding 10*l*.

(2.) Damages so ordered to be paid may be either in addition to or in lieu of a fine, and shall be recoverable in like manner as a fine.

(3.) Payment of such damages shall be a defence to an action for the assault.

48.—(1.) The Court may, if it thinks fit, order a person convicted before it to pay all or part of the expenses of his prosecution, or of his imprisonment or other punishment, or of both the amount being specified in the order.

(2.) Where it appears to the Court that the charge is malicious, or frivolous and vexatious, the Court may, if it thinks fit, order the complainant to pay all or part of the expenses of the prosecution, the amount being specified in the order.

(3.) In these respective cases the Court may, if it thinks fit, order that the whole or such portion as the Court thinks fit of the expenses so paid be paid over to the complainant or to the accused (as the case may be).

(4.) In all cases the reasons of the Court for making any such order, or for refusing it if applied for, shall be recorded in the Minutes.

49. Subject to Rules of Court made under this Order, the Court may order payment of the reasonable expenses of any complainant or witness attending before the Court on the trial of any criminal case by a jury or with assessors, and also of the reasonable expenses of the jury or assessors.

50.—(1.) The Supreme Court may by general order approved by the Secretary of State prescribe the manner in which, and the prisons in the Ottoman dominions at which, unishments passed by any Court or otherwise awarded under this Order are to be carried into execution.

(2.) The warrant of any Court shall be sufficient authority to any person to whom it is directed to receive and detain the person therein named in any prison so prescribed.

51.—(1.) Where an offender is sentenced to imprisonment, and the Supreme Court thinks it expedient that the sentence be carried into effect within Her Majesty's dominions, and the offender is accordingly, under section 7 of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," sent for imprisonment to a place in Her Majesty's dominions, the place shall be either Malta or Gibraltar, or a place in some other part of Her Majesty's dominions out of the United Kingdom, the Government whereof consents that offenders may be sent thither under this Article.

(2.) The Supreme Court may, by warrant under the hand of a Judge and the seal of the Court, cause the offender to be sent to Malta or Gibraltar, or other such place as aforesaid, in order that the sentence may be there carried into effect accordingly.

(3.) The warrant shall be sufficient authority to any person to whom it is directed to receive and detain the person therein named and to carry him to and deliver him up at the place named, according to the warrant.

52. "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881," and "The Colonial Prisoners Removal Act, 1884," shall apply to Egypt and to the Ottoman dominions other than Egypt as if those places were respectively British possessions and parts of Her Majesty's dominions.

Subject as follows :—

(a.) As respects Egypt, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General, and as respects the Ottoman dominions (other than Egypt), the Ambassador at Constantinople is hereby substituted for the Governor or Government of a British possession.

(b.) The Supreme Court, or in Egypt, during the absence of a Judge of the Supreme Court, the Provincial Court at Alexandria is hereby substituted for a Superior Court of a British possession.

(c.) The Supreme Court and each Provincial Court is substituted for a Magistrate of any part of Her Majesty's dominions.

(d.) For the purposes of Part II of the said Act of 1881, and of this Article in relation thereto, the Ottoman dominions and Malta and Gibraltar shall be deemed to be one group of British possessions.

53.—(1.) The Supreme Court may, if it thinks fit, report to the Secretary of State recommending a mitigation or remission of any punishment awarded by any Court; and thereupon the punishment may be mitigated or remitted by the Secretary of State.

(2.) Nothing in this Order shall affect Her Majesty's prerogative of pardon.

54. Where a person charged with an offence escapes or removes from the Consular district within which the offence was committed and is found within another Consular district, the Court within whose district he is found may proceed in the case to trial and punishment, or to preliminary examination (as the case may require), in like manner as if the offence had been committed in its own district; or may, on the requisition or with the consent of the Court within whose district the offence was committed, send him in custody to that Court, or require him to give security for his surrender to that Court, there to answer the charge and to be dealt with according to law.

Where any person is to be so sent in custody, a warrant shall be issued by the Court within whose district he is found, and that warrant shall be sufficient authority to any person to whom it is directed to receive and detain the person therein named, and to carry him to and deliver him up to the Court within whose district the offence was committed, according to the warrant.

55.—(1.) In cases of murder or manslaughter if either the death, or the criminal act which wholly or partly caused the death, happened within the jurisdiction of a Court acting under this Order, that Court shall have the like jurisdiction over any British subject who is charged either as the principal offender, or as accessory before the fact to murder, or as accessory after the fact to murder or manslaughter, as if both the criminal act and the death had happened within that jurisdiction.

(2.) In the case of any offence committed on the high seas, or within the Admiralty jurisdiction, by any British subject on board a British ship, or on board a foreign ship to which he did not belong, the Court shall, subject to the provisions of this Order, have jurisdiction as if the offence had been committed within the jurisdiction of that Court. In cases tried under this Article, no different sentence can be passed from the sentence which could be passed in England if the offence were tried there.

(3.) The foregoing provisions of this Article shall be deemed to be adaptations, for the purposes of this Order and of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," of the following enactments, that is to say :—

"The Admiralty Offences (Colonial) Act, 1849."
"The Admiralty Offences (Colonial) Act, 1860."
"The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," section 686.

56. Where the Supreme Court or a Provincial Court issues a summons or warrant against any person on a charge of an offence committed on board of or in relation to a British ship, then, if it appears to the Court that the interests of public justice so require, that Court may issue a warrant or order for the detention of the ship, and may cause the ship to be detained accordingly, until the charge is heard and determined, and the order of the Court thereon is fully executed, or for such shorter time as the Court thinks fit; and the Court shall have power to make all such orders as appear to it necessary or proper for carrying this provision into effect.

57. Any act which, if done in the United Kingdom or in a British possession, would be an offence against any of the following Statutes of the Imperial Parliament, or Orders in Council, that is to say :—

"The Merchandize Marks Act, 1887 ;"
"The Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Acts, 1883 to 1888 ;"

Any Act, Statute, or Order in Council for the time being in force relating to copyright, or to inventions, designs, or trade-marks ;

Any Statute amending or substituted for any of the above-mentioned Statutes ;

Shall, if done by a British subject in the Ottoman dominions, be punishable as a grave offence against this Order, whether such act is done in relation to any property or right of a British subject, or of a foreigner, or native, or otherwise, howsoever :—

Provided—

(1.) That a copy of any such Statute or Order in Council shall be published in the public office of the Consulates at Constantinople and Alexandria, and shall be there open for inspection by any person at all reasonable times ; and a person shall not be punished under this Article for anything done before the expiration of one month after such publication, unless the person offending is proved to have had express notice of the Statute or Order in Council.

(2.) That a prosecution by or on behalf of a prosecutor who is not a British subject shall not be entertained unless the Court is satisfied that effectual provision exists for the punishment in Consular or other Courts in the Ottoman dominions of similar acts committed by the subjects of the State or Power of which such prosecutor is a subject, in relation to, or affecting the interests of, British subjects.

58.—(1.) The Supreme Court shall, when required by the Secretary of State, send to him a report of the sentence of the Court in any case tried before that Court with a jury or assessors, with a copy of the Minutes and notes of evidence, and with any observations which the Court thinks fit to make.

(2.) Every Provincial Court shall, in accordance with Rules to be made under this Order, send to the Supreme Court a report of the sentence of the Court in every case tried by the Court with assessors, with such Minutes, notes of evidence, and other documents as such Rules may direct, and with any observations which the Court thinks fit to make.

59.—(a.) The Court shall have and discharge all the powers, rights, and duties appertaining to the office of Coroner in England, in relation not only to deaths of British subjects happening in the district of the Court, but also to deaths of any persons having happened at sea on board British ships arriving in the district, and to deaths of British subjects having happened at sea on board foreign ships so arriving.

(b.) Every inquest shall be held with a jury of not less than three persons comprised in the jury list of the Court summoned for that purpose.

(c.) If any person fails to attend according to such summons, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding the fine to which he would be liable in case of failure to attend as a juror in civil or criminal proceedings.

(d.) In this Article the expression "the Court" includes the Registrar of the Supreme Court, but does not include a Local Court.

60.—(1.) Where it is proved that there is reasonable ground to apprehend that a British subject is about to commit a breach of the public peace,—or that the acts or conduct of a British subject are or is likely to produce or excite to a breach of the public peace,—the Court may, if it thinks fit, cause him to be brought before it and require him to give security to the satisfaction of the Court, to keep the peace, or for his future good behaviour, as the case may require;

(2.) Where a British subject is convicted of an offence before the Court, or before a Court in the sentence of which one of Her Majesty's Consular officers concurs, the Court for the district in which he is may, if it thinks fit, require him to give security to the satisfaction of the Court for his future good behaviour, and for that purpose may (if need be) cause him to be brought before the Court;

(3.) In either of the foregoing cases, if the person required to give security fails to do so, the Court may order that he be deported from the Ottoman dominions to such place as the Court directs.

(4.) The place shall be a place in some part (if any) of Her Majesty's dominions out of the United Kingdom, to which the person belongs, or the Government of which consents to the reception of persons deported under this Order, or in some part of a Protectorate of Her Majesty appointed by the Secretary of State.

(5.) A Provincial Court shall report to the Supreme Court any order of deportation made by it, and the grounds thereof, before the order is executed. The Supreme Court may reverse the order, or may confirm it with or without variation, and in case of confirmation, shall direct it to be carried into effect.

(6.) The person to be deported shall be detained in custody until a fit opportunity for his deportation occurs.

(7.) He shall, as soon as is practicable,—and in the case of a person convicted, either after execution of the sentence or while it is in course of execution—be embarked in custody under the warrant of the Supreme Court, or, in Egypt (during the absence of a judge of the Supreme Court), of the Provincial Court at Alexandria, on board one of Her Majesty's vessels of war, or, if there is no such vessel available, then on board any British or other fit vessel bound to the place of deportation.

(8.) The warrant shall be sufficient authority to the commander or master of the vessel to receive and detain the person therein named, and to carry him to and deliver him up at the place named, according to the warrant.

(9.) The Court may order the person to be deported to pay all or any part of the expenses of his deportation. Subject thereto, the expenses of deportation shall be defrayed in such manner as the Secretary of State, with the concurrence of the Treasury, may direct.

(10.) The Supreme Court shall forthwith report to the Secretary of State any order of deportation made or confirmed by it and the grounds thereof, and shall also inform the Ambassador, or if in Egypt, Her Majesty's Agent.

(11.) If any person reported under this or any former Order returns to the Ottoman dominions without permission in writing of the Secretary of State (which permission the Secretary of State may give) he shall be deemed guilty of a grave offence against this Order; and he shall also be liable to be forthwith again deported.

(12.) A Local Court shall not exercise any jurisdiction under this Article.

61.—(1.) Where a person is convicted before a Provincial or Local Court—

(a.) If he considers the conviction erroneous in law, then, on his application within the prescribed time (unless it appears merely frivolous, when it may be refused); or the Provincial or Local Court shall state a case, setting out the facts and the grounds of the conviction, and the question of law, and send it to the Supreme Court.

(b.) If the Provincial or Local Court thinks fit to reserve for consideration of the Supreme Court any question of law arising on the trial;

(2.) Thereupon the Provincial or Local Court shall, as it thinks fit, either postpone judgment on the conviction, or respite execution of the judgment, and either commit the person convicted to prison, or take security for him to appear and receive judgment or to deliver himself for execution of the judgment (as the case may require) at an appointed time and place.

(3.) The Supreme Court, sitting without a jury or assessors, shall hear and finally determine the matter, and thereupon shall reverse, affirm, or amend the judgment given, or set it aside, and order an entry to be made in the Minutes that in the judgment of the Supreme Court the person ought not to have been convicted, or order judgment to be given at a subsequent sitting of the Provincial or Local Court, or make such other order as the Supreme Court thinks just, and shall also give all necessary and proper consequential directions.

(4.) The judgment of the Supreme Court shall be delivered in open Court, after the public hearing of any argument offered on behalf of the prosecutor or of the person convicted.

(5.) Before delivering judgment, the Supreme Court may, if necessary, cause the case to be amended by the Provincial or Local Court.

(6.) The Supreme Court shall not annul a conviction or sentence, or vary a sentence, on the ground—

(a.) Of any objection which, if stated during the trial, might, in the opinion of the Supreme Court, have been properly met by amendment by the Provincial or Local Court; or

(b.) Of any error in the summoning of assessors: or

(c.) Of any person having served as assessor who was not qualified; or

(d.) Of any objection to any person as assessor which might have been raised before or at trial; or

(e.) Of any informality in the swearing of any witness; or

(f) Of any error or informality which, in the opinion of the Supreme Court, did not affect the substance of the case or subject the convicted person to any undue prejudice.

62. There shall be no appeal in a criminal case to Her Majesty the Queen in Council from a decision of the Supreme Court, except by special leave of Her Majesty in Council.

Part IV.—Civil Matters.

63. Subject to the provisions of this Order, the civil jurisdiction of every Court acting under this Order shall, as far as circumstances admit, be exercised on the principles of, and in conformity with, the Statute and other law for the time being in force in and for England.

64.—(1.) Every civil proceeding in the Court shall be taken by action, and not otherwise, and shall be designated an action.

(2.) For the purposes of any statutory enactment or other provision applicable under this Order to any civil proceeding in the Court, an action under this Order shall comprise and be equivalent to a suit, cause, or petition, or to any civil proceeding, howsoever required by any such enactment or provision to be instituted or carried on.

65.—(1.) Every action shall be heard and determined in a summary way.

(2.) Every application in the course of an action may be made to the Court orally, and without previous formality, unless in any case the Court otherwise directs, or the Rules of Court otherwise provide.

(3.) No action or proceeding shall be treated by the Court as invalid on account of any technical error or mistake in form or in words.

(4.) All errors and mistakes may be corrected, and times may be extended, by the Court in its discretion, and on such terms as the Court thinks just.

66.—(1.) The sittings of the Court for the hearing of actions shall, where the amount of business so requires, be held on stated days.

(2.) The sittings shall ordinarily be public, but the Court may, for reasons recorded in the Minutes, hear any particular case in the presence only of the parties and their legal advisers and the officers of the Court.

67. Every action shall commence by a summons, issued from the Court, on the application of the plaintiff, and served on the defendant (in this Order referred to as an original summons).

68. The Registrar shall keep a book, called the Action Book, in which all actions brought in the Court shall be entered, numbered consecutively in each year, in the order in which they are commenced, with a short statement of the particulars of each action, and a note of the several proceedings therein.

69.—(1.) An original summons shall not be in force for more than twelve months from the day of its date (including that day).

(2.) If any defendant named therein is not served therewith, the plaintiff may, before the end of the twelve months, apply to the Court for renewal thereof.

(3.) The Court, if satisfied that reasonable efforts have been made to serve the defendant, or for other good reason, may order that the summons be renewed for six months from the date of renewal, and so, from time to time, during the currency of the renewed summons.

(4.) The summons shall be renewed by being resealed with the seal of the Court, and a note being made thereon by the Registrar stating the renewal and the date thereof.

(5.) A summons so renewed shall remain in force and be available to prevent the operation of any Statute of Limitation, and for all other purposes, as from the date of the original summons.

(6.) The production of a summons purporting to be so renewed shall be sufficient evidence of the renewal and of the commencement of the action, as of the date of the original summons, for all purposes.

70. If an action is not proceeded with and disposed of within twelve months from service of the original summons, the Court may, if it thinks fit, without application by any party, order the same to be dismissed for failure to proceed.

71. The Court may at any time, if it thinks fit, either on or without application of a defendant, order the plaintiff to put in further particulars of his claim.

72. There shall ordinarily be no written pleadings; but the Court may at any time, if it thinks fit, order the plaintiff to put in a written statement of his claim, or a defendant to put in a written statement of his defence.

73. The evidence on either side may, subject to the direction of the Court, be wholly or partly oral, or on affidavit, or by deposition.

74.—(1.) Subject to the provisions of this Order, every action in the Supreme Court which involves the amount or value of 50*l.* or upwards shall, on the demand of either party in writing, filed in the Court seven days before the day appointed for the hearing, be heard with a jury.

(2.) Any other suit may, on the suggestion of any party, at any stage, be heard with a jury if the Court thinks fit.

(3.) Any suit may be heard with a jury if the Court, of its own motion, at any stage thinks fit.

75.—(1.) The Supreme Court may, if it thinks fit, hear any action with assessors.

(2.) A Provincial Court shall (subject to the provisions of this Order) hear with assessors every action which involves the amount or value of 300*l.* or upwards.

(3.) In all other cases a Provincial Court may, as it thinks fit, hear the action either with or without assessors.

76.—(1.) After the issue of a summons by any Court, the decision of that Court may be given upon a special case submitted to the Court by the parties.

(2.) Any decision of a Provincial Court may be given subject to a case to be stated by, or under the direction of, that Court for the opinion or direction of the Supreme Court.

77. The following provisions apply to a Local Court :—

1. Such Court shall not exercise jurisdiction where the amount or value involved exceeds 10*l.*

2. A Local Court shall, within fourteen days after the determination of any action, report the action to the Provincial Court, and transmit to that Court a copy of the proceedings.

3. A Local Court shall have power to enforce any order by execution on the goods of the party ordered to pay, and not otherwise.

4. An appeal to the Supreme Court from a Local Court shall lie as of course on the appellant making a deposit of 1*l.* for costs to abide the decision on appeal, and execution shall thereupon be suspended.

5. After one month from the date of the decision of the Local Court an appeal shall not lie except by leave of the Supreme Court.

6. The proceedings with respect to an appeal under this Article shall be conducted as nearly as may be according to the provisions of this Order relating to appeals from Provincial Courts.

7. In any case the Supreme Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of any party, direct that the appeal be heard and determined by the Provincial Court or in the Supreme Court.

78.—(1.) Notwithstanding anything in this Order, the Court (for reasons recorded in the Minutes) may at any time do any of the following things, as the Court thinks just :—

(i.) Defer or adjourn the hearing or determination of any action, proceeding, or application ;

(ii.) Order or allow any amendment of any pleading or other document ;

(iii.) Appoint or allow a time for, or enlarge or abridge the time appointed or allowed for, or allow further time for, the doing of any act or the taking of any proceeding.

(2.) Any order within the discretion of the Court may be made on such terms respecting time, costs, and other matters as the Court thinks fit.

79.—(1.) The Supreme Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of any party, or of its own motion, order a rehearing of any action, or of an appeal, or of any arguments on a verdict, or on any other question of law.

(2.) The provisions of this Order respecting a hearing with a jury or assessors shall extend to a rehearing of an action.

(3.) The Supreme Court may, if it thinks fit, direct any hearing to be before the full Court.

(4.) If the party applying for a rehearing has by any order been ordered to pay money or do any other thing, the Court may direct either that the order be carried into execution, or that the execution thereof be suspended pending the rehearing, as it thinks fit.

(5.) If the Court directs the order to be carried into execution, the party in whose favour it is given shall, before the execution, give security to the satisfaction of the Court for performance of such order as shall be made on the rehearing.

(6.) If the Court directs the execution of the order to be suspended, the party against whom it is given shall, before an order for suspension is given, give security to the satisfaction of the Judge for the performance of such order as shall be made on the rehearing.

(7.) An application for a rehearing shall be made within the prescribed time.

80. Subject to the provisions of this Order and the Rules of Court, the costs of and incident to all proceedings in the Court shall be in the discretion of the Court, provided that if the action is tried with a jury, the costs shall follow the event, unless the Court shall for good cause (to be entered in the Minutes) otherwise order.

81.—(1.) A Minute of every order, whether interlocutory or final, shall be made by the Court in the Minutes of Proceedings at the time when the Judgment or order is given or made.

(2.) Every such Minute shall have the full force and effect of a formal order.

(3.) The Court may at any time order a formal order to be drawn up on the application of any party.

82. Where the Court delivers a decision in writing, the original, or a copy thereof, signed by the Judge or officer holding the Court, shall be filed in the proper office of the Court with the papers in the action.

83.—(1.) An order shall not be drawn up in form except on the application of some party to the action, or by direction of the Court, and shall then be passed and be certified by the affixing thereto of the seal of the Court, and it shall then be deemed to form part of the record in the action.

(2.) An order shall not be enforced or appealed from, nor shall an office copy of it be granted, until it forms part of the record.

(3.) An order shall bear the date of the day of the delivery of the decision on which the order is founded.

(4.) Any party to an action or proceeding is entitled to have an office copy of any order made therein.

84.—(1.) Ordinarily, an order of a Provincial or Local Court shall not be enforced out of the Consular district of the Consular officer making the order.

(2.) Where, however, a Provincial Court thinks that the urgency or other peculiar circumstances of the case so require, that Court may, for reasons recorded in the Minutes, order that any particular order be enforced out of the particular district.

85. All money ordered by the Court to be paid by any person shall be paid into an office of the Court, unless the Court otherwise directs.

86. Where money ordered by the Court to be paid is due for seamen's wages, or is other money recoverable under "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," or other law relating to ships, and the person ordered to pay is master or owner of a ship, and the money is not paid as ordered, the Court, in addition to other powers for compelling payment, shall have power to direct that the amount unpaid be levied by seizure and sale of that ship.

87. Where an order ordering payment of money remains wholly or in part unsatisfied, whether an execution order has been made or not, the person prosecuting the order (in this Order called the judgment creditor) may apply to the Court for an order ordering the person by whom payment is to be made (in this Order called the judgment debtor) to appear and be examined respecting his ability to make the payment ; and the Court shall, unless it sees good reason to the contrary, make an order accordingly.

Where the order for the payment of money was made by a Local Court, the application under this Article shall be made to the Provincial Court.

88.—(1.) On the appearance of the judgment debtor, he may be examined on oath by or on behalf of the judgment creditor, and by the Court, respecting his ability to pay the money ordered to be paid, and for discovery of property applicable thereto, and respecting his disposal of any property.

(2.) He shall produce, on oath or otherwise, all books, papers, and documents in his possession or power relating to any property applicable to payment.

(3.) Whether the judgment debtor appears or not, the judgment creditor, and any witness whom the Court thinks requisite, may be examined, on oath or otherwise, respecting the same matters.

(4.) The Court may, if it thinks fit, adjourn the examination from time to time, and require from the judgment debtor such security for his appearance as the Court thinks fit ; and, in default of his finding security, may, by order, commit him to the custody of an officer of the Court, there to remain until the adjourned hearing, unless sooner discharged.

89. If it appears to the Court, by the examination of the judgment debtor or other evidence, that the judgment debtor then has sufficient means to pay the money directed to be paid by him, and he refuses or neglects to pay the same according to the order, then and in any such case the Court may, if it thinks fit, by order, commit him to prison for any time not exceeding forty days.

90. On the examination, the Court, if it thinks fit, whether it makes an order for commitment or not, may rescind or alter any order for the payment of money by instalments or otherwise, and may make any further or other order, either for the payment of the whole amount forthwith, or by instalments, or in any other manner, as the Court thinks fit.

91.—(1.) The expenses of the judgment debtor's maintenance in prison shall be defrayed in the first instance by the judgment creditor, and may be recovered by him from the judgment debtor, as the Court directs.

(2.) The expenses shall be estimated by the Court, and shall be paid by the judgment creditor at such times and in such manner as the Court directs.

(3.) In default of payment, the judgment debtor may be discharged if the Court thinks fit.

92. Imprisonment of a judgment debtor under the foregoing provisions does not operate as a satisfaction or extinguishment of the debt or liability to which the order relates, or protect the debtor from being anew imprisoned for any new default making him liable to be imprisoned, or deprive the judgment creditor of any right to have execution against his goods, as if there had not been such imprisonment.

93. The judgment debtor, on paying at any time the amount ordered to be paid, and all costs and expenses, shall be discharged.

94.—(1.) Where the order of the Court is one ordering some act to be done other than payment of money, there shall be indorsed on the copy of it served on the person required to obey it a memorandum in the words or to the effect following :—

If you, the within-named A. B., neglect to obey this order within the time therein appointed, you will be liable to be arrested and your property may be sequestered.

(2.) Where the person directed to do the act fails to do it according to the order, the person prosecuting the order may apply to the Court for another order for the arrest of the disobedient person.

(3.) Thereupon the Court may make an order ordering and empowering an officer of the Court therein named to take the body of the disobedient person and detain him in custody until further order.

(4.) He shall be liable to be detained in custody until he has obeyed the order in all things that are to be immediately performed, and given such security, as the Court thinks fit, to obey the order in other respects (if any) at the future times thereby appointed.

95. If the debtor, against whom a warrant of arrest issues, cannot be found, or is taken or detained in custody without obeying the order, the person prosecuting the order may apply to the Court for an order of sequestration against his property.

96.—(1.) On proof of great urgency or other peculiar circumstances, the Court may, if it thinks fit, before service of a writ or summons in an action, and without notice, make an order of injunction, or an order to sequester money or goods, or to stop the clearance of a vessel, or to hold to bail, or to attach property.

(2.) Before making the Order the Court shall require the person applying for it to enter into a recognizance, with or without a surety or sureties, as the Court thinks fit, as security for his being answerable in damages to the person against whom the order is sought.

(3.) The order shall not remain in force more than twenty-four hours, and shall, at the end of that time, wholly cease to be in force, unless within that time an action is regularly brought by the person obtaining the order.

(4.) The order shall be dealt with in the action as the Court thinks fit.

97.—(1.) An order to hold to bail shall state the amount, including costs, for which bail is required.

(2.) It shall be executed forthwith.

(3.) The person arrested under it shall be entitled to be discharged from custody under it on bringing into Court the amount stated in the order, to abide the event of such action as may be brought, or on entering into a recognizance, without or with a surety or sureties, as the Court thinks fit, as security that he will abide by the orders of the Court in any action brought.

(4.) He shall be liable to be detained in custody under the order for not more than seven days, if not sooner discharged; but the Court may, from time to time, if it thinks fit, renew the order.

(5.) No person, however, shall be kept in custody under any such order and renewed order for a longer time, in the whole, than thirty days.

98.—(1.) Where an action is brought for the recovery of a sum exceeding 5*l*., and it is proved that the defendant is about to abscond for the purpose of defeating the plaintiff's claim, the Court may, if it thinks fit, order that he be arrested and delivered into safe custody, to be kept until he gives bail or security, with a surety or sureties, in such sum, expressed in the order, as the Court thinks fit, not exceeding the probable amount of debt, or damages, and costs to be recovered in the action, that he will appear at any time when called on, while the action is pending, and until execution or satisfaction of any order made against him, and that, in default of appearance, he will pay any money and costs which he is ordered to pay in the action.

(2.) The expenses incurred for the subsistence of the defendant while under arrest shall be paid by the plaintiffs in advance at such rate and in such amounts as the Court directs; and the total amount so paid may be recovered by the plaintiff in the action, unless the Court otherwise directs.

(3.) The Court may at any time, on reasonable cause shown, discharge or vary the order.

99.—(1.) Where it is proved that the defendant, with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of any order obtained or to be obtained against him, is about to remove any property out of the jurisdiction of the Court, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the plaintiff, order that property to be forthwith seized and secured.

(2.) The Court may at any time, on reasonable cause shown, discharge or vary the order.

100.—(1.) On proof of great urgency or other peculiar circumstances, after an action is brought, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of a plaintiff, or of its own motion, make an order for stopping the clearance of, or for the arrest and detention of, a vessel about to leave the district, other than a vessel enjoying immunity from civil process.

(2.) The Court may at any time, on reasonable cause shown, discharge or vary the order.

101.—(1.) If it appears to the Court that any order made under any of the last four foregoing Articles of this Order was applied for on insufficient grounds, or if the plaintiff's action fails, or judgment is given against him, by default or otherwise, and it appears to the Court that there was no sufficient ground for his bringing the action, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the defendant, order the plaintiff to pay to the defendant such amount as appears to the Court to be a reasonable compensation to the defendant for the expense and injury occasioned to him by the execution of the order.

(2.) Payment of compensation under this Article is a bar to any action for damages in respect of anything done in pursuance of the order, and any such action, if begun, shall be stayed by the Court in such manner and on such terms as the Court thinks fit.

102.—(1.) Any agreement in writing between any British subjects to submit present or future differences to arbitration, whether an arbitrator is named therein or not, may be filed in the Court by any party thereto, and, unless a contrary intention is expressed therein, shall be irrevocable, and shall have the same effect as an order of the Court.

(2.) Every such agreement is in this Order referred to as a submission.

(3.) If any action is commenced in respect of any matter covered by a submission, the Court, on the application of any party to the action, may by order stay the action.

103.—(1.) In any action—

(a.) If all parties consent, or

(b.) If the matters in dispute consist wholly or partly of matters of account, or require for their determination prolonged examination of documents or any scientific or local examination, the Court may at any time refer the whole action, or any question or issue arising therein, for inquiry and report, to the Registrar or any special Referee.

(2.) The Report of the Registrar or special Referee may be adopted wholly or partially by the Court, and if so adopted may be enforced as a judgment of the Court.

(3.) The Court may also in any case, with the consent of both parties to an action, or of any parties between whom any questions in the action arise (such consent being signified by a submission) refer the action or the portions referred to in the submission to arbitration, in such manner and upon such terms as it shall think reasonable or just.

(4.) In all cases of reference to a Registrar, special Referee, or Arbitrator, under any order of the Court, the Registrar, special Referee, or Arbitrator shall be deemed to be an officer of the Court, and shall have such powers and authority, and shall conduct such reference or arbitration in such manner as may be prescribed by any Rules of Court, and subject thereto as the Court may direct.

104. Subject to the Rules of Court, the Court shall have authority to enforce any submission, or any award made thereunder, and to control and regulate the proceedings before and after the award, in such manner and on such terms as the Court thinks fit.

105.—(1.) Each Court shall, as far as circumstances admit, have, for and within its own district, with respect to the following classes of persons being either resident in the Ottoman dominions, or carrying on business there, namely, resident British subjects and their debtors and creditors, being British subjects, or Ottoman subjects or foreigners submitting to the jurisdiction of the Court, all such jurisdiction in bankruptcy as for the time being belongs to the High Court and the County Courts in England.

(2.) Proceedings in bankruptcy shall be originated by a summons to the party to be made bankrupt to show cause why he should not be adjudicated bankrupt, or by a summons issued by a debtor himself to his creditor, or any of his creditors, to show cause why he (the debtor) should not be adjudicated bankrupt.

(3.) On or at any time after the issue of such a summons, the Supreme Court may stay any proceedings pending in any Court in any action, execution, or other legal process against the debtor in respect of any debt provable in bankruptcy, or it may allow such proceedings, whether pending at the commencement of the bankruptcy or begun during the continuance of the bankruptcy, to proceed on such terms as the Court thinks fit.

(4.) The Court may, on or at any time after the issue of such a summons, appoint a receiver or manager of the property or business of the debtor, or of any part thereof, and may direct immediate possession to be taken by an officer of the Court, or under the control of the Court, of that property or business, or of any part thereof.

106.—(1.) The Supreme Court shall have Admiralty jurisdiction for and within the Ottoman dominions and Ottoman waters, and over vessels and persons coming within the same.

(2.) The following enactments of "The Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890," that is to say, section 2, sub-sections (2) to (4); sections 5 and 6; section 16 (sub-section (3); shall apply to the Supreme Court as if that Court were a Colonial Court of Admiralty, and as if the Ottoman dominions were a British possession; and for the purpose of this application the expressions "judgment" and "appeal" shall in the enactments so applied have the same respective meanings as are assigned thereto in section 15 of the said Act.

(3.) During the absence from Egypt of a Judge of the Supreme Court, the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under this Article shall, subject to any Rules of Court, be exercised by the Provincial Court at Alexandria.

107. The Supreme Court shall, as far as circumstances admit, have for and within the Ottoman dominions, with respect to British subjects, all such jurisdiction, except the jurisdiction relative to dissolution or nullity or jactitation of marriage, as for the time being belongs to the High Court in England.

108.—(1). The Supreme Court shall, as far as circumstances admit, have, for and within the Ottoman dominions, in relation to British subjects, all such jurisdiction relative to the custody and management of the persons and estates of lunatics, as for the time being belongs to the Lord Chancellor or other Judge or Judges in England intrusted by virtue of Her Majesty's Sign Manual with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of lunatics.

(2.) A Provincial Court shall, as far as circumstances permit, have, in relation to British subjects, such jurisdiction relative to the custody and management of the persons and estates of lunatics as for the time being may be prescribed by Rules of Court, and until such rules are made, and so far as such rules do not apply, as may be exercised in England by the judicial authority and by the Masters in Lunacy under the provisions of "The Lunacy Act, 1890," and any Act amending the same.

(3.) In any such case the Provincial Court may, of its own motion, or on the application of any person interested, take or authorize such steps as to the Court may seem necessary or expedient for the immediate protection of the person and property of any person appearing to the Court to be a lunatic, and may, from time to time, revoke, or vary, or supplement any order or proceeding taken in the matter.

(4.) Subject to the provisions of this Article and to any Rules of Court, a Provincial Court shall not proceed in any such matter except under and according to the directions of the Supreme Court.

(5.) Sections 5 to 7 of "The Lunatics Removal (India) Act, 1851" (14 & 15 Vict., cap. 81), shall apply to the Ottoman dominions, with the substitution of "the Supreme Court" for "the Supreme Court of Judicature at any of the Presidencies of India." Provided that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under those sections may, during the absence of a Judge thereof, be exercised in and for Egypt by the Provincial Court at Alexandria.

109.—(1.) The Supreme Court shall, as far as circumstances admit, have, for and within the Ottoman dominions, with respect to the wills and the property in the Ottoman dominions of deceased British subjects, all such jurisdiction as for the time being belongs to the High Court in England.

(2.) A Provincial Court shall have power to grant probate or letters of administration where there is no contention respecting the right to the grant, and it is proved that the deceased was resident at his death within the particular jurisdiction.

(3.) Probate or administration granted by a Court under this Order shall have effect over all the property of the deceased within the Ottoman dominions, and shall effectually discharge persons dealing with an executor or administrator thereunder, notwithstanding that any defect afterwards appears in the grant.

(4.) Notwithstanding anything in this Order, the Court shall not exercise the jurisdiction conferred by this Article in any case where the deceased, though a protected person, was at the time of his death an Ottoman subject, and in the construction of the provisions of this Order relating to probate and administration, the expression "British subject" shall not include any such protected person.

110. A British subject may in his lifetime deposit for safe custody, in the Court, his own will, sealed up under his own seal and the seal of the Court.

111.—(1.) Where probate, administration, or confirmation is granted in England, Ireland, or Scotland, and therein, or by a Memorandum thereon signed by an officer of the Court granting the same, the testator or intestate is stated to have died domiciled in England, Ireland, or Scotland (as the case may be), and the probate, administration, or confirmation is produced to, and a copy thereof is deposited with, the Supreme Court, the Court shall write thereon a certificate of that production and deposit under the seal of the Court; and thereupon notwithstanding anything in this Order, the probate, administration, or confirmation shall, with respect to the personal property in the Ottoman dominions of the testator or intestate, have the like effect as if he had been resident in those dominions at his death, and probate or administration to his personal property there had been granted by the Supreme Court.

(2.) Any person who, in reliance on an instrument purporting to be a probate, administration, or confirmation granted in England, Ireland, or Scotland, and to bear such a certificate of the Supreme Court as in this Article prescribed, makes or permits any payment or transfer, in good faith, shall be, by virtue of this Order, indemnified and protected in respect thereof, in the Ottoman dominions, notwithstanding anything affecting the validity of the probate, administration, or confirmation.

(3.) The following shall be the terms of the certificate of the Supreme Court in this Article prescribed, namely:—

This probate has [or these letters of administration have, or this confirmation has] been produced in this Court, and a copy thereof has been deposited with this Court.

112. Section 51 of "The Conveyancing (Scotland) Act, 1874," and any enactment for the time being in force amending or substituted for the same, are hereby extended to the Ottoman dominions, with the adaptation following, namely:—

The Supreme Court is hereby substituted for a Court of Probate in a Colony.

113.—(1.) Each Consular officer shall endeavour to obtain, as early as may be, notice of the death of every British subject dying within the particular jurisdiction, whether resident or not, and all such information respecting his affairs as may serve to guide the Court with respect to the securing and administration of his property.

(2.) On receiving notice of the death the Consular officer shall put up a notice thereof at the Court-house, and shall keep the same there until probate or administration is granted, or where it appears to him that probate or administration will not be applied for, or cannot be granted, for such time as he thinks fit.

114.—(1.) Where a British subject resident dies in the Ottoman dominions, or elsewhere, intestate, then, until administration is granted, his personal property in the Ottoman dominions shall be vested in the Judge of the Supreme Court.

(2.) Where a British subject not resident dies in the Ottoman dominions, the Court within whose particular jurisdiction he dies—and where a British subject resident dies elsewhere, the Court within whose jurisdiction any property of the deceased is situate—shall, where the circumstances of the case appear to the Court so to require, forthwith on his death, or as soon after as may be, take possession of his personal property within the particular jurisdiction, or put it under the seal of the Court (in either case if the nature of the property or other circumstances so require, making an inventory), and so keep it until it can be dealt with according to law.

115. If any person named executor in the will of the deceased takes possession of and administers or otherwise deals with any part of the personal property of the deceased, and does not obtain probate within one month after the death, or after the termination of any suit or dispute respecting probate or administration, he shall be guilty of an offence and shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 50*l.*

116. If any person, other than the person named executor or an administrator or an officer of the Court, takes possession of and administers or otherwise deals with any part of the personal property of a deceased British subject, whether resident or not, he shall be deemed guilty of a contempt of Court, and shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 50*l.*

117. Where a person appointed executor in a will survives the testator, but either dies without having taken probate, or, having been called on by the Court to take probate, does not appear, his right in respect of the executorship wholly ceases; and, without further renunciation, the representation to the testator and the administration of his property shall go and may be committed as if that person had not been appointed executor.

118.—(1.) Where a British subject dies in the Ottoman dominions, any other such subject having in his possession, or under his control, any paper or writing of the deceased, being or purporting to be testamentary, shall forthwith bring the original to the Court within whose particular jurisdiction the death happens, and deposit it there.

If any person fails to do so for fourteen days after having knowledge of the death of the deceased, he shall be guilty of an offence and liable to a fine not exceeding 50*l.*

(2.) Where it is proved that any paper of the deceased, being or purporting to be testamentary, is in the possession or under the control of a British subject, the Court may, whether a suit or proceeding respecting probate or administration is pending or not, order him to produce the paper and bring it into Court.

(3.) Where it appears to the Court that there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person has knowledge of any paper being or purporting to be testamentary (although it is not shown that the paper is in his possession or under his control) the Court may, whether a suit or proceeding for probate or administration is pending or not, order that he be examined respecting it before the Court or elsewhere, and that he do attend for that pupose, and after examination order that he do produce the paper and deposit it in Court.

119.—(1.) A person claiming to be a creditor or legatee, or the next-of-kin, or one of the next-of-kin, of a deceased person may apply for and obtain a summons from the Court requiring the executor or administrator (as the case may be) of the deceased to attend before the Court and show cause why an order should not be made for the administration of the property under the direction of the Court.

(2.) On proof of service of the summons, or on appearance of the executor or administrator, and on proof of all such other things (if any) as the Court thinks fit, the Court may, if it thinks fit, make an immediate order for such administration.

(3.) The Court shall have full discretionary power to make or refuse any such order, or to give any special directions respecting the carriage or execution of it, and in the case of applications for such an order by two or more different persons or classes of persons, to grant the same to such one or more of the claimants, or classes of claimants, as the Court thinks fit.

(4.) If the Court thinks fit, the carriage of the order may subsequently be given to such person, and on such terms, as the Court thinks fit.

(5.) On making such an order, or at any time afterwards, the Court may, if it thinks fit, make any further or other order for compelling the executor or administrator to bring into Court for safe custody all or any part of the money, or securities, or other property of the deceased, from time to time coming to his hands, or otherwise for securing the safe keeping of the property of the deceased, or any part thereof.

(6.) If the extreme urgency or other peculiar circumstances of the case appear to the Court so to require (for reasons recorded in the Minutes), the Court may of its own motion issue such a summons, and make such an order or such orders and cause proper proceedings to be taken thereon.

120.—(1.) In a case of apparent intestacy where the circumstances of the case appear to the Court so to require (for reasons recorded in the Minutes), the Court may, if it thinks fit, of its own motion, grant administration to an officer of the Court.

(2.) The officer so appointed shall act under the direction of the Court, and shall be indemnified thereby.

(3.) He shall publish such notices, if any, as the Court thinks fit, in the Ottoman dominions, the United Kingdom, India, and elsewhere.

(4.) The Court shall require and compel him to file in the Court his accounts of his administration at intervals not exceeding three months.

(5.) The accounts shall be in all cases audited by the Supreme Court, for which purpose every Provincial Court shall, on the 1st day of February and the 1st day of August in every year, send to the Supreme Court all accounts so filed in the then last preceding half-year.

(6.) A commission of 5 per cent., or such less amount as the Secretary of State directs, may be charged on an estate administered under this Article, and the amount thereof shall be calculated and applied as the Secretary of State directs.

(7.) All expenses incurred on behalf of the Court in the execution of this Article and the said commission shall be the first charge on the personal property of the deceased in the Ottoman dominions, and the Court shall, by sale of part of that property or otherwise, provide for the discharge of those expenses and the payment of the said commission.

121. Where it appears to the Court that the value of the property or estate of a deceased person does not exceed 100*l.*, the Court may, without any probate or letters of administration, or other formal proceeding, pay thereout any debts or charges, and pay, remit, or deliver any surplus to such persons, subject to such conditions (if any) as the Court thinks proper, and shall not be liable to any action, suit, or proceedings in respect of anything done under this Article. Every proceeding of the Court under this Article shall be recorded in the Minutes.

122.—(1.) Where an action in a Provincial Court involves the amount or valve of 50*l.* or upwards, any party aggrieved by any decision of that Court, with or without assessors, in the action shall have the right to appeal to the Supreme Court against the same, on the following conditions, namely:—

(i.) The appellant shall give security to the satisfaction of the Provincial Court to an amount not exceeding 100*l.* for prosecution of the appeal, and for payment of any costs that may be ordered by the Supreme Court on the appeal to be paid by the appellant to any person;

(ii.) The appellant shall pay to the Provincial Court such sum as the Provincial Court thinks reasonable, to defray the expense of the making up and transmission of the record to the Supreme Court.

(2.) In any other case a Provincial Court may, if it thinks fit, give leave to appeal on the conditions aforesaid.

(3.) In any case the Supreme Court may give leave to appeal on such terms as it thinks fit.

(4.) After three months from the date of a decision of the Provincial Court, an appeal against it shall not lie except by leave of the Supreme Court.

(5.) After six months from the date of a decision of the Provincial Court application for leave to appeal against it shall not be entertained by the Supreme Court.

123.—(1.) Where a person ordered to pay money, or to do any other thing, appeals, the Provincial Court shall direct either that the decision appealed from be carried into execution, or that the execution thereof be suspended pending the appeal, as that Court thinks fit.

(2.) If the Provincial Court directs the decision to be carried into execution, the person in whose favour it is given shall, before the execution of it, give security to the satisfaction of the Court for performance of any order to be made on appeal.

(3.) If the Provincial Court directs the execution of the decision to be suspended, the person against whom it is given shall, before an order for suspension is made, give security to the satisfaction of the Provincial Court for performance of such order as shall be made on appeal.

124.—(1.) The appellant shall file an appeal motion-paper in the Provincial Court.

(2.) He may at the same time file any argument which he desires to submit to the Supreme Court in support of the appeal.

(3.) Copies of the motion-paper and the argument (if any) shall be served on such persons as respondents as the Provincial Court directs.

125.—(1.) A respondent may, within the prescribed time after service of the motion-paper, file in the Provincial Court a motion-paper of cross-appeal (if any) and such argument as he desires to submit to the Supreme Court on the appeal and cross appeal, if any.

(2.) Copies thereof shall be furnished by the Provincial Court to such persons as that Court thinks fit.

126.—(1.) On the expiration of the prescribed time last referred to the Provincial Court shall, without the application of any party, make up the record of appeal, which shall consist of the writ of summons, statements of claim and defence (if any), orders, and proceedings, all written and documentary evidence admitted or tendered, or a certified copy thereof, and the notes of the oral evidence, the appeal and cross-appeal motion-paper, and the arguments (if any).

(2.) The several pieces shall be fastened together, consecutively numbered; and the whole shall be secured by the seal of the Court, and be forthwith forwarded by it to the Supreme Court.

(3.) The Provincial Court shall not, except for some special cause, take on itself the responsibility of the charge, or of the transmission to the Supreme Court, of original letters or documents produced in evidence. They shall be returned to the parties producing them; and those parties shall produce the originals, if required by the Supreme Court, at or before the hearing of the appeal.

127.—(1.) After the record of appeal is transmitted, until the appeal is disposed of, the Supreme Court shall be in exclusive possession of the whole action, as between the parties to the appeal.

(2.) Every application in the action, as between the parties to the appeal, shall be made to the Supreme Court, and not to the Provincial Court; but any application may be made through the Provincial Court.

128.—(1.) The Supreme Court shall, after receiving the record of appeal, fix a day for the hearing of the appeal, and shall give notice thereof through the Provincial Court to the parties to the appeal, such a day being fixed as will allow of the parties attending in person or by counsel or solicitor, if they so desire.

(2.) But if all the separate parties to an appeal appear in person before the Supreme Court or appoint persons there to represent them as their counsel or solicitors in the appeal, and cause the appearance or appointment to be notified to the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court may dispose of the appeal, without being required to give notice through the Provincial Court, to the parties to the appeal, of the day fixed for the hearing thereof.

129. The Supreme Court may, if it thinks fit, require a party to an appeal to appear personally before it on the hearing of the appeal, or on any occasion pending the appeal.

130. It is not open, as of right, to a party to an appeal to adduce new evidence in support of his original case, but a party may allege any material facts that have come to his knowledge after the decision of the Provincial Court, and the Supreme Court may in any case, if it thinks fit, allow or require new evidence to be adduced.

131.—(1.) The Supreme Court may make any orders necessary for determining the real question in controversy in the action as among the parties to the appeal, and for that purpose may amend any defect or error in the record of appeal, and may enlarge the time for any proceeding except as otherwise by this Order expressly provided.

(2.) The Supreme Court may direct the Provincial Court to inquire into, and certify its finding, on any question, as between the parties to the appeal, or any of them, which the Supreme Court thinks fit to determine before final judgment is given in the appeal.

(3.) Generally, the Supreme Court shall, as among the parties to the appeal, have as full jurisdiction over the whole action as if it had been originally instituted and prosecuted in the Supreme Court by parties subject to the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

(4.) The Supreme Court may, if it thinks fit, remit the action to the Provincial Court, to be reheard, or to be otherwise dealt with as the Supreme Court directs.

(5.) The powers of the Supreme Court under this Order may be exercised, notwithstanding that the appeal is brought against part only of the decision of the Provincial Court.

(6.) Those powers may be exercised in favour of all or any of the parties to the action, although they have not appealed from, or complained of, the decision.

132.—(1.) Notwithstanding anything in this Order, an appeal to the Supreme Court shall not lie from an order of the Provincial Court, made on the application of one party, without notice to the other party.

(2.) But, if any person thinks himself aggrieved by such an order, he may, on notice to the other party, apply to the Provincial Court to vary or discharge the order, and an appeal shall lie from the decision on that application.

133.—(1.) Where a final judgment or order of the Supreme Court made in a civil action involves the amount or value of 500*l.* or upwards, any party aggrieved thereby may, within the prescribed time, or, if no time is prescribed, within fifteen days after the same is made or given, apply by motion to the Supreme Court for leave to appeal to Her Majesty the Queen in Council.

(2.) The applicant shall give security to the satisfaction of the Court to an amount not exceeding 500*l.* for prosecution of the appeal, and for payment of all such costs as may be awarded to any respondent by Her Majesty in Council, or by the Lords of the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council.

(3.) He shall also pay into the Supreme Court a sum estimated by that Court to be the amount of the expense of the making up and transmission to England of the transcript of the record.

(4.) If security and payment are so given and made within one month from the filing of the motion-paper for leave to appeal, then, and not otherwise, the Supreme Court shall give leave to appeal, and the appellant shall be at liberty to prefer and prosecute his appeal to Her Majesty in Council according to the rules for the time being in force respecting appeals to Her Majesty in Council from her Colonies, or such other rules as Her Majesty in Council from time to time thinks fit to make concerning appeals from the Supreme Court.

(5.) In any case the Supreme Court, if it considers it just or expedient to do so, may give leave to appeal on the terms and in the manner aforesaid.

134.—(1.) Where leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council is applied for by a person ordered to pay money or do any other act, the Supreme Court shall direct either that the order appealed from be carried into execution, or that the execution thereof be suspended pending the appeal, as the Court thinks just.

(2.) If the Court directs the order to be carried into execution, the person in whose favour it is made shall, before the execution of it, give security to the satisfaction of the Court for performance of such order as Her Majesty in Council may think fit to make.

(3.) If the Court directs the execution of the order to be suspended, the party against whom it is given shall, before an order for suspension is made, give security to the satisfaction of the Court for performance of such order as Her Majesty in Council may think fit to make.

135. This Order shall not affect the right of Her Majesty at any time, on the humble petition of a person aggrieved by a decision of the Supreme Court, to admit his appeal thereon on such terms and in such manner as Her Majesty in Council may think fit, and to deal with the decision appealed from in such manner as may be just.

Part V.—Procedure, Criminal and Civil.

136. It shall be lawful for the Supreme Court to make Rules of Court and to prescribe Forms of Procedure as to all civil or criminal matters, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State.

Until such rules and forms have been made, or in relation to matters to which they do not extend, a Court may adopt and use any procedure or forms heretofore in use in the Consular Courts in the Ottoman dominions, or any Regulations or Rules made thereunder and in force immediately before the commencement of this Order, with any modifications or adaptations which may be necessary.

No proceeding shall be invalidated by any informality, mistake, or omission, so long as, in the opinion of any Court before which any question arises, the essential requisites of law and justice have been complied with.

Provision may, amongst other things, be made by rules under this Article—

(a.) For authorizing the Court to grant and enforce such warrants;

(b.) For regulating the procedure in the case of references or arbitrations before Registrars, special Referees, or Arbitrators appointed by the Court and for enforcing awards;

(c.) For enforcing by distress, or by attachment, or commitment, judgments or orders of the Court, or payment of any damages, costs, penalties, fines, or forfeitures;

(d.) For the sale of things forfeited;

(e.) For garnishee process;

(f.) For attachments of property in order to compel appearance or submission to the jurisdiction or process of the Court, and authorizing the Court to compel, by fine, distress, or recognizance, or in default of security by commitment, the attendance of witnesses before the Court, or before a Colonial or other Court to which a case is sent for trial;

(g.) For regulating the mode in which legal practitioners are to be admitted to practise as such, and for withdrawing the right to practise on grounds of misconduct;

(h.) For prescribing and enforcing the fees to be taken in respect of any proceedings under this Order, not exceeding, as regards any matters provided for by "The Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891," fees fixed and allowed from time to time by any Order in Council made under that Act;

(i.) For prescribing a scale of payments to be made to a complainant or witness, or a jury, or assessors (in criminal cases only), and the conditions upon which an order may be made by the Court for such payments;

(j.) For prescribing scales of costs to be paid to practitioners;

(k.) For taking and transmitting depositions of witnesses for use at trials in a Colony or in England.

Provided that the scales of all fees, expenses, and costs prescribed under the provisions of this Order shall have been sanctioned by the Treasury.

Provided also that any legal practitioner, whose right to practise before the Supreme Court has been withdrawn, shall be entitled to appeal to Her Majesty in Council.

137.—(1.) The Court may, in any case, if it thinks fit, on account of the poverty of a party, or for any other reason, provisionally dispense with the payment of any fee in whole or in part.

(2.) Payment of fees payable under any rules to be made in pursuance of this Order, and of costs and of charges and expenses of witnesses, prosecutions, punishments, and deportations, and of other charges and expenses, and of fines respectively payable under this Order, may be enforced under order of the Court by seizure and sale of goods, and, in default of sufficient goods, by imprisonment as a civil prisoner for a term not exceeding one month, but such imprisonment shall not operate as a satisfaction or extinguishment of the liability.

(3.) Any bill of sale or mortgage, or transfer of property made with a view of avoiding seizure or sale of goods or ship under any provision of this Order, shall not be effectual to defeat the provisions of this Order.

138.—(1.) Every summons, order, and other document issuing from the Court shall be in English, French, or Italian.

(2.) Every pleading and other document filed in the Court in a civil or criminal proceeding by a party thereto shall be in English, or French, or Italian.

(3.) Every affidavit used in the Court shall be in English, or in the ordinary language of the person swearing it.

(4.) An affidavit in any language other than English, or French, or Italian shall be accompanied by a sworn translation into English, or French, or Italian, procured by and at the expense of the person using the affidavit.

(5.) Where there is a jury, all the proceedings before the jury shall be conducted in English—evidence, if given in any other language, being interpreted.

139.—(1.) Summonses, orders, and other documents issuing from the Supreme Court, shall be sealed with the seal of that Court.

(2.) Those issuing from a Provincial or Local Court shall be sealed with the official seal of the Consular officer by whom they are issued.

140.—(1.) In every case, civil or criminal, Minutes of the proceedings shall be drawn up, and shall be signed by the Judge or Consular officer before whom the proceedings are taken, and shall where the trial is held with assessors, be open for their inspection and for their signature if concurred in by them.

(2.) These Minutes, with the depositions of witnesses, and the notes of evidence taken at the hearing or trial by the Judge or Consular officer, shall be preserved in the public office of the Court.

141.—(1.) Every person doing an act or taking a proceeding in the Court as plaintiff in a civil case, or as making a criminal charge against another person, or otherwise, shall do so in his own name and not otherwise, and either—

(a.) By himself; or

(b.) By a legal practitioner; or

(c.) By his attorney or agent thereunto lawfully authorized in writing and approved by the Court.

(2.) Where the act is done or proceeding taken by an attorney (other than a legal practitioner), or by an agent, the power of attorney, or instrument authorizing the agent, or an authenticated copy thereof, shall be first filed in the Court.

(3.) Where the authority has reference only to the particular proceeding, the original document shall be filed.

(4.) Where the authority is general, or has reference to other matters in which the attorney or agent is empowered to act, an authenticated copy of the document may be filed.

142.—(1.) In any case, criminal or civil, and at any stage thereof, the Court, either of its own motion or on the application of any party, may summon a British subject to attend to give evidence, or to produce documets, or to be examined.

(2.) If the person summoned, having reasonable notice of the time and place at which he is required to attend, and his reasonable expenses having been paid or tendered, fails to attend and be sworn, and give evidence, or produce documents, or submit to examination accordingly, and does not excuse his failure to the satisfaction of the Court, he shall be guilty of an offence against this Order.

(3.) A person punished under this Article shall not be liable to an action in respect of the same matter; and any such action, if begun, shall be stayed by the Court in such a manner and on such terms as the Court thinks fit.

143. If, in a criminal case, a witness appearing before the Court, either in obedience to a summons, or on being brought up under a warrant, refuses to take an oath, or, having taken an oath, to answer any question put to him, and does not excuse his refusal to the satisfaction of the Court, he shall be guilty of an offence, and shall be liable to be forthwith committed to prison, for not more than seven days.

144. The following Acts namely:—

"The Foreign Tribunals Evidence Act, 1856;"

"The Evidence by Commission Act, 1859;"

"The Evidence by Commission Act, 1885;" or so much thereof as is for the time being in force, and any enactment for the time being in force amending or substituted for the same, are hereby extended to the Ottoman dominions, with the adaptations following, namely:—

In the said Acts the Supreme Court is hereby substituted for a Supreme Court in a Colony.

145. The following Acts, namely:—

"The British Law Ascertainment Act, 1859;"

"The Foreign Law Ascertainment Act, 1861," or so much thereof as is for the time being in force, and any enactment for the time being in force amending or substituted for the same, are hereby extended to the Ottoman dominions, with the adaptation following, namely:—

In the said Acts the Supreme Court is hereby substituted for a Superior Court in a Colony.

146. If in any case, civil or criminal, a British subject wilfully gives false evidence on oath in the Court, or on a reference, he shall be deemed guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury.

147. The Supreme Court may, if it thinks fit, order that a Commission do issue for examination of witnesses at any place out of the Ottoman dominions, on oath, by interrogatories or otherwise, and may, by order, give such directions touching the time, place, and manner of the examination, or anything connected therewith, as to the Court appear reasonable and just.

148.—(1.) Every male resident subject,—being of the age of 21 years or upwards,—having a competent knowledge of the English language,—having or earning a gross income at such rate as may be fixed by Rules of Court,—not having been attainted of treason or felony, or convicted of any crime that is infamous (unless he has obtained a free pardon),—and not being under outlawry), shall be qualified to serve on a jury.

(2.) All persons so qualified shall be liable so to serve, except the following:—

Persons in Her Majesty's Diplomatic, Consular, or other Civil Service, in actual employment;

Officers, clerks, keepers of prisons, messengers, and other persons attached to or in the service of the Court;

Officers and others on full pay in Her Majesty's navy or army, or in actual employment in the service of any Department connected therewith;

Persons holding appointments in the civil, naval, or military service of the Sublime Ottoman Porte;

Clergymen and ministers in the actual discharge of professional duties;

Legal practitioners in actual practice;

Physicians, surgeons, and apothecaries in actual practice;

Persons disabled by mental or bodily infirmity.

(3.) A jury shall consist of five jurors.

(4.) In civil and in criminal cases the like challenges shall be allowed as in England,—with this addition, that in civil cases each party may challenge three jurors peremptorily.

(5.) A jury shall be required to give an unanimous verdict.

(6.) Where there is to be a hearing with a jury, the Court shall summon so many of the persons comprised in the jury list, not fewer than twelve, as seem requisite.

(7.) Any person failing to attend according to the summons shall be deemed guilty of a contempt of Court, and shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 10*l.*

149.—(1.) An assessor shall be a competent and impartial subject, of good repute, resident in the district of the particular Court, and nominated and summoned by the Court for the purpose of acting as assessor.

(2.) In the Supreme Court there may be one assessor or two assessors, as the Court thinks fit.

(3.) In a Provincial Court there shall ordinarily be not fewer than two, and not more than four, assessors. Where, however, by reason of local circumstances, the Court is able to obtain the presence of one assessor only, the Court may, if it thinks fit, sit with one assessor only: and where, for like reasons, the Court is not able to obtain the presence of any assessor, the Court may, if it thinks fit, sit without an assessor,—the Court, in every case, recording in the Minutes its reasons for sitting with one assessor only or without an assessor.

(4.) An assessor shall not have any voice in the decision of the Court in any case, civil or criminal; but an assessor dissenting, in a civil case, from any decision of the Court, or, in a criminal case, from any decision of the Court or the conviction or the amount of punishment awarded, may record in the Minutes his dissent, and the grounds thereof, and shall be entitled to receive, without payment, a certified copy of the Minutes. An assessor dissenting shall be entitled to receive, without payment, a certified copy of the Minutes.

PART VI.—OTTOMAN AND FOREIGN SUBJECTS AND TRIBUNALS.

150.—(1.) Where an Ottoman subject or foreigner desires to institute or take in the Court an action against a British subject, or a British subject desires to institute or take in the Court an action against an Ottoman subject or foreigner, the Court shall entertain the same, and shall hear and determine it, either by the Court sitting alone, or, if all parties desire, or the Court having regard to its jurisdiction, thinks fit to direct, a trial with a jury or assessors, then with a jury or assessors, but in all other respects according to the ordinary course of the Court.

(2.) Provided that the Ottoman subject or foreigner, if so required by the Court, first obtains and files in the Court the consent in writing of the competent authority on behalf of the Sublime Ottoman Porte or of his own nation (as the case may be) to his submitting, and does submit, to the jurisdiction of the Court, and, if required by the Court, give security to the satisfaction of the Court, and to such reasonable amount as the Court thinks fit, by deposit or otherwise, to pay fees, damages, costs, and expenses, and abide by and perform such decision as shall be given by the Court or on appeal.

(3.) A cross-action shall not be brought in the Court against a plaintiff, being an Ottoman subject or foreigner who has submitted to the jurisdiction, by a defendant, without leave of the Court first obtained, but the Court may, as a condition of entertaining the plaintiff's action, require his consent to any cross-action or matter of set-off being entertained by the Court.

(4.) The Court before giving leave may require proof from the defendant that his claim arises out of the matter in dispute, and that there is reasonable ground for it, and that it is not made for vexation or delay.

(5.) Nothing in this Article shall prevent the defendant from bringing in the Court any action against the Ottoman subject or foreigner after the termination of the action in which the Ottoman subject or foreigner is plaintiff.

(6.) Where an Ottoman subject or foreigner obtains in the Court an order against a defendant being a British subject, and in another suit that defendant is plaintiff and the Ottoman subject or foreigner is defendant, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the British subject, stay the enforcement of the order pending that other suit, and may set off any amount ordered to be paid by one party in one suit against any amount ordered to be paid by the other party in the other suit.

(7.) Where a plaintiff, being an Ottoman subject or foreigner, obtains an order in the Court against two or more defendants being British subjects jointly, and in another action one of them is plaintiff and the Ottoman subject or foreigner is defendant, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the British subject, stay the enforcement of the order pending that other action, and may set off any amount ordered to be paid by one party in one action against any amount ordered to be paid by the other party in the other action, without prejudice to the right of the British subject to require contribution from his co-defendants under the joint liability.

(8.) Where an Ottoman subject or foreigner is co-plaintiff in a suit with a British subject who is within the particular jurisdiction, it shall not be necessary for the Ottoman subject or foreigner to give security for costs, unless the Court so directs, but the co-plaintiff British subject shall be responsible for all fees and costs.

151.—(1.) Where it is proved that the attendance within the particular jurisdiction of a British subject to give evidence, or for any other purpose connected with the administration of justice, is required in a Court or before a judicial officer of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, or of a State in amity with Her Majesty, the Court may, if it thinks fit, in a case and in circumstances in which the Court would require his attendance before the Court, order that he do attend in such Court, or before such judicial officer, and for such purpose as aforesaid.

(2.) If the person ordered to attend, having reasonable notice of the time and place at which he is required to attend, fails to attend accordingly, and does not excuse his failure to the satisfaction of the Court, he shall (independently of any other liability) be guilty of an offence against this Order.

152. When a British subject invokes or submits to the jurisdiction of an Ottoman or foreign Tribunal, and engages in writing to abide by the decision of such Tribunal, or to pay any fees or expenses ordered by such Tribunal to be paid by him, any Court under this Order may, on such evidence as it thinks fit to require, enforce payment of such fees and expenses in the same manner as if they were fees payable in a proceeding by such person in that Court, and shall pay over or account for the same when levied to the proper Ottoman or foreign authority, as the Court may direct.

153.—(1.) Subject to the Rules, persons competent to be assessors in any Court under this Order may be required to attend as assessors in cases in which British subjects are parties before any Ottoman Tribunal; but every assessor so required must be acquainted with the French or Turkish language.

(2.) Any rules made by the Supreme Court in pursuance and in accordance with the provisions of this Order may comprise rules respecting the qualification, selection, appointment, registration, attendance, and remuneration of assessors in such cases as aforesaid, and respecting the establishment in any part of the Ottoman dominions, and the regulation of a fund, hereinafter called an Assessors' Fund, for the remuneration of assessors before any Ottoman Tribunals in such part of the Ottoman dominions.

(3.) Such rules may provide for compelling the service of any qualified person, and may prescribe penalties for neglect or refusal, without reasonable excuse, to serve in accordance with the terms of such regulations. Such penalties shall not exceed the equivalent of 5l. in respect of any one day.

(4.) Any such penalties shall be recoverable in the Court as a civil debt by any Consular officer, and shall be carried to the Assessors' Fund.

(5.) Every person requiring the attendance of one or more assessors may be required to pay in advance such fee or fees as the rules direct.

(6.) The Court may, out of any moneys in its hands arising from fees of Court or other fees, or moneys received under this Order, advance or pay the amount of the salary or remuneration of an assessor.

(7.) The Court shall account for all receipts and payments in respect of the Assessors' Fund in such manner as the Secretary of State directs.

154.—(1.) If a British subject—

(i.) Publicly derides, mocks, or insults any religion established or observed within the Ottoman dominions; or

(ii.) Publicly offers insult to any religious service, feast, or ceremony established or kept in any part of those dominions, or to any place of worship, tomb, or sanctuary belonging to any religion established or observed within those dominions, or belonging to the ministers or professors thereof; or

(iii.) Publicly and wilfully commits any act tending to bring any religion established or observed within those dominions, or its ceremonies, mode of worship, or observances, into hatred, ridicule, or contempt, and thereby to provoke a breach of the public peace;

he shall be guilty of an offence, and on conviction thereof, before the Supreme Court or a Provincial Court, liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without a fine not exceeding 100l., or to a fine alone not exceeding 100l.

(2.) Notwithstanding anything in this Order, every charge under this Article shall be heard and determined by the Court alone, without jury or assessors, and any Provincial Court shall have power to impose the punishment aforesaid.

(3.) Consular officers shall take such precautionary measures as seem to them proper and expedient for the prevention of such offences.

155.—(1.) If a British subject—

(i.) Smuggles, or attempts to smuggle, out of the Ottoman dominions any goods on exportation whereof a duty is payable to the Ottoman or Egyptian Government;

(ii.) Imports or exports, or attempts to import or export, into or out of the Ottoman dominions any goods, intending and attempting to evade payment of duty payable thereon to the Ottoman or Egyptian Government;

(iii.) Imports or exports, or attempts to import or export, into or out of the Ottoman dominions any goods the importation or exportation whereof into or out of the Ottoman dominions is prohibited by law;

(iv.) Without a proper licence, sells, or attempts to sell, or offers for sale, in the Ottoman dominions, any goods whereof the Ottoman or Egyptian Government has by law a monopoly; in each of the four cases aforesaid he shall be guilty of a grave offence against this Order.

(2.) Where a person is charged with such an offence as in this Article is mentioned, the Court may seize the goods in relation to which the alleged offence was committed, and may hold the same until after the hearing of the charge.

(3.) If a person so charged is convicted, then those goods, whether they have been so seized or not, shall be forfeited to Her Majesty the Queen; and the Court shall either deliver them to the proper Ottoman or Egyptian officer, for the use of the Ottoman or Egyptian Government, as the case may be, or shall dispose of them otherwise, as the Court thinks fit.

156.—(1.) Where by agreement among the Diplomatic or Consular Representatives in the Ottoman dominions of foreign States, or some of them, in conjunction with the Ottoman or Egyptian authorities, Sanitary, or Police, or Port, or Game, or other Regulations are established, and the same, as far as they affect British subjects, are approved by the Secretary of State, the Court may, subject and according to the provisions of this Order, entertain any complaint made against a British subject for a breach of those Regulations, and may enforce payment of any fine incurred by that subject or person in respect of that breach, in like manner, as nearly as may be, as if that breach were by this Order declared to be an offence against this Order.

(2.) In any such case the fine recovered shall, notwithstanding anything in this Order, be disposed of and applied in manner provided by those Regulations.

157. Every person subject to the criminal jurisdiction of the Court who prints, publishes, or offers for sale any printed or written newspaper or other publication containing matter calculated to excite tumult or disorder, or to excite enmity between Her Majesty's subjects and the Government of any part of the Ottoman dominions, or between that Government and its subjects, shall be guilty of an offence against this Order, and may, in addition to or in lieu of any other punishment, be ordered to give security for good behaviour; and in default thereof, or on a further conviction for the like offence, he may be ordered to be deported.

An offence against this Article shall not be tried except by the Supreme Court.

PART VII.—MISCELLANEOUS.

158.—(1.) If an officer of the Court employed to execute an order loses by neglect or omission the opportunity of executing it, then, on complaint of the person aggrieved, and proof of the fact alleged, the Court may, if it thinks fit, order the officer to pay the damages sustained by the person complaining, or part thereof.

(2.) The order shall be enforced as an order directing payment of money.

159.—(1.) If a clerk or officer of the Court, acting under pretence of the process or authority of the Court, is charged with extortion, or with not paying over money duly levied, or with other misconduct, the Court, if it thinks fit, may inquire into the charge in a summary way, and may for that purpose summon and enforce the attendance of all necessary persons, as in an action, and may make such order for the repayment of any money extorted, or for the payment over of any money levied, and for the payment of such damages and costs, as the Court thinks fit.

(2.) The Court may also, if it thinks fit, on the same inquiry, impose on the clerk or officer such fine, not exceeding 5l. for each offence, as the Court thinks fit.

(3.) A clerk or officer punished under this Article shall not be liable to an action in respect of the same matter; and any such action, if begun, shall be stayed by the Court in such manner and on such terms as the Court thinks fit.

160.—(1.) If any person, subject to the criminal jurisdiction of a Court, does any of the following things, namely:—

(a.) Wilfully, by act or threat, obstructs an officer of, or person executing any process of the Court in the performance of his duty; or

(b.) Within or close to the room or place where the Court is sitting wilfully misbehaves in a violent, threatening, or disrespectful manner, to the disturbance of the Court, or to the intimidation of suitors or others resorting thereto; or

(c.) Wilfully insults any member of the Court, or any assessor or juror, or any person acting as a clerk or officer of the Court, during his sitting or attendance in Court, or in his going to or returning from Court; or

(d.) Does any act in relation to the Supreme Court or a Provincial Court, or a matter pending therein, which, if done in relation to the High Court in England, would be punishable as a contempt of that Court,—

He shall be guilty, in the case of the Supreme Court or a Provincial Court, of a grave offence, and in the case of a Local Court, of an offence, against this Order:

Provided that the Supreme Court or a Provincial Court, if it thinks fit, instead of directing proceedings as for an offence against this Order, may order the offender to be apprehended forthwith, with or without warrant, and on inquiry and consideration, and after the hearing of any defence which such person may offer, without further process or trial, may adjudge him to be punished with a fine not exceeding 10l., or with imprisonment not exceeding twenty-four hours, at the discretion of the Court.

(2.) A Minute shall be made and kept of every such case of punishment, recording the facts of the offence, and the extent of the punishment. In the case of a Provincial Court, a copy of the Minute shall be forthwith sent to the Supreme Court, and in the case of a Local Court, to the Provincial Court.

(3.) Nothing herein shall interfere with the power of the Court to remove or exclude persons who interrupt or obstruct the proceedings of the Court.

161. Nothing in this Order shall deprive the Court of the right to observe, and to enforce the observance of, or shall deprive any person of the benefit of, any reasonable custom existing in the Ottoman dominions, unless this Order contains some express and specific provision incompatible with the observance thereof.

162. Nothing in this Order shall prevent any Consular officer in the Ottoman dominions from doing anything which Her Majesty's Consuls in the dominions of any other State in amity with Her Majesty are, for the time being, by law, usage, or sufferance, entitled or enabled to do.

163. The Ambassador and the Judge of the Supreme Court shall have power to make and alter Regulations (to be called Queen's Regulations) for the following purposes, that is to say:—

(1.) For securing the observance of any Treaty for the time being in force relating to any place to which this Order applies, or of any native or local law or custom, whether relating to trade, commerce, revenue, or any other matter.

(2.) For the peace, order, and good government of British subjects within any such place in relation to matters not provided for by this Order.

(3.) For requiring Returns to be made of the nature, quantity, and value of articles exported from or imported into his district, or any part thereof, by or on account of any British subject who is subject to this Order, or in any British ship, and for prescribing the times and manner at or in which, and the persons by whom, such Returns are to be made.

(4.) For the governance, visitation, care, and superintendence of prisons.

Any Regulations made under this Article may provide for forfeiture of any goods, receptacles, or things in relation to which, or to the contents of which, any breach is committed of such Regulations, or of any Treaty or any native or local law or custom, the observance of which is provided for by such Regulations.

Any Regulation made under this Article shall, when allowed by the Secretary of State, and published as he directs, have effect as if contained in this Order.

164.—(1.) Her Majesty's Consuls in the Ottoman dominions may levy dues not exceeding the rate of 2d. a-ton on every British merchant-ship (a) visiting or passing Constantinople, or visiting any other port in a Consular district, or (b) being at any other place within the Consular district of Constantinople, and having occasion to send any seamen to the British hospital at Constantinople.

The produce of the said dues shall be applied towards the establishment, maintenance, and support, in the Ottoman dominions, of British hospitals; and the dues shall be called hospital dues.

The Secretary of State may, by writing under his hand, issue such instructions as to him seem fit, for the following purposes, or any of them (that is to say):—

For fixing (within the limit of 2d. a-ton) the rate per ton at which the hospital dues are to be levied at any port;

For exempting any ship in respect whereof, within any defined period, the hospital dues have once been paid, from any further payment thereof;

For regulating the application of the produce of the hospital dues;

For limiting the extent to which any Consul shall exercise jurisdiction over British subjects in the Ottoman dominions in any matter relating to the hospital dues.

(2.) A further fee of 10s. shall be charged at Her Majesty's Consulate at Constantinople for each application for a Firman, or Firmans, for each British ship in order to pass the Straits.

(3.) Any master of a British ship who fails to pay the said dues or fee, or evades the payment thereof, shall be guilty of an offence against this Order, and the amount of such dues or fee, and of any fine imposed, may be levied by seizure and sale of the ship.

(4.) No dues under this Article shall be levied in Egypt unless the Secretary of State shall by order so direct.

165.—(1.) Every British subject resident shall, in January in every year, register himself at the Consulate of the Consular district within which he is resident; provided that—

(a.) The registration of a man shall comprise the registration of his wife, if living with him; and (b) the registration of the head of a family shall be deemed to comprise the registration of all females and minors being his relatives, in whatever degree, living under the same roof with him at the time of his registration.

(2.) The Consular officer may, without fee, register any British subjects being minors living in the houses of foreigners or Ottoman subjects.

(3.) Every British subject arriving at a place in the Ottoman dominions where there is a Consular office, unless borne on the muster-roll of a British ship there arriving, shall, on the expiration of one month after arrival, be deemed for the purposes of this Article to be resident, and shall register himself accordingly.

(4.) A person shall not be required to register himself oftener than once in a year, reckoned from the 1st January.

(5.) The Consular officer shall yearly give to each person registered by him a certificate of registration, signed by him and sealed with his Consular seal.

(6.) The name of a wife, if her registration is comprised in her husband's, shall, unless in any case the Consular officer sees good reason to the contrary, be indorsed on the husband's certificate.

(7.) The names and descriptions of females and minors whose registration is comprised in that of the head of the family shall, unless in any case the Consular officer sees good reason to the contrary, be indorsed on the certificate of the head of the family.

(8.) In the case of a British-protected person, the date of issue and the duration of the certificate shall be indorsed in Turkish or Arabic on the certificate.

(9.) Every person shall, on every registration of himself, pay a fee of 2s. 6d., or such other fee as the Secretary of State from time to time appoints.

(10.) The amount of the fee may be uniform for all persons, or may vary according to the position and circumstances of different classes, if the Secretary of State from time to time so directs, but may not in any case exceed 5s.

(11.) Every person by this Order required to register himself or herself shall, unless excused by the Consular officer, attend personally for that purpose at the Consulate, on each occasion of registration.

(12.) If any person fails to comply with the provisions of this Order respecting registration, and does not excuse his or her failure to the satisfaction of the Consular officer, he or she shall be guilty of an offence against this Order, and any Court or authority may, if it thinks fit, decline to recognize him as a British subject.

166. Except as in this Order otherwise provided, all fees, dues, fines, and other receipts under this Order shall be carried to the public account, and shall be accounted for and paid as the Secretary of State, with the concurrence of the Treasury, directs.

167. Where, by virtue of this Order or otherwise, any Imperial Act, or any Law in force in a British Possession, Colony, or Settlement, is applicable in any place within the limits of this Order such Act or Law shall be deemed applicable so far only as the constitution and jurisdiction of the Courts acting under this Order and the local circumstances permit, and, for the purpose of facilitating the application of any such Act or Law, it may be construed with such alterations and adaptations not affecting the substance as may be necessary, and anything by such Act or Law required to be done by or to any Court, Judge, officer, or authority may be done by or to a Court, Judge, officer, or authority having the like or analogous functions, or by or to any officer designated by the Court for that purpose, and the seal of the Court may be substituted for any seal required by any such Act or Law; and in case any difficulty occurs in the application of any such Act or Law, it shall be lawful for the Secretary of State to direct by and to whom, and in what manner, anything to be done under such Act or Law is to be done, and such Act or Law shall, in its application to matters arising within the limits of this Order, be construed accordingly.

168. Not later than the 31st March in each year the Judge shall send to the Secretary of State a report on the operation of this Order up to the 31st January in that year, showing for the then last twelve months the number and nature of the proceedings, criminal and civil, taken in the Court under this Order, and the result thereof, and the number and amount of fees received, and containing an abstract of the registration list, and such other information, and being in such form, as the Secretary of State from time to time directs.

169.—(1.) A printed copy of this Order shall be always kept exhibited in a conspicuous place in each Consular office and in each Court-house.

(2.) Printed copies shall be sold at such reasonable price as the Supreme Court directs.

(3.) Judicial notice shall be taken of this Order, and of the commencement thereof, and of the appointment of Consuls, and of the constitution and limits of the Courts and districts, and of Consular seals and signatures, and of any Rules made or in force under this Order, and no proof shall be required of any of such matters.

The provisions of "The Evidence Act, 1851" (14 & 15 Vict., cap. 99), secs. 7 and 11, relating to the proof of judicial and other documents, shall extend and be applied for all purposes as if the Courts, districts, and places to which this Order applies were in a British Colony.

170.—(1.) The Orders in Council mentioned in the Schedule to this Order are hereby repealed, but this repeal shall not—

(i.) Affect the past operation of those Orders, or either of them, or any appointment made, or any right, title, obligation, or liability accrued, or the validity or invalidity of anything done or suffered under any of those Orders, before the making of this Order;

(ii.) Interfere with the institution or prosecution of any proceeding or action, criminal or civil, in respect of any offence committed against, or forfeiture incurred or liability accrued under or in consequence of any provision of, any of those Orders, or any Regulation made thereunder;

(iii.) Take away or abridge any protection or benefit given or to be enjoyed in relation thereto.

(2.) Notwithstanding the repeal of the Orders aforesaid, or any other thing in this Order, every Regulation, appointment, and other thing in this Article mentioned shall continue and be as if this Order had not been made; but so that the same may be revoked, altered, or otherwise dealt with under this Order, as if it had been made or done under this Order.

(3.) Criminal or civil proceedings begun under any of the Orders in Council repealed by this Order, and pending at the time when this Order comes into operation, shall, from and after that time, be regulated by the provisions of this Order, as far as the nature and circumstances of each case admits.

(4.) Lists of jurors and assessors in force at the passing of this Order shall continue in force until revised and settled under the provisions of this Order.

171.—(1.) This Order shall take effect at the expiration of one month after it is first exhibited in the public office of the Supreme Court at Constantinople.

(2.) For that purpose the Judge of the Supreme Court shall forthwith, on the receipt by him from the Ambassador of a certified printed copy of this Order, cause the same to be affixed and exhibited conspicuously in that office.

(3.) He shall also keep the same so affixed and exhibited during one month from that first exhibition.

(4.) Notice of the time of that first exhibition shall, as soon as practicable, be published in the office of the Agency for Egypt and at each of the Provincial Consulates in such manner as the Supreme Court may direct.

(5.) A certified printed copy of this Order shall also be affixed and exhibited in the public offices of the Consular Courts at Alexandria and Cairo, at the same time (or as near as circumstances admit) at which it is first exhibited at Constantinople. Proof shall not in any proceeding or matter be required that the provisions of this Article have been complied with, nor shall any act or proceeding be invalidated by any failure to comply with any of such provisions.

(6.) The day on which this Order so takes effect is in this Order referred to as the commencement of this Order.

(7.) Where this Order confers power to make any appointment, Order, Rules, or Regulations, or to do any other thing for the purposes of the Order, that power may be exercised at any time after the passing of this Order, so, however, that any such appointment, Order, Rules, or Regulations shall not take effect before the commencement of this Order.

172. This Order may be cited as "The Ottoman Order in Council, 1899."

*Foreign Office to Solicitor-General.

Sir, Foreign Office, July 2, 1899.

Proposed Conversion of Turkish Loan of 1855.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the accompanying papers relative to a proposed arrangement for the conversion of the Guaranteed Turkish Loan of 1855, on which your opinion is requested.

Under the Convention signed between Great Britain, France, and Turkey on the 27th June, 1855, a loan of 5,000,000*l.* was raised by the Sublime Porte for the Russian war.

The Convention was as follows:—

"ARTICLE I.

"Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland undertakes to recommend to her Parliament to enable her to guarantee jointly with His Majesty the Emperor of the French, and severally, and His Majesty the Emperor of the French engages, subject to the ratification of the legislative body of France, to guarantee conjointly with Her Britannic Majesty the interest of a loan of 5,000,000*l.* to be raised by His Imperial Majesty the Sultan.

"ARTICLE II.

"The interest payable on the said loan of 5,000,000*l.* shall be at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum. There shall, moreover, be paid by the Sublime Porte, the further rate of 1 per cent. per annum on the whole capital of 5,000,000*l.*, by way of sinking fund.

"ARTICLE III.

"The interest and sinking fund of the said loan shall form a charge on the whole revenues of the Ottoman Empire, and specially on the annual amount of the tribute of Egypt, which remains over and above the part thereof appropriated to the first loan, and moreover on the customs of Smyrna and Syria.

"His Imperial Majesty the Sultan engages that he will cause to be remitted to the Bank of England, on or before the 25th June and 25th December in each year, the full amount of one-half year's interest and sinking fund on the whole amount of the said loan to be raised under the conjoint guarantee of Her Britannic Majesty and of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of the French, or on so much thereof as may be raised, until the whole capital borrowed shall be repaid.

"ARTICLE IV.

"Their Majesties the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the Emperor of the French, being desirous to save the Sublime Porte the expenses of remittance, consent to undertake to transmit to the Ottoman Government the proceeds of the above-mentioned loan of 5,000,000*l.* to be raised under the conjoint guarantee of their Majesties. With this view it is agreed that the Contractors for the said loan shall pay the proceeds thereof into the Bank of England for the account of the Turkish Government, to be transmitted to the Sublime Porte by the Agency of the Governments of England and of France.

* A private letter was written to the Solicitor-General stating that as the Attorney-General was absent at Paris in connection with the British Guiana Frontier Arbitration, and time was of importance, Lord Salisbury would be glad to have the Solictor-General's opinion alone.

1899

"ARTICLE V.

"The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Constantinople as soon as possible."

The ratifications of the Convention were duly exchanged at Constantinople on the 12th July, 1855.

The Act 18 & 19 Vict., cap. 99 was accordingly passed, authorizing Her Majesty "to guarantee jointly with the Emperor of the French, and severally, the interest on the loan to be raised by His Imperial Majesty the Sultan, not exceeding interest at the rate of 4*l.* per cent. per annum on a sum of 5,000,000*l.*, upon the terms and conditions set forth in the said Convention."

The loan was authorized by a Firman of the Sultan; and the General Bond of the loan, which constituted the security of the lender, and which with the Firman was deposited in the Bank of England in the name of the Sultan, was worded as follows:—

"We, Constantine Musurus, Envoy Extraordinary of His Imperial Majesty the Sultan, in virtue of the full powers conferred upon us by His Imperial Majesty's Firman, bearing date about the end of July, the original of which is deposited in the Bank of England, have contracted for a loan of 5,000,000*l.*, for the service of his said Imperial Majesty's Government on the terms and conditions hereinafter mentioned: which said loan, and the principal and interest and sinking fund, are charged, in pursuance of the above Imperial Firman, on the whole revenues of the Ottoman Empire, and specially on so much of the tribute payable to His Imperial Majesty by His Highness the Pasha of Egypt as shall remain over and above the part thereof appropriated to the loan of 3,000,000*l.*, raised for the service of the Ottoman Empire, in London and Paris, in the year 1854, and moreover on the customs of Smyrna and Syria.

"The conditions of the said loan are as follows:—

"1. Interest to be payable at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum on the said sum of 5,000,000*l.* on the 1st February and the 1st August in every year, in London at the Bank of England, the first payment to be made on the 1st February, 1856.

"2. A sum equal to 1 per cent. on said sum of 5,000,000*l.*, together with a sum equal to one year's interest on so much of the said loan as shall have been redeemed, shall be employed annually on the 1st August in each year, commencing on the 1st August, 1859, either in the purchase of certificates of the loan in the public market, or, at the option of the Imperial Ottoman Government, in paying off at par such certificates as shall be ascertained by lot, to be drawn in London in the presence of the Representative of His Imperial Majesty at London and the Chief Cashier and Chief Accountant of the Bank of England, at some time in the month of May in each year. The numbers of the certificates drawn shall be advertised in three of the chief journals published in London and Paris at least two months before the time fixed for redemption thereof; the principal of such certificates, with the interest due, shall be payable at the Bank of England in London on the 1st day of August next following such drawing. All certificates so drawn shall cease to bear interest from the time fixed for redemption thereof, and if not presented within twelve months thereafter, such certificates, with the outstanding interest thereon up to the said 1st August, will only be paid on the written order of His Imperial Majesty's Representative at London. The certificates redeemed, with all the coupons then attached thereto, shall, when paid off, be forthwith cancelled in the presence of His Imperial Majesty's Representative at London and of the Chief Cashier of the Bank of England.

"3. The Imperial Ottoman Government reserve to themselves the power of redeeming the whole loan at par on the expiration of twenty years from the time when the application of the sinking fund shall commence, or at any time thereafter on giving six months' notice by advertisement in the journals of London and Paris.

"4. Certificates shall be issued for the said loan reciting these presents, to which the signet of His Imperial Majesty's Representative in London shall be attached, countersigned by the principal Secretary of the Embassy, bearing coupons for half-yearly payments of interest thereon attached. In case any certificates shall remain undischarged after all the coupons attached thereto are exhausted, His Imperial Majesty's Government shall deposit with the Bank of England additional coupons through His Imperial Majesty's Representative at London, in order that such coupons may be delivered to the holders of such bonds, and so from time to time.

"Dated this 20th day of August, 1855.

(Signed) "C. MUSURUS."

The words of this General Bond were inserted in each certificate or bond.

It will be seen from the terms of the certificate or bond that so much of the loan as was outstanding on the 1st August, 1879 (i.e., twenty years from the commencement of the application of the sinking fund on the 1st August, 1859), was then, or at any time thereafter, liable to be redeemed at par by the Imperial Ottoman Government on their giving six months' notice. In the absence of the exercise of that power of redemption, the whole loan would have been paid off by the action of the annual sinking fund by the 1st August, 1900.

For twenty years the Porte fulfilled its obligations, and the loan of 5,000,000*l.* was, by means of the sinking fund, applied in payment of drawn bonds, reduced by 1,184,800*l.* to 3,815,200*l.*

In 1875 the Porte made default in the payment of interest and sinking fund, and the British and French Governments were called upon under the guarantee to make good the deficiency in payment of interest. Eventually the following arrangement was made to meet this liability.

By the occupation of Cyprus, in pursuance of the Anglo-Turkish Convention of the 4th June, 1878, Her Majesty's Government acquired control over the revenues of that island subject to the condition of paying to the Porte the surplus of those revenues, which was fixed by the Annex to the Convention at 92,500*l.* a-year.

So much of this sum as is required, in addition to the assigned portion of the Egyptian Tribute (72,000*l.* a-year), has been applied to provide the interest on the outstanding portion of the loan.

Copies of the Convention and Annex are inclosed herewith (Paper A).

It is to be noted that the ratifications of this Convention were never exchanged. The Sultan attached to the ratification, signed by him, reservations and qualifications which Her Majesty's Government were unable to accept, and the ratification signed by the Queen was eventually returned to this country. The circumstances are detailed in the Memorandum inclosed (Paper B).

The Convention has, however, had full operation so far as the occupation of Cyprus is concerned, and has frequently been referred to by the Sultan as binding on both Governments.

The present method of dealing with the loan is as shown in the following Statement:—

Interest at 4 per cent. on 3,815,200*l.*	152,608
Expenses of management	1,144
Total charge	153,752
To meet which there is available the assigned part of the Egyptian Tribute, viz.	72,000
leaving a sum of	81,752
to be met out of the Cyprus Tribute, viz.	92,500
Accordingly there has been an annual surplus on the Cyprus Tribute amounting to (about)	10,748

Practical difficulties stood in the way of annually applying the surplus tribute to the redemption of drawn bonds. Accordingly, the money has been annually retained by Her Majesty's Government and it has been invested in Consols; the retention of the money having been held to be justified by the fact that the annual sinking fund which the Imperial Ottoman Government was bound to provide is, equally with the interest, chargeable on the whole revenue of the Ottoman Empire, of which the Cyprus Tribute forms a part.

It should be noted, that though no certificates (or bonds) have been redeemed and cancelled since 1875, yet the certificates (or bonds) have been regularly drawn and the numbers thereof duly advertised, with the result that all the certificates (or bonds) have been drawn with the exception of a few, amounting to 8,900*l.*, which remain to be drawn next year.

It is proposed now (1) that the Porte should raise and issue a new loan to an amount not exceeding 4,254,000*l.*, bearing 2½ per cent. interest, the service of such loan (including interest and amortisation in 60 years) being provided for by a fixed annuity of 3·235 per cent., which should be charged on the Egyptian Tribute amounting to 72,000*l.* and on 65,500*l.* of the Cyprus Tribute, and the payment of which should be guaranteed by the British Parliament; and (2) that the new loan, together with the cash accumulated from the surplus Cyprus Tribute, should be applied to redemption of the outstanding portion of the old loan and to the expenses of such redemption; a sum of 600,000*l.* being retained by the Imperial Ottoman Government in consideration of their surrendering all claim during the currency of the loan to 27,000*l.* of the annual payment out of the revenues of Cyprus.

These arrangements were embodied in a Convention signed by Lord Salisbury and the Turkish Ambassador, in virtue of full powers from the two Sovereigns, on the 3rd August, 1898, copy of which is inclosed herewith (Paper C).

The Sultan is understood, however, to make difficulties about ratifying the Convention on the ground that it relates to financial matters which should, according to the custom now prevailing, be dealt with by Agreement between the two Governments, and not by a Convention between the Sovereigns. His Majesty also desired that an addition should be made to the Agreement, to the following effect:—

"Par suite de la conclusion du présent Acte, les clauses de la Convention de Chypre sont maintenues intactes, et les droits de souveraineté de Sa Majesté Impériale le Sultan sur l'île sont reconnus comme par le passé."

To meet the wishes of the Sultan, so far as practicable, an Agreement has been drafted, which is inclosed herewith (Paper D), and which, if accepted by the Turkish Government, would be signed by Lord Salisbury and the Turkish Ambassador under full powers, and on production of satisfactory evidence by the Ambassador that the terms were approved by the Sultan and his Ministers.

I am to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether such an Agreement as is contemplated would be as binding on the respective Governments concerned as the Convention under which the Guaranteed Loan of 1855 was issued;

2. Whether the different procedure proposed to be followed on the present occasion would justify any future Sultan in pleading that the provisions of the Agreement, and especially Article V, are not binding on him;

3. Whether there is anything in the proposed arrangement and procedure to which the bondholders could properly take exception, or which could be pleaded by them in support of an objection to being paid off;

4. Whether the suspension of the operation of the sinking fund (since 1875) in any way affects the right of the Imperial Ottoman Government to pay off at their discretion, without special notice, the certificates or bonds already drawn, but not redeemed, viz., the whole of the outstanding loan, less 8,900*l.*, or 3,806,300*l.*; or

5. Whether the holders of the drawn bonds could legally or equitably claim to receive:—

(a.) The six months' notice required to be given in case the Imperial Ottoman Government should exercise their power of redeeming the whole loan during its currency; or

(b.) The notice of "at least two months" required to be given in the case of drawn certificates (or bonds) before the term fixed for their redemption in ordinary course.

I am also to request that Lord Salisbury may be favoured with any general observations which you may have to make on the subject.

I have, &c.

(D.) Draft Agreement.

Report.

1. Such an arrangement would be as binding on the respective Governments as the Convention.

2. No such plea could be raised. Satisfactory evidence will, of course, have been produced by the Ambassador that the terms are approved by the Sultan and his Ministers, and the Agreement will have been acted on by the Turkish Government. No future Sultan can dispute its validity.

3. No.

4 and 5. I think that the holders of the drawn bonds are entitled to six months' notice. The drawing was not acted upon, and at this distance of time I do not think that the holders of the drawn bonds can be paid off without notice.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 15, 1898.

Cutting of Eastern Extension Telegraph Co.'s cable during war between Spain and United States.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith, for your consideration, the papers noted in the accompanying lists, which relate to the cutting, by the American naval authorities, during the recent hostilities between Spain and the United States, of the cables of the Eastern Extension Australasia and China Telegraph Company (Limited), and other matters arising thereout.

L.O.R. 1898 (Conf. 7199), p. 93.

The papers enumerated in list (A) are those which accompanied my letter of the 23rd July last, and on which you reported in your letter of the 9th August. A printed copy of your Report is annexed for convenience of reference.

The papers in list (B) show the subsequent communications which have passed between this Department, the Eastern Extension Company, and the United States' Representative at this Court.

As, in your Report of the 9th August, you advised that the matter should be brought unofficially before the United States' Government, an opportunity was taken of mentioning the circumstances to Mr. Henry White, the United States' Chargé d'Affaires at this Court, and a Memorandum of the facts of the case was handed to him. His reply will be found in his semi-official note of the 22nd August.

The official decision of the United States' Government will be found in the note from the Honourable John Hay to the Marquess of Tweeddale, inclosed in his Lordship's letter of the 24th ultimo. It will be seen that, without specifying any particular portion of the claim, the United States' Government maintain generally that they are not justly liable to any claim in the way of compensation or damages for any losses incurred by the Company through the interruption of the service between Manila and Hong Kong.

On the receipt of that reply, the Company submitted the case for the consideration of Sir Robert Reid and Mr. Henry Sutton, whose opinion, dated the 21st November, together with a further representation (based thereon) which the Company have addressed to the United States' Government, is also inclosed in Lord Tweeddale's above-mentioned letter.

It will be seen that this representation, while admitting that the Company have no legal claim for loss of traffic, puts forward a claim for 900*l.* for compensation for the cost of effecting repairs, particulars of which are given, and that the Marquess of Tweeddale requests Lord Salisbury to instruct Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington to support it.

I am next to invite your consideration of that portion of Lord Tweeddale's letter to Mr. White of the 24th ultimo which relates to the rights acquired in the Philippine Islands by the Company by virtue of Concessions granted to them at various times by the Spanish Government.

A summary of these Concessions is inclosed in Lord Tweeddale's letter of the 1st instant, and copies of them accompany his Lordship's note of the 12th instant. I am also to direct your attention to the supplemental opinion of Sir Robert Reid and Mr. Sutton, also dated the 21st November, as to the obligations of the United States in regard to those pre-existing Concessions and to the facts disclosed in the Company's letter of the 1st instant.

It appears desirable here to mention that the actual terms of the Treaty lately concluded at Paris between the United States of America and Spain are not yet known to Her Majesty's Government, and it is therefore possibly premature to assume that the Philippine Islands are to be fully annexed to the territories of the United States.

It seems, however, safe to anticipate that failing annexation some sort of autonomous Government will be established in these islands under the protection and control of the United States, and in these circumstances the responsibilities, whatever these may be, of the United States, with regard to existing Concessions, would probably not differ materially from those of an annexing Power.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration in connection with your Report of the 9th August last, and favour Lord Salisbury, at your earliest convenience, with your opinion on the following points:—

1. In view of considerations advanced in the opinion furnished to the Company by Sir Robert Reid and by Mr. Sutton, or on any other, and if so what, grounds, is it in your judgment proper or desirable that instructions should be given to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington to officially support the Company's claim for compensation in respect of the cost of effecting repairs to the cut cable?

2. Should you be of opinion that the course is undesirable, do you still consider that his Excellency should be instructed to support the claim unofficially, and, if so, on what special grounds?

3. Are the United States bound by international law or usage, on taking possession of or assuming some form of Protectorate over the Philippine Islands, to respect the Concession granted by Spain to the Eastern Extension Company both as to exclusive rights and as to subsidies?

4. Whether the United States' Government can lawfully avail themselves of the benefits of the cable communication without affirming the Concessions if they should not exercise the right of free Government telegrams or other Government rights reserved by the Concession.

5. Whether Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington should make an official or unofficial representation to the United States' Government with regard to the matters referred to in the preceding paragraph in the sense of the opinion you may think well to express thereon, and to favour Lord Salisbury with any general observations which the consideration of these papers may suggest.

I have, &c.

Report.

1 and 2. There is no positive rule of international law governing the question which arises in this case.

The claim of the Company can be put forward only as a claim to compensation in respect of injury to their property by a belligerent under circumstances involving no blame on their part.

It would, in our opinion, be reasonable that a rule should be established that under such circumstances compensation for the actual cost of repairs should be made; and we think that the claim should be at present unofficially supported by Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington.

In the despatches and memoranda of the United States' Government the claim for the actual cost of repairs is not very clearly separated from the claim now abandoned for loss of custom. It is possible that the United States' Government may recognize that, under the circumstances, it is not unreasonable they should pay the comparatively small sum asked in respect of repairs.

How far it may be expedient ultimately to press the claim is a matter for the consideration of the Company, in view of the much more important question as to the continued validity of their Concessions which is now open between them and the United States.

Whether the claim shall be officially pressed is a matter for later consideration; but our present opinion is that it is very desirable to establish, if possible, a precedent for compensation in such a case.

We doubt whether the distinction drawn by Sir Robert Reid and Mr. H. Sutton between the case of a submarine cable and other property of a neutral can be supported, and we should prefer to base the claim upon the injury done to the property of an innocent neutral by a belligerent for his own purposes, in analogy to the "droit d'angarie."

3. In our opinion, the United States are bound, on taking possession of the Philippine Islands or assuming effective control of them, whether under the form of a Protectorate or otherwise, to respect the Concessions granted by Spain to the Eastern Extension Company both as to exclusive rights and as to subsidy. The obligation is one of a local nature, although contracted by the Government of Spain. On the faith of it, the Company has expended a large sum of money on works for the benefit of the Philippines, and the obligations in respect of the Concessions seem to us to belong clearly to that class of local obligations which have always been held to pass with the territory.

4. The use by the United States' Government of the cable communication without exercising the right of free Government telegrams or other Government rights reserved by the Concession would not of itself, in our opinion, render the Concessions binding on the United States' Government. The fact that they are binding depends on the general principles of international law as to the effect of conquest, but if the United States' Government use the cables, this fact may fairly be referred to as an illustration of the local nature of the obligations, and as fortifying the claim that they should be treated as binding.

5. We can hardly suppose that the United States' Government propose to ignore the Concession of the Telegraph Company, but if it should appear that there is any danger of their not being recognized, we think that official representations may properly be made by Her Majesty's Ambassador to the United States' Government.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, February 23, 1899.

Eastern Telegraph Co.'s claim for compensation for cutting of their cable during Spanish-American war.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to inclose for your consideration, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to claims for compensation arising out of the cutting by the American naval authorities, during the recent hostilities between Spain and the United States, of the cables of the Eastern Extension Australasia and China Telegraph Company (Limited).

L.O.R. 1898 (Conf. 7199), p. 93.

This matter has already formed the subject of your Reports of the 9th August, 1898, and of the 4th ultimo, printed copies of which are, herewith, inclosed for convenience of reference.

Upon receipt of your last-named Report, instructions in accordance therewith were addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington (see draft of despatch No. 4, Treaty, Confidential, of the 21st ultimo).

In connection with those instructions, I am next to refer you to Sir Julian Pauncefote's telegram of the 7th instant, and to the telegraphic reply returned thereto, on the 9th inst.

As matters stand, therefore, at the present time, Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington has made no representation to the United States' Government with regard to the claim for compensation for the actual cost of repairs necessitated by the cutting of the Company's cable, and his Excellency has been requested, by telegraph, to abstain from taking any action pending the receipt of further instructions.

I am now to invite your attention to the opinion of the United States' Attorney-General which accompanies Sir Julian Pauncefote's despatches No. 5, Treaty, of the 7th instant. From the terms of the Note in which the American Secretary of State communicates this opinion to Her Majesty's Ambassador, it is understood to be endorsed by the United States' Government. It will be seen that the opinion has been formed, not on any representation made by Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington, but upon the direct representation made by the Company to the American Chargé d'Affaires at this Court. That Representation was based on the opinions of Sir Robert Reid and Mr. H. Sutton, copies of which accompanied it as shown by the inclosures in the Company's letter of the 24th November last.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the following points:—

1. Having regard to the opinion expressed by the United States' Attorney-General, should any supplementary instructions be sent to Sir Julian Pauncefote in addition to those already furnished to his Excellency?

2. If so, what further instructions would you advise, and what arguments could, in your opinion, most advantageously be added to rebut the views expressed by Mr. Griggs, so far as regards the sole question of compensation for the actual cost of repairs?

3. Should you consider that no further instructions are necessary, and that no rebutting arguments could usefully be advanced, the question arises whether Sir Julian Pauncefote should be directed to act on the instructions already sent to him, or to take no further steps in the matter?

In considering these points, I am to mention that the Company were informed that Her Majesty's Ambassador would be instructed to support their claim for repairs unofficially, and that no further communication has, for the present, been made to them.

I have, &c.

1. We think that Sir Julian Pauncefote may be told that he may continue to unofficially support the claim of the Telegraph Company, but that it cannot be pressed as a matter of right.

It would be desirable that the United States should concur with Her Majesty's Government in establishing a precedent for compensation in such cases, but there is no sufficient ground for advancing a claim as one of right according to International Law.

2. The opinion of Mr. Griggs is limited to the strictly legal aspect of the case, and we do not advise that any controversy should be raised upon this point.

3. We think that Sir Julian Pauncefote should proceed on the lines indicated in our answer to the first question.

Rights of Eastern Telegraph Co. in Philippine Is. and of Cuba Submarine Telegraph Co. in Cuba.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit, for your consideration, a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington, inclosing a note addressed to his Excellency by the United States' Secretary of State, respecting—

(a.) The rights acquired by the Eastern Extension, Australasia, and China Telegraph Company (Limited), in the Philippine Islands, by virtue of Concessions granted to them at various times by the Spanish Government; and

(b.) The rights acquired in Cuba by the Cuba Submarine Telegraph Company by virtue of Concessions similarly granted to them.

With regard to (a), the question formed the subject of paragraphs 3, 4, and 5 of your Report of the 4th January last, a printed copy of which is inclosed for convenience of reference. The matter has not yet reached a final stage, and the Company have been requested to furnish copies of the whole of their various Concessions for the more complete information of the United States' Attorney-General. The correspondence inclosed will, however, explain what has passed upon the subject since the date of your Report above referred to.

With regard to the affairs of the Cuba Submarine Telegraph Company, I am to invite your attention to the correspondence inclosed, and more especially to the telegraphic instructions sent to Sir Julian Pauncefote on the 3rd February last, and to the note addressed by his Excellency to Mr. Hay, which forms the inclosure in his despatch No. 8, Treaty, of the 14th of that month.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and, with reference to your Report of the 4th January last, that you will favour Lord Salisbury with such observations as you may think it desirable to offer as to the distinction drawn by the United States' Government between their respective international obligations in the Philippine Islands and in the Island of Cuba.

Report.

We are quite unable to regard the occupation of Cuba by the United States as in any way analogous to a military occupation during war. The occupation began upon the conclusion of the Treaty of Peace, by which it was provided that Spain relinquished all claim of sovereignty over Cuba, and that the United States, who were to occupy the island on its evacuation by Spain, were to assume all obligations that, under international law, might result from such occupation for the protection of life and property. Article VIII provided for the security of private property, Article IX for the security of individuals, Article X for the free exercise of religion, Article XI for the administration of justice, Article XII for pending judicial proceedings, Article XIII for rights in copyrights and patents, Article XIV for the establishment of Spanish Consular officers. All these provisions apply to Cuba, and while Article XVI states that the obligations of the United States with regard to Cuba are limited to the time of its occupancy, it further provides that it will, upon the termination of its occupancy, "advise" any Government established in the island to assume the same obligations. Such an occupation is not in the slightest degree analogous to a mere military occupation. It may or may not be temporary, but so long as it lasts it carries with it the obligation to respect such local obligations as the Concessions of the Telegraph Company.

It need not be contended that the United States assumed absolute responsibility for the permanent observance of these Concessions in Cuba, but they are bound to respect them during the occupation, and to "advise" any succeeding Government to do the like. This obligation appears to us to result from the character of the occupation itself, and from the terms of the Treaty.

Gentlemen,

Messrs. Warner and Co.'s claim on U. S. for losses through blockade of Manila.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list respecting a claim preferred by Messrs. Warner, Barnes, and Co., of Manila, against the United States' Government on account of the losses sustained by their firm owing to their having been prevented by the action of the United States' naval authorities from fulfilling their outstanding contracts for the shipment at that port of certain cargoes of hemp during the months of May to July 1898.

From the account received from Messrs. Bibby Brothers and Co. (Paper A), agents for Messrs. Warner, Barnes, and Co., it appears that the latter, at the time of the outbreak of hostilities between Spain and the United States, had several contracts outstanding for the shipment of Manila hemp, and had chartered, for the purpose of fulfilling those contracts, the British ships "Crown of Germany" and "Honolulu" and the German ship "Ebenezer" (all three sailing-vessels). This purpose, however, they were unable to carry into effect owing to the intervention of the United States' authorities, with the result that the firm suffered heavy losses.

The circumstances in which the intervention took place, and the particulars of Messrs. Warner, Barnes, and Co.'s claims, are described in a despatch and its inclosures (Paper B), which have been received from the Acting British Consul at Manila.

No official declaration of a blockade of Manila was, so far as is known at this Office, ever made; but from the facts which have from time to time been reported, and which are summarized in the inclosed Memorandum (Paper C), a blockade seems undoubtedly to have existed, although it may never have been formally proclaimed; and strong evidence that it was effective is afforded by the fact, that the ships chartered by Messrs. Warner, Barnes, and Co. were all either warned away or refused entry, while there is no evidence of ships getting through the blockading squadron.

The claim does not appear to Lord Salisbury to be one in which Her Majesty's Government can properly intervene; but before communicating with Messrs. Bibby Brothers and Co., his Lordship would be glad to be favoured with your opinion on the subject, and with any remarks on the case generally which may, in your judgment, be of assistance to him in arriving at a decision.

In our opinion, this is not a case in which Her Majesty's Government can properly intervene. There appears to be no doubt that a blockade, by the authority of the United States' Government, de facto existed. This is a complete justification for turning back any vessels attempting to enter.

The question of notice might be material if any attempt had been made to confiscate the vessels for breach of the blockade, but nothing of this kind occurred

Gentlemen,

Proposed Bankruptcy arrangement with the U.S.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury the accompanying papers as noted in the annexed list relative to an arrangement which Her Majesty's Government propose to conclude with that of the United States providing for the equality of treatment of creditors in the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom on the 4th May, 1898, addressed a Memorial to his Lordship pointing out that British subjects who were creditors of bankrupts domiciled in the United Kingdom suffered injustice owing to the fact that in certain foreign countries the title of a British trustee in bankruptcy to assets in such foreign country is not fully recognized. In this connection the cases of Germany and the United States were specially cited.

With regard to the latter country, a letter from a firm of lawyers at New York accompanied the Memorial, which defined the law regulating bankrupt estates in the State of New York in relation to the point raised by the Association of Chambers of Commerce.

A Declaration (Declaration No. 2) has been appended to the draft Commercial Treaty between the United Kingdom and Germany dealing with this subject, and it is desired that the arrangement contemplated with the United States should be drawn up in the same terms.

I am also to draw your attention to the two opinions given by the legal adviser of Her Majesty's Embassy at Washington with reference to the law, policy, and constitutional position of the United States in regard to the matter.

The Board of Trade consider that negotiations should now be opened with the United States' Government, but before instructing Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires to do so, Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with any suggestions which you may have to offer on the terms of the arrangement which it is proposed to submit to the United States' Government as well as with any general observations which you may desire to add on the matter.

Report.

The proposed arrangement must be confined to movable property. A foreign bankruptcy has not, by the law of England, any effect on real property in this country. Subject to this observation we think that the Declaration appended to the draft Treaty with Germany may be taken as the basis of that to be proposed to the United States.

The object is to bring the law of the United States into conformity with that of England on this point; not to enter into any engagement which would require legislation in England to give effect to it here. A Treaty with the United States would, of course, not be recognized in the English Courts as having the force of law. Mr. Carlisle says that a Treaty would, in the United States, be treated as overriding the law there, and on this view legislation in the various States would not be necessary to give effect to it.

We are, of course, unable to form any estimate of the probability of success in negotiating such an arrangement with the United States.

ZANZIBAR.

No. 57.

[February 22, 1899.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, February 11, 1899.

German jurisdiction over Zanzibaris.

I TRANSMIT, herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, certain despatches, mentioned in the margin,* from Sir A. Hardinge, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Zanzibar and Commissioner in the East Africa Protectorate, relating to questions affecting the claim of the Imperial German Government to exercise jurisdiction in the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar over certain persons who are held by the latter to be subjects of Zanzibar.

The following is a concise statement of the points raised in each despatch:—

No. 19 deals with the case of a Zanzibar Arab who had always been considered a Zanzibar subject. After the rebellion he claimed and obtained German protection on the ground that he held property in the German East African territory, and was there when the German flag was hoisted.

An action was brought against him in the Sultan's Court for the recovery of a debt. Mr. Cracknall, sitting as Judge, decided that the Court had jurisdiction, and gave judgment. The Acting German Consul claimed to know the grounds Mr. Cracknall, as Judge, considers that he is not bound to give his reasons after judgment. The Acting German Consul is aggrieved, and Her Majesty's Government may probably receive representations from the Imperial German Government on the subject of the case through Her Majesty's Embassy at Berlin. The point of real importance in the case is how far Germany can exercise rights over "protected persons" as apart from "subjects." Sir Arthur Hardinge's observations are directed to prove that the former are not entitled to Treaty privileges. The Treaty between Germany and Zanzibar only speaks of "German subjects," but has a most-favoured-nation clause which might entitle Germany to claim only privileges in regard to jurisdiction which are enjoyed by France, whose claims in this respect are wide.

Sir Arthur argues that a native of German East Africa has not in German law all the rights of a German, and cannot therefore be claimed as such, and further, that even if he has such rights in German territory, this fact cannot affect the nationality in Zanzibar of a Zanzibar subject, who cannot in that country be divested of his nationality. Supposing, he says, a native of German East Africa had possessed property in, and had been present himself in, Witu when it was transferred by Germany to England, would the German Government admit that on returning to German territory he was not amenable to German jurisdiction?

No. 20 contains the reply of the Acting German Consul to this argument. He argues that the natives of German East Africa have always been held, in all international respects, to be real nationals of the German Empire, "Reichsangehörige," just as natives of British India are British subjects, although in internal matters they are treated differently from other British subjects who are not natives of India.

Sir Arthur replies that, if the German law does not recognize such persons as German nationals in the full sense of the term, Her Majesty's Government cannot be expected to go beyond the German law, and to admit them to the privileges reserved by Treaty to Germans alone. He also alludes to the position apparently assumed by the German authorities on the coast in regard to Vice-Consul Dundas (No. 318, the 12th October, 1898), viz., that German East Africa is not subject to the Treaties between Great Britain and Germany, but that a special arrangement is necessary to give the Vice-Consul powers over British vessels in the territorial waters of that Protectorate. The Germans refused most favoured treatment in German East Africa to British Indians, and treat them as African natives; and Sir Arthur argues, thereon that either the German mainland is German territory for the purposes of the British Treaties, or that its natives are not Germans for the purposes of the Zanzibar Treaties.

No. 21 deals with the case of a German clerk, in the employment of the Uganda Railway, who was fined in Mr. Craufurd's Court for possessing unlicensed fire-arms. He at first accepted jurisdiction, but, when sentenced, appealed to his Consul, who is believed to have referred to Berlin for instructions with reference to the matter.

Sir. A. Hardinge argues (1), that, so far as the Clerk is concerned, he cannot now be heard to contend that he is not amenable to a jurisdiction to which he originally attorned of his own free will, and (2), that the question of fire-arms being one of those dealt with by the Brussels Act, and that Act giving the territorial Power the right to punish infractions of it, and superseding any existing Treaties in matters to which it relates, the German Government has no locus standi. The German Consul contends that any enactments made by Her Majesty's Government under the Act require sanction by his Government.

Sir A. Hardinge proposes to contest this on the general ground given above.

A copy of Sir A. Hardinge's despatch No. 318 of the 12th October, 1898, which is indirectly alluded to in his Treaty of the 17th November, 1898, is inclosed for convenience of reference, together with a copy of a Minute by Mr. Davidson, Q.C., which deals with the legal aspects of the points raised in Nos. 19, 20, and 21, and a copy of the Brussels Act, the provisions of which are invoked by Sir A. Hardinge in support of his argument.

The jurisdictional claims advanced by the German authorities in Zanzibar raise contentious questions of considerable importance, and I am to request that you will take the various papers now submitted to you into your consideration, and will favour his Lordship with your opinion as to the course which should be pursued in regard to the points which they specially raise together with such other observations as will, in your judgment, be of assistance to Lord Salisbury in dealing with the general questions.

Report.

Abubakr-bin-Abdulla must, in our opinion, be treated in Zanzibar as a subject of that State. Even if he has acquired the right, according to German law, to be treated as a German subject, nothing has occurred to absolve him from his allegiance to the Sultan of Zanzibar. The German Government cannot by its mere act transfer the allegiance of Zanzibaris to the German Government, although it can, if it pleases, confer upon them the privilege of being treated as German subjects in German possessions.

We have not before us the materials for determining whether the inhabitants of the German Protectorate are German subjects or not. This depends on considerations of German law, on which we should desire further information before deciding on the validity of the contention of the German Consul that these persons are German subjects.

The Treaty with Germany mentions only subjects, but the most-favoured-nation clause entitles Germany to the same treatment as France. So far as the text of both the German and French Treaties is concerned, we think that the privileges afforded by these Treaties are confined to German and French subjects and to persons in their employment. If, however, there has been a continuous usage under which persons not properly speaking "Frenchmen" have been treated as Frenchmen for the purposes of the Treaty as having certificates of protection from the French authorities, it might be difficult to confine the rights of France, and consequently those of Germany, to what the terms of the Treaty—strictly read—import.

In the absence of any such well-defined usage, we think that the rights of both France and Germany are confined to the case of those who are properly speaking their subjects, or those who are in the employ of their subjects.

2. In the case of Reich, we think that his submission to the jurisdiction prevents the German Government from being entitled to insist that he was improperly convicted. The right of trial by his own Consular Court is one that may be waived by the defendant. We further think that inasmuch as the offence for which Reich was tried was for having fire-arms in his possession contrary to the provisions of the Brussels Conference and of the laws made in pursuance of those provisions, he was amenable to the jurisdiction of the Court which tried him.

It seems quite clear that in practice the provisions of the Brussels Conference in regard to fire-arms would become a dead letter unless all persons who offend against them—of whatever nationality—are amenable to the Courts of the State within whose territory the offence has been committed. It is obvious that it is by that State that the prohibition against importation must be enforced, and this applies also to the enforcement of penalties for unlawful possession.

We therefore think that by implication the Brussels Conference superseded the right of exterrioriality in the case of offences against its provisions in respect of fire-arms, and that Reich was properly tried.

We have not sufficient materials before us to enable us to decide the question raised in the concluding passages of Sir A. Hardinge's despatch on this case as to whether Germany has surrendered her exterritorial rights generally in this portion of Africa.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, February 13, 1899.

Appeal against Judgment of Zanzibar Court in case of Charlesworth and others v. the Secretary of State.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the accompanying papers, which relate to the question of lodging an appeal on behalf of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs against the recent Judgment of Her Majesty's Court for Zanzibar (sitting as the Court of Appeal from the Court for East Africa), in the case of Charlesworth and others v. the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

The circumstances in which your advice is now sought are briefly as follows:—

After Her Majesty's Government had declined to build a railway from Mombasa in the East Africa Protectorate to a point on Lake Victoria in the Uganda Protectorate, engineers and other persons were sent out to begin the work with as little delay as possible. The situation of the terminal station in the Island of Mombasa, and the direction of the line in its vicinity were quickly settled. It then became necessary to acquire the land required for the station and the line. Mombasa Island is within the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar, and it did not appear that any well-defined legal machinery existed in the Sultanate with regard to the acquisition of land for public or Government purposes. Certain persons were, by the action of the Protectorate Administration, formed into a Committee to inquire into the value of the land required.

The Committee did not bid fair to make any rapid progress, and, as the matter was urgent, the Indian Land Acquisition Act of 1894 (Document A) was applied under the powers given by "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1884" (Document B).

Certain of the land-owners, among whom were Messrs. Charlesworth, Pilling, and Co., were dissatisfied both with the value assigned to the land required for the railway, and also with the mode in which the proceedings had been conducted under the Act, and earlier, under the Committee.

Messrs. Charlesworth and Co. ultimately commenced an action against the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in the Consular Court competent to hear the matter.

The Judgment of this Court will be found in Sir A. Hardinge's despatch No. 173 of the 7th August, 1897 (Document D).

Messrs. Charlesworth and Co. appealed against this Judgment, and the appeal was heard by Her Majesty's Court for Zanzibar, sitting as the Court of Appeal for cases heard in first instance in the East Africa Protectorate.

The text of the Judgment of the Zanzibar Court will be found in Sir A. Hardinge's despatch No. 382 of the 11th December, 1898 (Document E).

It must be added, with a view to giving the necessary explanations as to the several Orders in Council under which the successive stages of the case have been conducted, that, when the action was commenced, the mainland dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar, of which as has been said above, Mombasa Island is a part, although administered by officers acting under the orders of Her Majesty's Government, was, as regards the British extra-territorial Courts, considered as a part of the Protectorate of Zanzibar; the Court in which the action was commenced was therefore held under the provisions of "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1884" (Document B).

Under that Order, appeals from the Consular Court at Mombasa lay to the High Court at Bombay; but, before the appeal could be heard by that latter Court, "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897" (Document C), had come into operation, and the Court at Bombay considered that it had no longer jurisdiction in the matter.

The appeal was therefore heard by Her Majesty's Court for Zanzibar, under the East Africa Order in Council of 1897.

Lord Salisbury consulted the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury as to whether an appeal should be lodged against the Judgment of the Court at Zanzibar and the letter to the Treasury, and the reply received from that Department are inclosed (Documents F and G).

In accordance with the suggestion made by the Lords of the Treasury, Lord

Salisbury directs me to inquire whether, in your opinion, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, an appeal, on behalf of the Secretary of State to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is necessary or desirable.

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any observations which the perusal of the papers may suggest to you, and which would be of use to his Lordship or to the Lords of the Treasury in connection with the case.

Finally, I have the honour to call your especial attention to the last paragraph of the letter from the Treasury, where it is suggested that, should you wish for the assistance of an expert in Indian law in advising on the case, the Attorney-General will no doubt nominate a qualified person for the purpose.

Report.

We do not advise any appeal against the conclusion to which both Courts came, that the Award of the Collector cannot stand.

We advise an appeal against the decision of the Zanzibar Court, on appeal that the claimants were entitled to the value of the buildings. This decision rests on the assumption that the English law applies, which we think incorrect, and we are not satisfied that, even according to English law, the claimants would have been entitled, under the circumstances of this case, to have been awarded the value of the buildings.

We are hardly, at present, in a position to advise whether the amount given for the land (apart from buildings) should also be the subject of appeal. It is certainly very large as compared with what was given in the Court below, but the principle of assessing the value, as on the date of the Declaration of the 2nd November, appears to us to be correct.

We think this point should be considered, in consultation with an expert in Indian law, and need not be finally decided until all the documents have been remitted.

In the meantime, the necessary steps to appeal should be taken.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 3, 1899.

Mr. Rule's application for concession of all pearl fisheries on Zanzibar coasts.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the accompanying paper, marked (A), containing the bases of an application by Mr. Rule, a British subject, to the Government of the Sultan of Zanzibar for a concession of all the pearl or other shell fisheries round the coasts of His Highness' territories.

A letter from Mr. Rule, containing a chart of the coasts in question, is also inclosed, marked (B), and a paper, marked (C), containing Memoranda drawn up in this Office on the points raised by Mr. Rule's application.

The question is whether the grant of a monopoly such as that desired by Mr. Rule would constitute a breach either of the Treaty between Great Britain and Zanzibar of the 30th April, 1886, Paper (D), or of the Act of Berlin, Paper (E), both of which instruments forbid the grant of commercial monopolies.

In this connection, I am to refer you to the Report of the Law Officers of the Crown of the 27th September, 1890, Paper (F), which dealt with a somewhat similar case which arose in regard to the grant by the Liberian Government of a monopoly of the rubber trade in Liberia.

I am to request that you will take the papers now submitted to you into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether Mr. Rule's application can properly receive the support of Her Majesty's Government, or whether its grant by the Sultan of Zanzibar would constitute a breach of the engagements either of His Highness or of Her Majesty under the Anglo-Zanzibar Treaty of 1886 or the Act of Berlin, or both.

Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured at the same time with any observations of a general nature which you may have to offer on the papers herewith.

Report.

We do not think the present case is governed by the Report of the Law Officers of the 27th September, 1890. That Report related to the Anglo-Liberian Treaty of the 21st November, 1848, which, by Article II, stipulated that British subjects should be allowed to buy and sell without being restrained by any monopoly, contract, or exclusive privilege of sale or purchase. The Law Officers reported that a grant of the sole right of collecting india-rubber from the Government lands and forests was not an infringement of this Article, although a grant of the sole right of exporting all india-rubber grown in Liberia was an infringement.

In the present case, by Article V of the Berlin Act, there is not to be granted "a monopoly or favour of any kind in matters of trade."

This would not prevent a lease of any definite bank or banks for the purposes of pearl fishery, but what Mr. Rule applies for is, in substance, the right to exclude all others from pearl fishing within the waters under the control of the Zanzibar Government while he is making the explorations necessary to ascertain the banks on which the industry may be properly carried on.

This appears to us to be a monopoly in the matter of trade within the meaning of the Berlin Act. It is true that it does not directly refer to an exclusive privilege of buying and selling, but it relates to the right to procure and prepare for trade a certain article of commerce.

We, therefore, think that the proposed concession would be contrary to the terms of the Berlin Act, and we recommend that it should not be granted on the basis at present suggested.

The attitude taken up by Her Majesty's Government with regard to the pearl fisheries at Samoa supplies an additional reason for this course.

No. 60.

[September 7, 1899.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, August 11, 1899.

Gentlemen,

French Protection in Zanzibar.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the paper noted in the margin which relates to the serious inconvenience occasioned to the Administration of the Sultanate of Zanzibar by the grant of foreign protection to natives.*

The International Agreements which govern such matters are, in the first place, the Treaty between France and Muscat of the 17th November, 1844, which regulates the relations of France to Zanzibar, and, in the second, the other Treaties to the benefit of which France is entitled under the operation of the most-favoured-nation clause in her own Treaty.

The Treaty between France and Muscat contains the following Articles:—

"ARTICLE III.

"Les Français auront la faculté d'acheter, de vendre, ou de prendre à bail des terres, maisons, magasins, dans les États de Son Altesse le Sultan de Mascate. Nul ne pourra, sous aucun prétexte, pénétrer dans les maisons, magasins, et autres propriétés, possédés ou occupés par des Français ou par des personnes au service des Français, ni les visiter sans le consentement de l'occupant, à moins que ce ne soit avec l'intervention du Consul de France.

"Les Français ne pourront, sous aucun prétexte, être retenus contre leur volonté dans les États du Sultan de Mascate.

"ARTICLE IV.

"Les sujets de Son Altesse le Sultan de Mascate qui seraient au service des Français jouiront de la même protection que les Français eux-mêmes; mais si les sujets de Son Altesse sont convaincus de quelque crime ou infraction punissable par la loi, ils seront congédiés par les Français au service desquels ils se trouvent, et livrés aux autorités locales."

It would thus appear that the only native persons who can, in virtue of the provisions of the Treaty regulating the relations between France and Zanzibar, claim French protection or fly the French flag on their dhows are—

1. Natives of French Protectorates, who were there resident, or at least, were not resident in Zanzibar, when the said Protectorates were established, and
2. The bonâ fide servants of French citizens and protégés; the local authority to be judge of what constitutes bonâ fide service.

The Treaty would seem to exclude, therefore, from French protection all persons not born in French possessions or dependencies, though they may have acquired land there and have been inscribed on the French Consular Register at Zanzibar or Muscat.

The Officers of the Administration of the Sultanate would consequently have a right to decline to recognize exterritorial privileges to native vessels flying the French flag until satisfied that the owner is a bonâ fide citizen or protégé of France. It would not be necessary, in order to act on this principle, to board or search the vessel under the French flag; but in any case in which the Administration had reason to believe that the flag was being improperly hoisted, the master, when he came on shore, would be called upon to produce his papers and prove that he was a French protégé in the sense above indicated. If he refused to produce his papers he would be arrested.

In such matters it would be proper for the officers of the Administration to be guided by the principles of the Ottoman Nationality Law, which has been accepted in Turkey by the foreign Powers, and may, therefore, be assumed to contain nothing contrary to the due exercise of the privileges of exterritoriality. Under that law a native of the Ottoman Empire is presumed to be an Ottoman subject until he has proved that he is not one according to the law in question, the onus probandi lying, not on the territorial authority, but on the person claiming the privilege of exemption from its jurisdiction.

It will be observed in reference to the French Treaty with Muscat (and, indeed, with reference to the Zanzibar Treaties generally), that it speaks only of French citizens or persons in the service of French citizens; the Administration of the Sultanate may therefore, it is presumed refuse, as the Porte has always done, to recognize Tunisians and natives of Comoro as entitled to the benefits of the Treaty. All the more might those benefits be refused to persons who are not even natives of French Protectorates, notwithstanding that they may at one time or other have been improperly allowed the status of French protégés.

An instruction to this effect was sent to Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in December last.

In view, however, of the fact that a large proportion of the cases which have been brought to Lord Salisbury's attention have concerned the French Consulate at Zanzibar, his Lordship is disposed to think that it will be advisable to inform the French Government of the nature of the instructions to Sir Arthur Hardinge and of the circumstances which led to their issue, and he has accordingly caused the inclosed draft to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris to be prepared.

I am to request that you will take it into your consideration and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion thereon and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.

Report.

As altered in red ink* and initialled by us, we approve of the draft. We suggest these alterations because we think that the mere test of birth in a French Protectorate, or a territory which has afterwards become such, cannot be insisted on; a native not born there might become a bonâ fide subject of such Protectorate.

But for this purpose the possession of property there and the issue of a Consular certificate are clearly insufficient.

Moreover, no subject of Zanzibar can be withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Zanzibar Courts except with the consent of the authorities of Zanzibar.

The alterations which we suggest are intended to embody these principles.

Draft of Despatch to Mr. Herbert.

(No. . Africa.)

Sir,
Foreign Office, September , 1899.

BEFORE the Sultanate of Zanzibar came under the Protectorate of Her Majesty in 1890 the protection by foreign Powers of individuals living in His Highness' dominions was exercised without reference to any very strict code of rules. To this state of things must no doubt be attributed the relatively large number of cases in which, since the establishment of the British Protectorate, particular persons have received or have claimed the protection of European Powers in circumstances which did not appear to Her Majesty's Government to warrant the withdrawal of such persons from the Sultan's jurisdiction. Many of these cases have formed the subject of correspondence between Her Majesty's Government and foreign Governments and between their Representatives in Zanzibar. Some cases have been settled by compromise and not always in accordance with the strict interpretation of the rules which should have governed them; others are still pending or have settled themselves by efflux of time.

---

* Draft despatch to Sir E. Monson.

* Printed in erased type and in italics.

It is necessary, however, that the protection of individuals by foreign Powers should be strictly limited to those cases where it can be undoubtedly justified by the Treaties existing between Zanzibar and the foreign Powers concerned.

Her Majesty's Government, after giving careful consideration of the question, have instructed Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar as to the rules and principles which must in future guide the Sultan's Government in deciding whether, in any given case, the right of foreign protection is properly exercised. So many of the cases forming the subject of correspondence have concerned the French Consulate, that I think it right to inform the French Government of the circumstances which have led to the above-mentioned instructions being sent to Zanzibar and of the nature of the instructions themselves.

As regards France the attention of Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General has, in the first place, been drawn to the serious inconvenience occasioned to the Sultan's Administration by the grant of French protection to natives who do not appear to be entitled to it, either by the French Treaty with Muscat of the 17th November, 1844, or by the other Treaties with Zanzibar, to the benefit of which France is entitled under the operation of the most-favoured-nation clause in her own Treaty.

The Treaty between France and Muscat contains the following Articles:—

"ARTICLE III.

"Les Français auront la faculté d'acheter, de vendre, ou de prendre à bail, des terres maisons, magasins, dans les États de Son Altesse le Sultan de Mascate. Nul ne pourra sous aucun prétexte, pénétrer dans les maisons, magasins, et autres propriétés, possédés ou occupés par des Français ou par des personnes au service des Français, ni les visiter sans le consentement de l'occupant, à moins que ce ne soit avec l'intervention du Consul de France.

"Les Français ne pourront, sous aucun prétexte, être retenus contre leur volonté dans les États du Sultan de Mascate.

"ARTICLE IV.

"Les sujets de Son Altesse le Sultan de Mascate qui seraient au service des Français jouiront de la même protection que les Français eux-mêmes; mais si les sujets de Son Altesse sont convaincus de quelque crime ou infraction punissable par la loi, ils seront congédiés par les Français au service desquels ils se trouvent, et livrés aux autorités locales."

~~It thus appears that the only native persons who can, in virtue of the provisions of the Treaty regulating the relations between France and Zanzibar, claim French protection or fly the French flag on their dhows are~~ :—

~~1. Natives of French Protectorates, therein resident, or, at least, not resident in Zanzibar, when the said Protectorates were established~~ ; ~~and~~

~~2. The bonâ fide servants of French citizens and protégés~~ ("~~au service des Français~~").

~~The Treaty excludes therefore from French protection all persons not born in French possessions or dependencies, though they may have acquired land there, and have been inscribed on the French Consular register at Zanzibar or Muscat.~~

The Treaty in its terms applies only to Frenchmen ("Français"), and their servants.

By usage the benefit of its provisions has been extended to natives of French Protectorates.

But it is to be observed that subjects of Zanzibar cannot be withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Sultan's Courts without his consent, and the mere recognition by the French authorities that such persons are subjects of French Protectorates is for this purpose quite inoperative.

Moreover, such persons, in order to be entitled to the benefit of the Treaty, must be in fact bonâ fide subjects of French Protectorates, and the circumstance that they cannot be regarded as sufficient for this purpose. The officers of the Administration of the Sultanate have therefore a right to decline to recognize exterritorial privileges to native vessels flying the French flag until satisfied that the owner is a bonâ fide citizen or protégé of France ("Français").

In such matters it would be proper for the officers of the Administration to be guided by ~~the~~ principles similar to those of the Ottoman Nationality Law which has been accepted in Turkey by the foreign Powers, and may, therefore, be assumed to contain nothing contrary to the due exercise of the privileges of exterritoriality. ~~Under that Law a native of the Ottoman Empire is presumed to be an Ottoman subject until he has proved that he is not one according to the Law in question, t~~The onus probandi ~~lying~~ lies not on the territorial authority, but on the person claiming the privilege of exemption from its jurisdiction, and any person claiming exemption must establish his right to such exemption by sufficient evidence.

~~It will be observed in reference to the French Treaty with Muscat~~ (~~and, indeed, with reference to the Zanzibar Treaties generally~~) ~~that it speaks only of French citizens~~ ("~~Français~~") ~~or persons in the service of French citizens~~ ("~~au service des Français~~")~~, the Administration of the Sultanate may therefore refuse, as the Porte has always done, to recognize Tunisians and natives of Comoro as entitled to the benefits of the Treaty. All the more may those~~ The benefits of the Zanzibar Treaties cannot be extended ~~be refused~~ to persons who are not ~~even~~ bonâ fide natives of French Protectorates, notwithstanding that they may at one time or other have been allowed the status of French protégés without a sufficiently careful consideration of their right to that status.

I have to request you to communicate a copy of this despatch to the French Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 26, 1899.

Sentence on W. Reich at Mombasa.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you a translation of a note from the German Ambassador at this Court, in which he asks, on behalf of his Government, that the sentence pronounced on the German subject W. Reich, in 1898, by the Sub-Commissioner's Court at Mombasa, should be quashed.

The case of Reich is one of those on which you reported on the 22nd February last, and Lord Salisbury proposes to reply to Count Hatzfeldt as set forth in the inclosed draft, which is founded on the views then expressed by you as to the Brussels Act overriding the right of exterritoriality in the case of offences against its provisions in respect of fire-arms in the zone to which it applies.

Before sending the note, however, his Lordship would be glad to know whether it correctly expresses your views, and, if not, he would request that you would make such alterations in the draft as you may think advisable.

Draft of Note to Count Hatzfeldt.

Your Excellency, Foreign Office, September , 1899.

I HAVE carefully considered the note which your Excellency did me the honour to address to me on the 8th ultimo, relating to the case of Wilhelm Reich, and stating the grounds on which the Imperial German Government request that the judgment pronounced against him by the Sub-Commissioner's Court at Mombasa may be quashed.

---

* Erased type in print.

Your Excelleny argues that according to the statement made by Reich to the Acting German Consul at Zanzibar, he had not, as was asserted by Sir A. Hardinge, submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court which tried him; but that even if he had done so the point is of no importance, as a German has no right to recognize as competent in criminal matters a Court which in itself is not competent. I am not aware on what principle of ~~German~~ law this argument is founded, ~~but there is nothing in British law which would support it,~~ and Her Majesty's Government must, as at present advised, reserve their opinion in regard to it.

The main contention of your Excellency's note is, however, that as the seizure of arms in consequence of which Reich was sentenced took place in the territory of the Sultan of Zanzibar, the case comes under the Articles of the Treaty between Germany and Zanzibar, which provide that the dwelling of a German in Zanzibar territory shall not be forcibly entered without the consent of the German Consul at Zanzibar, and that Germans shall be tried in the German Consular Court.

Your Excellency further argues that this Treaty right is not overridden, as claimed by Sir A. Hardinge, by the provisions of the Brussels Act relating to the method of dealing with fire-arms imported into the zone of prohibition established by the Act.

There is no doubt as to Kilindini, where the seizure was effected, being within the mainland dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar, and therefore, generally speaking, within the application of the Treaties between His Highness and foreign Powers. Her Majesty's Government have some reason to complain that the German Government still refuse to recognize the jurisdiction of the British Tribunals which have been established in East Africa since 1897, and that the request for such recognition which was made in Sir F. Lascelles' note to the German Minister for Foreign Affairs of the 2nd February last is still unanswered. They admit, however, that in ordinary questions of jurisdiction the Treaty between Zanzibar and Germany still holds good. But they cannot agree with the view put forward in your Excellency's note that the General Act of the Brussels Conference does not override that Treaty in matters relating to the application of the fire-arms provisions of the Act. Article XCVI of that Act runs as follows:—

"The present General Act repeals all contrary stipulations of Conventions previously concluded between the Signatory Powers." Article X says that "the Governments shall take all measures they may deem necessary to insure as complete a fulfilment as possible of the provisions respecting the importation, sale, and transport of fire-arms and ammunition," laid down in the Act, and it is quite clear that in practice the provisions of the Act in regard to fire-arms would become a dead letter unless all persons who offend against them, of whatever nationality, are amenable to the Courts of the State within whose territory the offence has been committed. It is obvious that it is by that State that the prohibition against importation must be enforced, and this applies also to the enforcement of penalties for unlawful possession. Her Majesty's Government hold, therefore, that the General Act of the Brussels Conference superseded the right of exterritoriality in the case of offences against its provisions in respect of fire-arms, and that Reich was properly tried, and I regret to be unable to accede to your Excellency's request for the quashing of his conviction.

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 20, 1899.

Claim of Abu-bekr-bin-Abdullah to exemption from Zanzibar jurisdiction.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the claim of Abu-bekr-bin-Abdullah to exemption from the jurisdiction of the Sultan of Zanzibar.

This case formed the subject of the first part of your Report of the 22nd February last, which will be found among the inclosed papers (Document E).

On receipt of that Report, instructions in accordance with its terms were addressed to Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General at Zanzibar (Document F). A note has now been received from the German Ambassador at this Court (Document G), supporting Abu-bekr-bin-Abdullah's claim, on the ground that when Chole was transferred to Germany he had his residence and his domicil in that island.

I also have the honour to inclose your Report of the 7th instant (Document I) on French protection at Zanzibar, as it appears to his Lordship that that Report and the draft to Sir E. Monson, as you have amended it, contain statements of principle which should be made use of in replying to Count Hatzfeldt's present note.

The question of domicil was not specially brought to your notice when the papers in Abu-bekr-bin-Abdullah's case were referred to you on the previous occasion, and it is possible that you may be of opinion that the domicil of Abu-bekr-bin-Abdullah at the time of the transfer of the southern portion of the Sultan's mainland dominions to Germany may be the proper criterion of his nationality and allegiance after the transfer. The place of his birth cannot, in the present case, be taken as an element in the case, as he was born at Mozambique, outside the Sultan's dominions; but the domicil of his parents at the time of his birth, or the place of their birth, might conceivably be important; the papers contain no information on this point. Should you be of opinion that the question of nationality and allegiance is determined in this case by domicil, I am to suggest that it may be proper to limit the substantial part of the reply to Count Hatzfeldt to the last two paragraphs of the inclosed draft.

It is thought that the question of Abu-bekr-bin-Abdullah's residence at the time of the transfer of German East Africa is unimportant as regards his nationality or allegiance.

The Agreement for the cession of German East Africa by Zanzibar contained no provision settling what persons should cease to be subjects of His Highness.

I have, therefore, the honour, by direction of the Secretary of State, to request you to take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and to favour his Lordship with your opinion—

1. As to whether the proposed draft meets with your concurrence, and, if not, as to what alterations should be made in it; and

2. As to whether, if the draft meets generally with your concurrence, it can be strengthened by an indication of the grounds on which the Sultan's right to jurisdiction over Abu-bekr is founded.

Finally, I have the honour to ask you to favour his Lordship with any general observations which may be of use in dealing with the case.

I have, &c.

Report.

We think that the draft despatch as altered and initialled by us may properly be sent.

There is a great absence of authority on the question what inhabitants of a ceded territory pass to the allegiance of the Power to whom the cession is made. The subject is discussed by Hall (I. L., 4th edition, p. 593), and by Calvo (5th edition, Article 638 et seq.). We are disposed to think that domicil in the case of subjects of the ceding Power would be a factor of great importance, but it seems unnecessary to express any view in the despatch on this point.

Annex.

Draft of Letter from the Marquess of Salisbury to Count Hatzfeldt.

Your Excellency, Foreign Office, October , 1899.

HER Majesty's Government have had under their consideration the question of the right of Abu-bekr-bin-Abdullah to claim, when in the Zanzibar dominions, the benefits in regard to extraterritorialty conferred by the Treaty between the German Empire and Zanzibar. The circumstances of the case, as reported to Her Majesty's Government from Zanzibar, appear to be as follows:—

Abu-bekr-bin-Abdullah was born at Mozambique, but has lived the greater part of his life in Zanzibar; he has, however, from time to time, both before and after the cession of the German coast, visited Chole, where one of his two wives resides, the other living at Zanzibar. It was during one of these visits to Chole in 1891 that the German flag was formally hoisted there in place of that of the Sultan. His family came originally from Hadramaut, and has for several generations owned land both at Zanzibar and at Chole; he had always been considered a subject of the Sultan.

Your Excellency's note states that the German Treaty with Zanzibar applies to German East Africa, and that Abu-bekr-bin-Abdullah was at the time of the cession of that territory a resident at Chole, and had his actual domicil in that island. Your Excellency requests, therefore, that Abu-bekr-bin-Abdullah and all other subjects of the Sultan who, at the time of the transfer to Germany of the southern portion of the Zanzibar mainland territories, had their actual residence and domicil in those territories, shall be considered as having ceased to be subjects of the Sultan, even though they had at the same time a residence in those territories which remained under His Highness' sovereignty.

~~The circumstances stated by your Excellency may entitle Abu-bin-bekr to the right, according to German law, to be treated as a German subject~~; ~~but the Imperial German Government cannot by their mere act transfer the allegiance of Zanzibaris to the German Government, although it can confer upon them the privileges of being treated as German subjects in German possessions.~~

Her Majesty's Government are not aware of any facts which support the view that Abu-bekr-bin-Abdullah had his domicil in Chole.

Zanzibar appears to have been his principal place of residence, and so far as Her Majesty's Government are aware, there is no ground for supposing that he was domiciled elsewhere.

There is nothing to show that Abu-bekr was so identified with Chole that his allegiance was transferred by the cession from the Sultan to the German Government, and until this is established he must be regarded in Zanzibar as a subject of the Sultan.

The fact that he happened to be in Chole when the German flag was hoisted cannot be regarded as in any way conclusive, and it may be quite immaterial.

Even assuming that he is recognized by German law as a German subject, such recognition is quite inoperative to divest him of his allegiance to the Sultan of Zanzibar.

Under these circumstances, it does not appear to Her Majesty's Government to be necessary to discuss the question whether, as contended by your Excellency, domicile in a ceded territory would constitute such an identification as would effect a transfer of allegiance on cession of the territory.

So far as Her Majesty's Government can learn from the despatches received on this case from Zanzibar, and so far as they can learn from your Excellency's note, nothing has occurred to absolve Abu-bekr-bin-Abdullah from his allegiance to the Sultan, or to exempt him from His Highness' jurisdiction when in Zanzibar territory.

It appears to Her Majesty's Government that the mere recognition by the German authorities that a person is under German protection cannot be considered sufficient to establish the point in a Court of Justice. In such matters it would be proper for the officers of the Sultan's Administration to be guided by principles similar to those which have been accepted in Turkey by the foreign Powers, and which may therefore be assumed to contain nothing contrary to the due exercise of the privileges of extra-territorialty. The onus probandi lies, not on the territorial authority, but on the person making the claim. Any person claiming the privilege of exemption from its jurisdiction must establish his right to such exemption by sufficient evidence.

It ~~appears~~ would seem that Abu-bekr-bin-Abdullah neglected to produce such evidence, or was unable to do so.

Gentlemen,

Nature of Railway Concession to M. Ilg.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to an Agreement signed on the 9th March, 1897, by which the Emperor Menelek of Abyssinia gave permission to M. Ilg, a Swiss engineer, who is His Majesty's Principal Adviser, to form a Company for the construction of a railway from Jibuti, a port on the Gulf of Aden in French Somaliland, to Harrar in Abyssinian territory, and thence to Antoto and the White Nile.

The position of these places will be seen from the accompanying map of Africa (Paper A).

The French text of the Agreement by which the Concession is granted is inclosed in despatch No. 498 of the 22nd July, 1897, from Sir E. Monson, Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris (Paper B).

M. Ilg made over the Concession to a French Company, which is now engaged in constructing the railway.

It is feared that the railway, when completed, will have a very injurious effect on the British Somaliland Protectorate which adjoins French Somaliland, as the trade between the ports of the British Protectorate and Abyssinia is likely to be diverted to Jibuti. It has been suggested that, in the interest of the trade of the British Protectorate, it would be advisable to construct a railway from the British port of Berbera to Harrar, and the question has arisen whether the terms of the Concession granted to M. Ilg would prevent King Menelek from sanctioning the construction of such a line.

Article 3 of the French text contains the following stipulation:—

"En conséquence, il est convenu qu'aucune autre Compagnie de Chemin de Fer ne sera autorisée à construire de lignes concurrentes partant soit des bords de l'Océan Indien, soit des bords de la Mer Rouge jusqu'en Éthiopie, soit de l'Éthiopie jusqu'au Nil Blanc."

According to this version of the Agreement the Emperor Menelek would appear to have bound himself not to grant Concessions for any competing lines from the shores of the Indian Ocean or of the Red Sea into Abyssinia or from Abyssinia to the White Nile.

It will be seen, however, from the accompanying despatches from Captain Harrington, Her Majesty's Agent in Abyssinia, No. 40, of the 30th May, and No. 48, of the 25th June of this year (Papers D and E), that the Emperor Menelek himself does not take this view of the obligation contracted by him

His Majesty contends that the word in the original Amharic text of the Concession, which is represented in the French translation by the word "concurrentes," has been wrongly translated, and that the correct English translation is "near," and he denies that the Agreement was intended to confer, or did, as a matter of fact, confer, a monopoly of the construction of railways in Abyssinia.

A literal English translation of the Amharic text is inclosed in Captain Harrington's despatch No. 40 (Paper D).

I am to request that you will be so good as to take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and furnish Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the Agreement of the 9th March, 1897, conferred on the Company to be formed under it a monopoly of railway construction in Abyssinia.

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to make on the question of the interpretation and bearing of the Agreement.

I have, &c.

Report.

We are of opinion that the effect of the Concession granted to M. Ilg is to debar the Emperor from granting any Concession for the construction of a railway in Abyssinia which would be a competing line with that authorized by M. Ilg's Concession. The question whether any proposed railway would so compete would be a question of fact, but it would appear clear that any line running from the coast of British Somaliland to Harrar would be both "competing" and "near."

Cyanide of Potassium as contraband of war.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to consult you in regard to the possible treatment of cyanide of potassium as contraband of war in the peculiar circumstances now existing in connection with the hostilities with the South African Republic.

Cyanide of potassium is not included in the list of articles contraband of war, which is given in section 62 of the "Manual of Naval Prize Law," which was prepared by Professor T. E. Holland, and issued by authority of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty in 1888, and of which it is understood that you have a copy. So far as is known in this Department, cyanide of potassium is not used either directly or indirectly in the manufacture of explosives. It is largely used, however, under recently patented processes, in the extraction of gold from the matrix. The Government of the South African Republic have taken over the working of the gold mines in its territory, and require cyanide of potassium for extracting gold, which will, presumably, be utilized, when obtained, for the purpose of purchasing warlike stores.

I am, therefore, to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether, in these very peculiar and special circumstances, cyanide of potassium can properly be treated as contraband of war.

His Lordship will be glad at the same time to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

In our opinion, the point raised is one of great difficulty, and we think it extremely doubtful whether a Prize Court would hold cyanide of potassium to be contraband of war. Subject, however, to the conditions subsequently stated, we think that, in the very special circumstances of this case, it may be so treated. Money intended for the purposes of war may be treated as contraband. The cyanide is used to produce gold for the purposes of the war, and is imported by the Government of the enemy for use in this way. It is stated that the gold so produced will be utilized for the purpose of purchasing warlike stores. On principle it seems to us, under these circumstances, that the cyanide may be put in the same category as money.

We may add that, in the case of cyanide, or other substances ancipitis usûs, Her Majesty's Government, instead of forfeiting them, should offer to take them over at a fair price, as is often done.

We should point out that it would, of course, be necessary to establish by reasonable inference that the particular consignment of cyanide is imported with the view to the gold obtained by it being used for warlike purposes; it is not enough that it is capable of being so used.

We think that with reference to this and other articles ancipitis usûs which it is proposed to treat as contraband, a Proclamation would be desirable in which all articles of contraband, absolutely or conditionally, should be specified, and a statement made of the fact that those of the latter class will be regarded as contraband only if intended to be used for warlike purposes, and will be subject to pre-emption.

It is only in very strong cases, if at all, that confiscation of the vessel should be pressed for, in the case of these latter articles.

Claims for losses through mutiny of Soudanese in Uganda.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list, which relate to the claims made by private individuals or Societies for compensation for losses which they suffered owing to the mutiny in 1897–98 of the Soudanese soldiers in the pay of the Uganda Protectorate, and owing to the military and other operations undertaken by Her Majesty's Government to suppress that mutiny.

An account of the mutiny and of its suppression will be found in the accompanying Report on the subject, which has been laid before Parliament, and which appears to show that all possible steps were taken to suppress the mutiny as quickly as the peculiar circumstances of Uganda allowed, and that no evidence of wanton or avoidable destruction of property by troops or other persons who were under the control of Her Majesty's Government could be produced.

Among the papers will be found a collection of Law Officers' Reports (Document E), dealing with the question of the liability of Governments to compensate individuals in respect of losses incurred during foreign invasion, civil war, insurrection, riot and mutiny.

You will also find a Memorandum (Document F) which is intended rather to serve as an index to these Reports than to give an absolutely accurate précis in each case of the principles of law on which they are severally founded. The Memorandum also contains a short reference to certain recent and instructive precedents not dealt with in the Reports.

Many of the cases treated in the inclosed collection of Reports and Memorandum are not exactly similar to that now referred to you; but Lord Salisbury thinks it better not to restrict the information placed before you to the few exact precedents which might be found, but to give details with regard to cognate cases, so as to furnish a comprehensive view of the whole subject. Such a course appears to be especially useful with regard to the case now under review, since it is one to which precisely apposite precedents cannot readily be quoted, but which, nevertheless, appears to hinge on the cardinal principle that responsibility cannot properly attach to a Government in respect of acts which it was powerless to prevent or control by the exercise of reasonable and ordinary care.

I have the honour to request you to take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether any, and if so what, amount of compensation is due by Her Majesty's Government in respect of all or any, and if so which, of the claims severally set out—

1. In Mr. Berkeley's despatch of the 27th July last;
2. In his letter of the following day; and
3. In the letters of the 20th October and the 8th instant from the Church Missionary Society.

I am at the same time to request you to favour his Lordship with any observations which you may wish to make on the papers generally.

No claim is recognized by public law for damage done by mutineers or insurgents if the Government or its Representatives have not been to blame in conducing to the damage by negligence or misconduct on the part of Government officials or servants.

Messrs. Smith, Mackenzie, and Co.'s claims for property carried off or destroyed by the mutineers are therefore not recognizable from a legal point of view.

As regards the services of any employés taken over by the Government during the mutiny, Messrs. Smith, Mackenzie, and Co., are entitled to be paid the fair value of such services, just as in the case of property taken or used by the Government. Of course, if remuneration has been paid to the employés themselves, it is not payable over again to Messrs. Smith, Mackenzie, and Co.

If it could be established that any loss of profits was directly due to the withdrawal of the employés commandeered by Government, we think this would form a fair head of claim. But a claim of this kind must be entertained with caution: the facts want careful scrutiny by the light of local experience, and in view of possible interruption to business by the mutiny itself apart from the withdrawal of employés. Subject to these observations, we do not think that claim No. 7 is legally objectionable in principle.

2. Mr. Gemmill's claim is not legally sustainable, as it appears to be wholly for damage done by the mutineers; and
3. The same observation applies to the claim of the Missionary Society.
4. We have not attempted to fix the amounts to be paid; this can only be done by some person who can investigate the matter on the spot, or at any rate with local knowledge.

We have dealt with these claims only from the point of view of public law. If any undertaking has been given to be answerable for all losses caused by the mutiny the cases assume quite a different aspect, and, subject to their verification in point of fact, all the claims should be settled.

We have not considered any reasons of policy which may render it expedient to meet such claims apart from legal considerations, but in the event of such a course being adopted, care should be taken in making any payments to avoid any admission of liability, and to prevent the cases being subsequently quoted as precedents.

Arrest of German Mail-steamer "Bundesrath" by H.M.S. "Magicienne."

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list relating to the case of the German mail-steamer "Bundesrath," which has been arrested by Her Majesty's ship "Magicienne," and taken into Durban for adjudication by the Prize Court on the ground that she was carrying contraband of war destined for the use of the enemy.

You will see from the papers that Her Majesty's Government are not in possession of the full details of the case, and that a complete search of the vessel not having yet taken place, there is at present little positive evidence before them as to the nature of the contraband of war which is alleged to have been on board.

I have the honour to request you to favour his Lordship with your advice as to the answer which should be returned to the note of the 4th instant from the German Ambassador at this Court, in which it is maintained that proceedings before a Prize Court are only justified in cases in which the presence of contraband of war is proved, and that, whatever may be on board the "Bundesrath," there can be no contraband of war, as there cannot be contraband of war in trade between neutral ports.

I am also to ask for any general observations which you may be able to offer on the case.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, January 6, 1900.

With reference to my letter of the 6th instant respecting the case of the German mail-steamer "Bundesrath," arrested on suspicion of carrying munitions of war, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you, for consideration with the papers already before you, the additional papers sent herewith respecting the case of the "Doelwijk."*

This case, which was decided by the Court at Rome, turned on the question whether munitions of war found on a vessel sailing between two neutral ports could be treated as contraband of war.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

As regards the "Bundesrath," we adhere to the view indicated in our answer to B (5) in our Report of the 26th October, 1899, viz., that contraband of war on board of a neutral vessel, which contraband was at the time of seizure consigned or intended to be delivered to an agent of the enemy at a neutral port, or was, in fact, destined for the enemy's country, is liable to seizure.

We do not consider that the passage cited from the Manual of Prize Law correctly states the law as applicable to such a case. It contains a direction which was in practice adequate with reference to such wars as have been waged by this country in the past, but is not correct if applied to the case which has now arisen of a war with a State the only access to which is through a neutral port, connected with it by a short line of railway.

The words "the destination of the vessel is conclusive as to the destination of the goods on board," quoted by Count Hatzfeldt in his letter of the 4th January, do not, in our opinion, correctly express the law.

No doubt where there is no evidence of another destination, and no suspicion as to the fact that the goods are going to a neutral consignee, the destination of the vessel is conclusive.

We think the law is correctly stated in paragraph 813 of Professor Bluntschli's "Codification of International Law" (second edition), and that the true question is one of fact, viz., whose at the time of seizure is the contraband, or what at the time of seizure is its true and bonâ fide destination.

If bonâ fide consigned to a neutral person at the neutral port the contraband cannot ordinarily be seized, even though it can be afterwards sold to the enemy, though even with regard to such cases questions of difficulty might arise which we do not desire to prejudge.

If at the time of seizure it is the property of, or destined for, the enemy or his agent, it is liable to seizure. This view is maintained and explained at length in Calvo's International Law, 1896 edition, vol. iv, sections 2761-2769, pp. 42-48, and in Wheaton-Dana's edition of 1866, sections 505 to 508 and notes.

The cases of the "Vrouw Houwina" in 1855 (Calvo, section 2767), where this view of the law was taken by the French Courts, and the case of the "Doelwijk" in 1896, where a similar decision was given by the Italian Courts, show the distinction between the two classes of cases.

We would particularly call attention to the passage in the Judgment of the Italian Court (at pp. 6353-54 of the "Gazzetta Ufficiale") which is based not merely on the Italian Code, but on general international law, and is in terms applicable to the present case. We believe that the same doctrine has been laid down by high authorities in Germany, but we have not yet had the opportunity of verifying this. Moreover, Her Majesty's Government declined to interfere, and, so far as we can gather, did not dissent from the view taken by the American Courts in the case of the "Springbok," and the Law Officers have consistently advised in this sense. (The "Springbok," 19th February, 1864; 16th May, 1864; 29th July, 1867; 21st July, 1868; 7th December, 1868; and 15th February, 1869; and the "Peterhoff," 12th April, 1864.)

* Sir Clare Ford, No. 251, December 9; and ditto, No. 267, December 30, 1896.

This question of "neutral port" can hardly ever be raised with reference to cases in which at the time of seizure the contraband of war was the property of the enemy by virtue of consignment to him. In such cases contraband of war must be liable to seizure. Before the Declaration of Paris all enemy's goods were liable to seizure, though under the neutral flag. That Declaration gives exemption to goods not being contraband of war. Those which are contraband of war remain as before. Where the goods being of the nature of contraband are consigned to him or his agent, they are enemy's property, contraband of war on their way to the enemy, and must be subject to seizure.

If at the time of seizure the alleged contraband of war was neutral property, the question of "neutral port" becomes material only if it is the true and ultimate destination of the cargo as well as the ship.

We think a reply should be framed in answer to Count Hatzfeldt's letter of the 4th instant, pointing out the distinction above referred to, and stating that the "Bundesrath" was properly visited and taken into Durban on the ground that she is alleged to have been carrying contraband of war which was at the time of seizure destined for the enemy.

Care must be taken as to the language of this reply, because there is a passage in Earl Russell's despatch of the 23rd January, 1862, in connection with the case of the mail-ship "Trent" (see p. 221, Bernard, Neutrality, &c.), which states the proposition somewhat too broadly.

A reply to the effect above indicated should at once be sent to the Governor of Natal. Instructions should also be sent to press on the proceedings in the Prize Court, and to examine the ship's officers in accordance with the usual practice, and we think that the Governor of Natal should be informed fully by cable of the effect of this Report.

Detention of German Mail-steamer "General" at Aden.

WITH reference to my other letter of this day's date respecting the case of the German mail-steamer "Bundesrath," I am directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit to you a note from the German Ambassador at this Court,* asking for the immediate release of the "General," a steamer of the same line of German mail-steamers as the "Bundesrath," and asking that explicit instructions may be issued to the Commanders of British ships in African waters to respect the Rules of international law, and to place no further impediments in the way of the trade of neutrals.

The only information as yet received by Her Majesty's Government respecting the case of the "General" is that she was detained at Aden on strong suspicion (of what offence is not stated), and is being searched (by whose orders is not at present known).

I have the honour to request you to favour his Lordship with your advice as to the answer which should be returned to this note, and also with any general observations which you may be able to offer on the case.

* Count Hatzfeldt, January 5, 1900.

1900

Report.

If the facts respecting the mail-steamer "General" are as stated in Count Hatzfeldt's letter of the 5th January, the action of the officials at Aden cannot possibly be supported.

The duty, and the only right of a belligerent visiting and searching a vessel which is suspected of carrying contraband, is to take her in for adjudication to a Prize Court.

The captors have no right to unload the cargo themselves; any further examination or interference with the cargo must be by order of the Court. This is expressly provided by section 16 of "The Naval Prize Act, 1864." We must point out that in the case of mail-steamers no action beyond visit and search of the usual character should be taken unless there is strong ground for believing that there is contraband of war on board, and if the ship's papers, manifest, and invoices of cargo are in order, and the search discloses no contraband, and there has been no conduct on the part of those on board the ship to justify detention, the vessel should not be detained.

The greatest caution should be exercised in stopping and taking in mail-steamers owing to the serious public interests involved, and the risk of heavy claims should the capture turn out to be without justification. (See Earl Russell's despatch in the Trent case of the 23rd January, 1862, cited Bernard, neutrality, &c., p. 221.)

Immediate inquiry should be made into the facts respecting the "General," and if they are as stated in Count Hatzfeldt's despatch the vessel should be immediately released, and an apology tendered, and compensation paid.

The telegram to the Admiralty of the 5th January, and the letter from the Admiralty of the 6th January, afford no ground for modifying these conclusions, but confirm them.

We would suggest that the instructions to search with "the utmost rigour," conveyed by telegram No. 60, are liable to be misunderstood.

British cruisers should be instructed to conduct the visit and search in the usual way, and with courtesy and forbearance, especially in the case of mail-steamers. It might facilitate an effective search if the cruisers immediately engaged on this work had the assistance on board of experienced custom-house searchers.

The vessel can be detained only if the search discloses adequate grounds of suspicion. She must then at once be brought before a Prize Court, which alone can authorize the removal of any part of the cargo.

Admiralty, January 6, 1900.

Sir,

MY Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty having had under their consideration your letter of this day's date, requesting that certain particulars may be furnished in regard to the detention at Aden of the steam-ship "General," belonging to the German East African Company, on suspicion of conveying contraband of war to South Africa, desire me to transmit herewith, for the information of the Secretary of State, a copy of a telegram which has just been received from the Senior Naval Officer at Aden, from which it will be apparent that the ship was detained by the Captain of the "Marathon" on arrival at that port, that she was searched by the naval authorities, no contraband being found on board; and that from the fact of her cargo being in process of restowal, with the object of enabling her to resume her voyage as quickly as possible, it is evident that no proceedings had been commenced against her in the Prize Court.

With regard to the question as to the warrant or order under which the search was made, my Lords are not aware that any warrant is required in such cases.

The Captain of the "Marathon" no doubt conceived himself to be acting within his rights, as laid down in the chapter in the "Manual of Prize Law" on search and detention, and by the instructions issued to him by the Commander-in-chief on the East Indies Station in Admiralty telegram No. 60, copy inclosed, to search vessels with the utmost rigour.

I am, &c.
(Pro Secretary),
(Signed) C. I. THOMAS.

Annex 2.

Telegram from Aden, dated January 6, 1900.

BOARDED and detained steamer "General" on arrival. Commenced search for contraband next morning, and been informed by Resident various suspicious articles on board for Delagoa Bay. Arab stoker on board reported boxes of ammunition stowed in main-hold. Buried under reserve coal found several larger cases rifles, ammunition on board for Mauser, Männlicher and sporting rifles consigned to Mombasa. All on manifest and I believe bonâ fide as consigned. Wagon axles and chemicals are other suspected articles on manifest. Cargo food Delagoa Bay being at bottom have cleared away just sufficient cargo to satisfy myself. Heavy machinery and boilers are stowed away on top of coal. Have examined it by digging hole. Found nothing, am re-stowing cargo, shall get ship away as soon as possible. "Marathon."

Annex 3.

Telegram No. 60 from Admiralty to Commander-in-chief on the East Indies Station, dated December 23, 1899.

WITH reference to Admiralty telegram No. 58 the search for contraband of war in British and neutral vessels bound for South African ports is to be prosecuted with the utmost rigour in British territorial waters and on the high seas, and vessels found with contraband on board are to be taken into Aden for adjudication before the Prize Courts.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, January 8, 1900.

Gentlemen,

Detention of railway material consigned to the South African Republic.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers, noted on the accompanying list, which relate to consignments of railway material landed at East London and originally destined for the Netherlands South African and for the Ermelo Lines, both of which are in the South African Republic.

It is believed that the Ermelo Line is in process of construction. The Netherlands Railway runs from Komatipoort, the junction with the line from Delagoa Bay to Pretoria and Johannesburg.

The circumstances in which your advice is sought are briefly as follows:—

Soon after hostilities had been begun against Her Majesty by the South African Republic and the Orange Free State, the authorities of the Cape Colony detained goods found within their jurisdiction and destined for private persons, or corporations, in the enemy's territory.

A note of the 6th November last (Document A), from Baron van Goltstein, the Netherlands Minister at this Court, called attention to the material belonging to the Netherlands South African and to the Ermelo Railway Companies which was to be carried by the British ship "Zulu" from Amsterdam to Delagoa Bay. He understood that British ships had been prohibited from landing goods for South Africa anywhere except at British ports; but as French and German vessels were free to land their cargoes anywhere, he trusted that the "Zulu" would be allowed to land the railway material at Delagoa Bay, as originally intended.

Lord Salisbury's reply (9th November, Document B), to this communication was to the effect that intercourse between Her Majesty's dominions and the enemy's territory is unlawful during the war.

Baron van Goltstein then pointed out (11th November, Document C), that there was no question of intercourse with the enemy's territory and that the Netherlands Company was ready to consign its material to the British Consul at Lourenço Marques to be held by him for such period as Her Britannic Majesty's Government should object to it being sent on to the Transvaal.

This arrangement was accepted by Her Majesty's Government, under certain additional conditions, by note of the 25th November last (Document D): the same note stated that the arrangement might also be extended to the material of the Ermelo Company, if that Company so wished.

The necessary instructions were at once telegraphed to the High Commissioner and to Her Majesty's Consul at Lourenço Marques, but only as far so regarded the property of the Netherlands Company.

Baron van Goltstein's note of the 2nd December (Document E) stated that the Ermelo Company likewise accepted the arrangement.

Her Majesty's Government shortly afterwards learnt (telegram in Colonial Office the 4th December, Document F) that the Netherlands Railway had been taken over by the Government of the South African Republic, as far back as the 29th September; the line was, therefore, practically a Government line at the time the original application was made to Her Majesty's Government by Baron van Goltstein's note of the 6th November (Document A).

Baron van Goltstein was then informed (note to him of the 13th December, Document G) that the taking over of the Netherlands Railway by the enemy Government materially affected the position of the question.

There had, meanwhile, been delay in informing the authorities in the Cape Colony that the arrangement set out in the note of the 25th November to Baron van Goltstein (Document D) applied also to the material shipped for the Ermelo Company; when, therefore, the "Zulu" put into East London the authorities treated the Ermelo Company's material as they were then treating private property destined for the enemy's territory, when found in British ships in British waters, i.e., they ordered it to be taken out of the ship and detained.

The material for the Netherlands Line and that for the Ermelo Railway were stowed with a view of being landed together at Lourenço Marques; it was therefore impossible to remove the Ermelo material and leave that for the Netherlands Line; and the "Agents" preferred that the consignments for the Netherlands Railway should also be landed at East London. (See communication of the 13th December from Colonial Office, Document H.)

It may here be noted that the owner of the "Zulu" stated verbally at this Department that it was the ship's agent who consented to both consignments being landed, and that he did so to prevent the detention of the ship.

In these circumstances it was proposed to Baron van Goltstein (note of the 14th December, Document I) that the goods, as they must in any case be detained either at Lourenço Marques or at East London, should remain at the latter port unless the owners were disposed to sell them to Her Majesty's Government.

It may here be stated that there are several horse boxes and a locomotive among the material belonging to the Netherlands Company, and that the authorities of the Cape Colony would be glad to obtain this rolling stock (Colonial Office, the 4th December, Document F).

Baron van Goltstein has now stated, by his note of the 26th ultimo (Document J), that the Netherlands Company wishes its material to be sent forward to Delagoa Bay, and that, as regards that material, the arrangement set forth in the note of the 25th November (Document D) is therefore still in force.

Baron van Goltstein's note states that the railway has not been "ceded" to the Government of the Transvaal; the latter has availed itself of an Article in the Company's Concession to seize ("pour s'emparer de"), during the war, the right of working the line.

The French translation of the Article referred to uses the words, "the Government can . . . . . . dispose of the railway" ("peut . . . . . . disposer du chemin de fer"). The original Dutch has the same meaning, that, namely, of "disposing of" the working of the line.

I have the honour, by direction of the Secretary of State, to request you to take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and to favour his Lordship with your opinion as to—

(1.) Whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Government are under an obligation to carry out, as regards the material originally destined for the Netherlands Line, the arrangement set forth in the note of the 25th November to Baron van Goltstein (Document D), and to allow the goods to go forward to Lourenço Marques under the condition therein stated.

(2.) What course they can properly adopt in the matter if they are not under the obligation mentioned in (1).

Lord Salisbury will be glad at the same time to be favoured with any observations which you may be good enough to offer on the case generally.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion Her Majesty's Government are under an obligation as regards the material originally destined for the Netherlands Line, to carry out the arrangement set forth in the note of the 25th November to Baron van Goltstein, and to allow the goods to go forward to Lourenço Marques under the conditions there stated.

After it was known that control of the Netherlands South African Railway Company had been assumed by the Transvaal Government, Her Majesty's Government, by the despatch of the 13th December, 1899, confirmed that arrangement as regards the goods now in question, while stating that they could not continue it as regards other goods. Her Majesty's Government are therefore, in our opinion, bound to carry out the arrangement.

Care will, of course, be taken to insure that the goods in fact remain at Delagoa Bay under the control of the British Consul, as it would appear that if they pass into the hands of the Netherlands Company there is every probability that they will be used for the purpose of facilitating military operations.

Gentlemen,

Arrest of Pastor Harms in Natal.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the inclosed papers which relate to the arrest by the Provost Marshal at Frere, in the Colony of Natal, of Pastor Harms, the Director of the Deutscher Evangelische Mission, and his subsequent detention.

The case was originally brought to his Lordship's notice on the 1st instant by a communication from the German Embassy (Paper A), from which it appeared that Pastor Harms had been arrested and subsequently imprisoned at Estcourt on suspicion of having held communication with the Boer forces on the Mooi River. The German Ambassador requested that in the event of nothing really incriminating being proved against him, he should be at once released.

Inquiries were made into the case through the Colonial Office (Papers B and C), and it was ascertained (Inclosure in Paper C) from a Report from Sir Redvers Buller, that there was definite evidence that armed Boers had stayed with Pastor Harms at the Mission House, where it was said he had made them welcome. In any case it was certain that they had not treated him as an enemy. Sir Redvers Buller added that

Pastor Harms resided on the flank of the British position, and that it was absolutely necessary to remove from such a place, and to detain, any one who was not known to side with this country.

I am to request you to take these papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether Sir Redvers Buller's action in the matter was justifiable by the usages of war, in view of the fact that Pastor Harms was in suspiciously friendly relations with the enemy in the region within which the British forces were, and are still, operating.

It is thought that it will be preferable, should the facts in your opinion admit of that course, to found the justification for Sir Redvers Buller's action on the general rights possessed under the usages of war, by a Commander in the field, within the theatre of hostilities, than to defend such action by special reference to the Proclamation of martial law, which extends over the whole of Natal, both within and without the actual strategic region.

On this point, however, as well as on the papers generally, his Lordship will be glad to be furnished with any observations which you may be good enough to offer for his assistance.

Report.

We are of opinion that the action of General Sir Redvers Buller was perfectly justifiable. It appears that M. Harms, whom we presume to be a German subject, was resident in Natal.

There is evidence that he communicated, and was on friendly terms with armed Boers. Further, the place where he was residing was in such a position that it was essential that only those friendly to, and in communication with, the British forces should be in occupation of it.

In our opinion these circumstances justify Sir Redvers Buller as General in Command of the military operations, in temporarily detaining M. Harms and removing him from the place in question.

He must, of course, be treated with every consideration, and not detained longer than the necessities of the military operations require.

Detention of German mail-steamer "General" at Aden.

WITH reference to your letter of the 8th instant relative to the detention of the German mail-steamer "General" at Aden, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, copies of telegrams which have been received from the Resident at Aden and the Senior Naval Officer there, reporting what has occurred, and of a Memorandum received from the Admiralty giving a narrative of the case, together with the draft of a despatch which Lord Salisbury proposes to address to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin in reply to the note of the German Ambassador at this Court on the subject.

Copies of that note, of your letter above referred to, and of some other papers connected with the case are also inclosed.

I am to request that you will inform Lord Salisbury whether the terms of the despatch are, in your opinion, right and proper, or whether you have any alterations or additions to suggest.

His Lordship will also be glad to be furnished with any general observations which you may have to offer on the question.

Draft of Despatch from the Marquess of Salisbury to Sir F. Lascelles.

Sir, Foreign Office, January , 1900.

I TRANSMIT to your Excellency herewith translation of a note which I received on the 5th instant from the German Ambassador at this Court, stating that, according to a communication received by his Government, the mail-steamer "General," of the German East African line, had been stopped at Aden, occupied by force by British troops, and ordered to land her cargo. Count Hatzfeldt proceeds to request that orders may be given for the immediate release of the steamer and her cargo, for that portion of her cargo which had already been landed being replaced on board, and for the vessel being permitted to continue her voyage to the places mentioned in her itinerary. His Excellency further requests that explicit instructions be sent to the Commanders of British ships in African waters to respect the rules of international law, and to place no further impediments in the way of trade between neutrals.

I received with some surprise a communication from the Representative of a Power with whom Her Majesty's Government believe themselves to be on the most friendly terms, worded in so abrupt a manner and couched in language which imputed to Her Majesty's Naval Commanders that they had shown a disrespect to international law, and placed unnecessary impediments in the way of neutral commerce. There is no foundation for these imputations. I at once requested the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty and the Secretary of State for India to make inquiries whether the facts were as reported to the German Government.

From reports which have reached Her Majesty's Government by telegraph, the following appear to be the facts of the case:—

Before the arrival of the vessel at Aden it was already known that she had on board among her passengers thirty-one men of German and Flemish nationality who had all the appearance of being on their way to the South African Republics for the purposes of military service there. On her arrival, information reached the British Resident that there were various suspicious articles on board destined for Delagoa Bay, and a ~~stoker~~ person on board the vessel who was likely to be well informed, stated that boxes of ammunition were buried under the reserve store of coal. The Senior Naval Officer at Aden thereupon boarded her on the ground of strong suspicion of her carrying contraband of war destined for the enemy, and commenced to search her.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, on being informed of the detention of the vessel, telegraphed to the Senior Naval Officer that such detention on suspicion only was undesirable if the vessel carried mails, unless contraband of war were found on board. The Senior Naval Officer was at the same time called upon to carry out the necessary search ~~if persisted in~~ as quickly as possible, and there can be no doubt that in this respect he did his utmost to avoid any unnecessary delay, the crew of Her Majesty's ship "Marathon," assisted by 100 coolies, having worked day and night.

The vessel having arrived on the 4th January, he reported on the 6th that the search had been completed. The cargo was restored with the greatest possible rapidity, and the vessel sailed on the morning of the 10th instant. The Senior Naval Officer reported that he had found on board several large cases of rifle ammunition for Mauser, Männlicher, and sporting rifles consigned to Mombasa; these were entered on the manifest, and he believed them to be destined bonâ fide as consigned. He had found also on board consignments of axle trees for waggons and chloride of lime for Delagoa Bay, both of which appeared on the manifest. The captain of the vessel gave an undertaking that these should be handed over to Her Majesty's Consul at Delagoa Bay. At the bottom of the hold was a cargo of food for Delagoa Bay. Heavy machinery and boilers appear to have been stowed on the top of the store of coals, in which it was reported that ammunition was concealed. The search for the ~~supposed~~ cases, therefore, must have been conducted under great difficulties. ~~The Senior Naval Officer confined himself to digging a hole in the coal, and finding nothing discontinued the search.~~ There seems reason to believe that among the passengers on board going to the Transvaal were a number of trained artillerymen, ~~but it would have been impossible to obtain evidence of their being in the service of the Transvaal without searching their personal baggage, a measure from which the Senior Naval Officer refrained,~~ but there was no sufficient evidence as to their destination to justify further action on the part of the officers conducting the search. Until they receive the detailed reports which will reach them by mail, Her Majesty's Government cannot decide whether ~~and in what respects~~ the British naval officers in any respect ~~may have~~ exceeded the right of search accorded by international practice to belligerents. They recognize, however, that in the case of steamers carrying mails that right should be exercised with all possible consideration, and only resorted to when the circumstances are clearly such as to justify the gravest suspicion.

They regret the inconvenience which has been caused on the occasion, ~~and if on receipt of the detailed reports it should appear that reparation is due to the Company for the delay of the vessel, or for damage to the cargo, they will be ready to consider any claims which may be brought before them on this account~~.

Your Excellency will read this despatch to the German Minister for Foreign Affairs, and leave him a copy of it.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, January 13, 1900.

Detention of German subject, Schmidt, at Durban.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers marked in the accompanying list, which relate to the detention of a German subject named Schmidt by the British authorities at Durban.

The German Embassy in London first drew attention to the case on the 9th December, 1899 (Paper A), and inquiry having been made in the matter at the Colonial Office (Paper B), it was ascertained (Paper C) that Schmidt was in the employ of Messrs. Welchen and Ackermann, of Lourenço Marques, who are stated by Her Majesty's Consul there to be agents of the South African Republic, and that, as he had been at Durban for some days, and was, therefore, in a position to carry back full details of all he had heard and seen, it was considered unadvisable to allow him to return to Lourenço Marques.

The German Embassy were verbally informed to this effect on the 18th December, 1899.

The German Ambassador has now, however, again called attention to the case (Paper D). His Excellency points out that the British authorities have neither proved nor attempted to prove that Schmidt has in any way assisted the enemy, and that the German Government, accordingly, request that he may be released at once, more especially as there seems to be no immediate prospect of the circumstances which led to his detention ceasing to exist. Count Hatzfeldt also specifically reserves the right to act hereafter as he may think proper in the matter of claiming compensation.

A further letter (Paper E) has also been received on the subject from the Colonial Office, but its inclosures do not appear to add anything material to the facts of the case.

I am to request you to be good enough to take these papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to how far the military authorities are justified in refusing to allow a foreign subject to leave a place which was already under martial law at the time of his arrival, doing so, not because anything has been proved against him, but because he is known to be connected with an agent of the enemy, and would on his return home be in a position to give information to his employers as to the movements of British troops, &c.

Your opinion is further sought on the point whether, supposing such detention to be justifiable, it may also be indefinitely prolonged until such time as the British military authorities on the spot may consider it no longer necessary, or until the Proclamation enforcing martial law is revoked.

It is presumed that in the event of its being decided that Mr. Schmidt's detention has not been justifiable, he would be entitled to reasonable compensation.

It may, perhaps, be well to add that there is no colonial ordinance in force in Natal, defining in any way the scope of martial law in its special application to that Colony, but copies of correspondence in connection with the Proclamation are annexed for your information (Paper F).

It is presumed, therefore, that in this case the "martial law" (so-called) which is brought into force by the Proclamation is in fact military law, and the customs of war so far as these are known and recognized in English jurisprudence.

I am, however, to request you to favour Lord Salisbury with any observations which you may have to make on these points and on the papers generally.

I have, &c.

Report.

The facts before us do not enable us to express any opinion as to whether the detention of Mr. Schmidt was justifiable beyond saying this, that the responsibility of, and the reasons for, such action lie with the persons in whose hands the administration of martial law rests. If they were of opinion that the safety of the Colony, or the necessities of the military situation, rendered it essential that there should be no communication to agents of the Transvaal Government at Lourenço Marques of the condition of affairs at Durban, their action was right and should be confirmed, but we need scarcely add that the serious step of arresting and detaining a neutral subject of a friendly neutral Power, should only be taken under circumstances of urgent necessity, and should not be continued for a moment longer than is absolutely necessary.

Measures of Transvaal Government as to gold mines in its territories.

I HAVE the honour by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit to you the accompanying letters from the Colonial Office,* relating to the action to be taken by Her Majesty's Government in view of the measures recently adopted by the Transvaal Government with regard to the gold mines situated within their territories.

You will see that these measures practically amount, according to the High Commissioner, to confiscation by instalments, and that it is feared that the properties in question, when they have, in default of payment of the new taxes, been seized by the Government of the South African Republic, will be bought by speculators whose titles may, at the close of the war, prove a source of great embarrassment to Her Majesty's Government.

In these circumstances it has become necessary to consider the advisability of issuing a notice to the effect that Her Majesty's Government will not take cognizance of any dealings in mining properties by the Government of the Republic in connection with the new taxes, and will refuse to admit the validity of any titles acquired by third parties as the result of sales by that Government of such properties during the continuance of the war.

I am to request you to inform Lord Salisbury whether, in your opinion, such a notice as that indicated is desirable, and if so, in what terms it should be drawn up.

In the event of your recommending its issue, I am to request that in the settlement of its terms you will pay special attention to the necessity of avoiding as far as possible the use of language which might be construed as amounting to a definite pledge that Her Majesty's Government will reimburse the mining companies for their losses owing to confiscation.

I am further to request that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether the notice should be limited to the case of mining properties only, and generally with any observations and suggestions which you think may be useful in dealing with the subject.

I have, &c.

Report.

If it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government not to recognize any forfeitures or transfers of property by the Boer Government since the war (which is a matter of policy) we think it highly desirable that a notice to this effect should be issued in order to put possible purchasers on their guard, and prevent claims for compensation by such purchasers in the event of their titles being invalidated.

Any such notice, however, may lead to claims by the present owners if Her Majesty's Government conclude peace on terms which recognize these forfeitures or transfers as still existing.

It occurs to us that among the advantages of issuing such a notice would be the fact that it would tend to reduce the amount of war tax paid, and to conciliate foreign mine-owners and their Governments. As regards the payment by British subjects to the Boer Government of royalties or rents, of mines and other property reserved under contracts made prior to the commencement of the war, as a matter of strict law such payments would now be illegal; but as the refusal to pay the rents and royalties originally contracted might give the Boer Government a legal ground for taking possession of the property, we think that payments of the rents or royalties originally reserved should be permitted under licence by Her Majesty's Government.

We have prepared a notice of which a copy is annexed hereto and initialled by us.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, January 25, 1900.

Sir,

Suspected persons on "Bundesrath" and "Herzog."

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Lucas's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that, with reference to the recent seizures of certain German vessels in South African waters, he was directed by you to request us to favour you with our opinion upon the following questions:—

That on board the German mail-steamers "Bundesrath" and "Herzog," which were recently seized on suspicion of carrying contraband of war, there were persons who were suspected of being in the service of the South African Republic either as intending combatants, or as conveying secret information. That in the case of the "Bundesrath" on which there was a small party of persons falling within the former description, the vessel was brought into the Prize Court at Durban, but as no contraband of war was discovered on board of her after a prolonged search, she was released, and compensation for her detention was to be paid by Her Majesty's Government.

That the "Herzog" carried several passengers (Dutchmen and Germans) connected with the Red Cross Society as well as an expedition organized by an Antwerp Committee, which was not officially recognized by that Society. That secret information was received by Her Majesty's Government that one nurse on board had documents of a startling character concealed upon her person, and that some of the members of the so-called ambulance parties were in reality French and German gunners.

That inasmuch, however, as no contraband of war was found upon the "Herzog" she was not taken into the Prize Court, and instructions were given by the Admiralty for her immediate release, and none of the passengers were searched.

That you would be glad to be informed whether in the event of a neutral vessel being seized and brought into a Prize Court on suspicion of having contraband of war on board of her, carrying persons who were reasonably suspected of being actively or prospectively in the service of the enemy, such persons could properly be detained by the military authorities either as prisoners of war or under the provisions of martial law (if martial law had been proclaimed in the district in which they were found), irrespective of the question whether the vessel was or was not carrying contraband of war.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to your commands have the honour to

Report—

That we are of opinion that such persons cannot properly be detained under the circumstances mentioned.

In order to justify such detention we think that their carriage ought to be one of the charges against the ship, as a vessel is liable, under circumstances which it is not for present purposes necessary to discuss in detail, for carrying persons in the service of the enemy.

If it is ascertained after the vessel has been brought in as prize that she has on board persons in the service of the enemy, a supplemental charge can be preferred against the ship in the Prize Court before she is released. If this be done, such persons can be detained pending inquiry as to their real status. The propriety of preferring such a charge must depend on the circumstances of each particular case. But we cannot advise the detention of such persons if the charge against the vessel of carrying contraband, either goods or persons, has broken down or is not pressed.

The persons in the case put to us have been brought within the power of the belligerent only by bringing the vessel into port upon another charge which is not established, and under these circumstances we do not think they can be properly detained as prisoners of war, any more than they could have been properly taken out of the vessel in mid-ocean.

We would point out that the difficulty would be raised not so much by the persons themselves as by the neutral nation on board of whose ship they were being carried, and it is for this reason that we think that where it is proposed to take action on the ground that the carrying the persons on board was unlawful, proceedings should be taken in the Prize Court.

Shares held by Government of South African Republic in Pretoria-Pietersburg Railway Company.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Bertram Cox's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 24th ultimo on the subject of the shares in the Pretoria-Pietersburg Railway Company held by the Government of the South African Republic, he was directed by you to inform us that it was considered desirable to prevent the sale or transfer of these shares by the Government of the South African Republic, and that he was to inclose the form of a letter which it was proposed to address to the Secretary of the Railway Company in accordance with the opinion expressed by us in the Report above referred to.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to request us to Report—

1. Whether the terms of the draft letter were fit and proper for the purpose; and if not, what alterations or additions should be inserted.

2. By whom should the letter be signed. It was presumed that the letter should be sent by the Home Office.

3. In the event of the Company refusing to comply with the request contained in the letter, what steps should be taken to compel the Company to carry out the requirements of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your commands we have the honour to

Report—

1. That we have settled and approved the form of letter to the Railway Company.

2. The letter should be signed by a Secretary of State, and as the Company is in England and the register here, either by the Home Secretary or the Prime Minister.

3. In the event of the Company refusing to give the undertaking, an ex officio information should be filed on behalf of the Crown, and an application made to restrain the Company from parting or dealing with the shares.

We have, &c.

Annex.

Sir,

IT has been brought to the notice of Her Majesty's Government that the Government of the South African Republic are the registered proprietors in this country of 299,000*l.* shares in the Pretoria-Pietersburg Railway Company. I have therefore to give you notice that Her Majesty's Government claim these shares as being the property of an enemy Government, and to request you to give me the undertaking of the Company that they will not, without the sanction of Her Majesty's Government, permit such shares to be transferred or in any way dealt with.

I am to request you, at the earliest possible moment, to furnish me with the above undertaking.

The Secretary,
Pretoria-Pietersburg Railway Company.

Position of Orange Free State and South African Republic in relation to England.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. C. P. Lucas's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by you to request that we would advise him on certain questions as to the position occupied by the Orange Free State and the South African Republic, respectively, in relation to this country, on which a clear understanding would require to be arrived at in the event of their being either conquered by, or surrendered unconditionally to, the Queen's forces, and thereafter being effectively held and occupied.

That it would be convenient to recapitulate briefly the successive stages in the political history of those territories.

The Orange Free State.

That the Queen's sovereignty was declared over the territories north of the Orange River by Proclamation dated the 3rd February, 1848. That in that Proclamation it was declared, with regard to the Queen's subjects, that they should "be governed by the Laws, Ordinances, &c., of the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope;" and that, as an assurance to the natives that they would be protected, it was proclaimed that the native Chiefs were "under the sovereignty of Her Majesty as the paramount and exclusive authority in all international disputes as to territory, or in any cause whatever tending to interrupt the general peace and harmony of South Africa." That that claim to paramountcy had never been modified or abandoned either by any subsequent instrument or in practice. That by Letters Patent dated the 22nd March, 1851, the territories were constituted a distinct and separate Government, to be administered by the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope.

That by a Proclamation dated the 30th January, 1854, the Queen "abandoned for herself, her heirs and successors, all dominion and sovereignty over the said Orange River territory, and ordered her officers and Ministers, military and civil, to be with all convenient speed withdrawn from the said territory."

That that Proclamation was followed by the Convention of Bloemfontein, dated the 23rd February, 1854, which, inter alia, "finally freed the inhabitants of the Orange River territory from their allegiance to the British Crown," declaring them "to all intents and purposes a free and independent people, and their Government to be treated and considered thenceforth a free and independent Government."

That the status of the Orange Free State as thus established had continued unaltered up to the present time. That it had concluded Treaties with foreign Powers on an equal footing and without any interference or intervention on the part of the British Government.

The South African Republic.

That by the Sand River Convention of 1852 "the emigrant farmers beyond the Vaal River," who had originally quitted the Cape Colony in 1835, and though not relieved of their allegiance as British subjects, were admitted to be living beyond the Queen's dominions, were "guaranteed in the fullest manner, on behalf of the British Government, the right to manage their own affairs and to govern themselves without any interference on the part of Her Majesty the Queen's Government; and that no encroachments shall be made by the said Government on the territory beyond to the north of the Vaal River."

That the emigrant farmers not long after this styled themselves "The Dutch African Republic," and in the year 1858 altered that designation to "The South African Republic." That as such Republic they acted and were recognized by foreign Powers as an independent State, making Treaties with Portugal and Belgium on a sovereign footing. That that continued to be the position of the South African Republic until 1877, when, being insolvent and threatened with destruction by native tribes, and it being understood that the inhabitants were ready to come under British rule, it was, by the Proclamation of Sir T. Shepstone, dated the 12th April, 1877, declared to be British territory, and brought under the Government of the Crown as a dependency acquired by cession. That in December 1880 the Boers rebelled. That peace was made in 1881, and that in October of that year the Convention of Pretoria was signed.

That the principal operative portion of that instrument, which had been incorrectly styled its preamble (being, in fact, the permanent and only grant of the limited independence conceded by the Queen) "guaranteed, on behalf of Her Majesty that complete self-government, subject to the suzerainty of Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, will be accorded to the inhabitants of the Transvaal territory on the terms and conditions, and subject to the reservations and limitations" which were appended in a number of Articles.

That on the 27th February, 1884, after a Conference with delegates from the Transvaal, a new Convention, known as the Convention of London, containing fresh Articles in substitution for the Articles of the Convention of Pretoria, was granted by the Queen. That in this Convention the chief operative portion of the former Convention, granting self-government subject to the suzerainty, was neither re-enacted nor cancelled, the Articles only being revised. That it was not re-enacted because it was a permanent instrument—the "Charter" of the liberties of the South African Republic; that it was not cancelled because without it the Transvaal would be a Crown Colony as it was before the Convention of 1881 was granted. That, therefore, in transmitting to Sir H. Robinson (on the 14th March, 1884), the correspondence relating to the Convention of London, the Earl of Derby had spoken of the South African Republic as being "a country having self-government as conceded under the Convention of Pretoria;" and it was accordingly contended that both the self-government and the suzerainty existed together up to the commencement of the present hostilities. That this position was maintained in the despatch addressed by you to the High Commissioner for South Africa on the 16th October, 1897, which was approved by us in our Report dated the 30th September, 1897.

That we were requested to advise—

1. Whether, in view of the fact that though the Orange Free State was up to the commencement of the present war an independent State, its independence having been granted by the British Crown, the action of the Government of the Orange Free State in taking part with the South African Republic in commencing the present war had had the effect of putting an end to the instrument constituting that independence, leaving it only under the paramount authority of the Crown?

2 Whether the South African Republic, which up to the date of the commencement of the present hostilities was a State enjoying the right of internal self-government subject to the Queen's suzerainty had, by its action in declaring war against Her Majesty's Government, put an end to the Conventions of 1881 and 1884, and, if so, what was its actual political status?

3. Whether the Queen's claim to be paramount in any cause whatever tending to interrupt the general peace and harmony of South Africa was still in full force, or had been either wholly or in part invalidated either by any of the acts or instruments to which ~~our~~ attention had been directed or otherwise? [Lim]

[to S of S for Colonies]

That, in the second place, ~~you~~ would be obliged by our informing you what would be the position of the Orange Free State and the South African Republic respectively when after conquest, or unconditional capitulation, their territories were occupied by the Queen's forces. That, having regard to the history of the previous and present relations to the Crown, would those two States, which had now combined together to levy war upon the Queen, stand on the same footing in regard to the treatment to be accorded to them in order to re-establish within them the Queen's sovereignty and Government? and would one or two Proclamations of the Queen's sovereignty be required, followed by an Order or Orders in Council giving powers of legislation and administration?

That Mr. Lucas was further to request information as to the nationality of the burghers or citizens of these two territories after their conquest and the Proclamation of the Queen's sovereignty. Would they and their children, as well as any foreigners resident in them who did not claim to be nationals of some civilized foreign Power, become ipso facto British subjects?

That, as bearing upon the questions raised in his letter, or some of them, Mr. Lucas was to inclose, for our consideration, copies of two notes by the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Selborne, dated the 6th May, 1881, and the 18th July, 1881, and also copies of Opinions of the Law Officers dated the 12th May, 1877; 25th September, 1877; 3rd July, 1894; and 30th September, 1897. [See foot-note.]

That you would be further obliged by any observations which it might occur to us to make on the constitutional situation generally arising out of the state of war.

We have taken the questions submitted to us into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

B

1. That, in our opinion, the action of the Orange Free State in taking part in the present war has not, ipso facto, had the effect of putting an end to the instrument constituting its independence. The arrangement made by that instrument set up a state of things intended to be permanent by an act done once for all. Instruments of this kind are not, ipso facto, abrogated by war. The only way in which the independence of the Orange Free State can be put an end to is by conquest.

2. The same considerations, in our opinion, apply to the case of the South African Republic. The South African Republic enjoyed the right of self-government, subject to the conditions contained first in the Convention of 1881, and afterwards in the Convention of 1884. An arrangement of this kind cannot be regarded as belonging to that class of Treaties which are abrogated by the mere fact of war. The existence of suzerainty would not, in our opinion, make any difference in this respect, except in so far as the conduct of the South African Republic in declaring war against the Suzerain State might be regarded as an additional reason for annexation in the event of conquest.

3. The Queen's claim to be paramount, in the sense in which the term is used in the Proclamation of 1848, was, we think, put an end to by the Proclamation of the 30th January, 1854~~, so far as the Orange Free State is concerned.~~ FS

As regards the South African Republic, the paramountcy of Her Majesty depends on the terms of the Conventions of 1881 and 1884.

In dealing with the question of paramountcy, we have treated the subject from the legal point of view, without entering into the general political question of the right of the predominant Power to interfere in any matter affecting the general peace and harmony of South Africa.

4. The two Republics will, after conquest or unconditional capitulation, stand on the same footing with regard to the proceedings necessary to be taken to re-establish within them the Queen's sovereignty and government. If it is determined to annex them to the British dominions, this may be effected by one or by two Proclamations as may be deemed most convenient from the administrative point of view.

After conquest and the Proclamation of the Queen's sovereignty, the burghers or citizens of these two territories, as well as any foreigners resident in them who

Treatment of African-born inhabitants of Natal and Cape serving with Boers when captured by British.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. H. Bertram Cox's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by you to transmit to us a copy of a telegram received by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs from the Presidents of the South African Republic and Orange Free State, claiming that African-born inhabitants of the Colonies of Natal and the Cape of Good Hope who had joined the Boer forces should, when captured by the British authorities, be treated as prisoners of war, and should not be tried for high treason. That it might be intended to maintain that under the Proclamations issued on behalf of the Orange Free State and South African Republic, which would be found at pp. 218 and 241 of Blue Book (C. 43—1900), the inhabitants of districts invaded by the Boer forces who had joined them had become citizens of the Republics; but that the words of the telegram appeared wide enough to cover Africander Colonists from portions of the Colonies not occupied by the Boers.

That on receipt of that telegram from the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs you communicated with Sir A. Milner. That a copy of the telegram sent to Sir A. Milner and of his reply were inclosed.

That with reference to the concluding paragraph of the latter telegram, Mr. Cox was to explain that, on the 29th September, by a Resolution of the Volksraad having the effect of law within the South African Republic, all strangers serving with the Boer army were given the franchise and became burghers of the South African Republic. That reference might be made in that connection to p. 87 of the Blue Book above mentioned. That it might, of course, be assumed that no proceedings for high treason would be taken against any persons who were not by British law subjects of Her Majesty.

That in view of the threat of the Governments of the South African Republic and Orange Free State to resort to reprisals upon the British prisoners at Pretoria if their demand was not complied with, and of the danger of such rebels being acquitted by the Civil Courts contrary to the justice of the case, it had been suggested that in future cases the Colonial Dutch prisoners should not at once be brought to trial, but should be detained in custody and not tried until the termination of the war. That it had also been suggested that such persons might be deported to St. Helena for safe custody in preference to retaining them in Cape Colony.

That it must, however, be pointed out that martial law had not been proclaimed throughout Cape Colony, but only in certain of the border districts, and also that up to the present time the prisoners who had been treated as rebels had not, in most cases, been dealt with under martial law, but had been handed over to the civil authorities for trial under the ordinary law of the Colony.

That doubt was entertained whether, in the absence of statutory provision to that effect, such prisoners could be lawfully detained in Cape Colony in a district to which martial law had not been applied, and whether such prisoners would not, if detained in or passing through such districts, be able to obtain a writ of habeas corpus, and obtain their discharge if, in fact, they were being detained not as prisoners of war but on a civil charge, and had not been brought to trial within the time, if any, prescribed by the law of the Colony.

That doubt was further entertained whether, in the absence of a law of the Cape Colony passed for the purpose, such prisoners could be deported from South Africa or detained in St. Helena without a law authorizing their detention passed by the Island Legislature. That such a law could be passed in St. Helena without difficulty, but that it would be difficult to obtain legislation, if required, in Cape Colony, and that the proclamation of martial law throughout Cape Colony might lead to the resignation of the Cape Ministry, which it was desired to avoid.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to request us to take the above matters into our consideration, and to advise you—

1. Whether where a British subject had been taken in arms against Her Majesty such person could be detained in a district of the Cape Colony where martial law had not been proclaimed and not brought to trial for high treason.

(a.) Where such person had; and

(b.) Where such person had not been handed over to the civil authorities for trial.

2. Whether in either of the cases mentioned in the last question such person could obtain his release by writ of habeas corpus if so detained?

3. Whether such person could, in the absence of statutory provision to that effect, be deported (say) to St. Helena in either of the cases mentioned in the first question?

4. Whether there was any legal objection in either of the above cases, having regard to the circumstances of the case, to a prolonged detention of such person before bringing them to trial?

5. Whether there was any objection, on grounds of international law or the usages of civilized warfare, to detaining rebels as prisoners of war so long as the war lasts, and after its termination bringing them to trial for high treason in the Civil Courts?

6. Generally.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That where a British subject has been taken in arms against Her Majesty, and has been handed over to the civil authorities for trial, he cannot, in our opinion, be properly detained except under the order of the civil authorities before whom his case is pending. The Executive, by handing him over to the civil authorities for trial, elected not to treat him as a prisoner of war, but to have him prosecuted as a traitor, and that election cannot, in our judgment, be properly recalled.

In cases where such person has not been handed over to the civil authorities for trial, he may be properly detained as a prisoner of war in any place where other prisoners of war may properly be detained, irrespective of the question whether it is in a district where martial law has, or has not, been proclaimed. It is true that such person has been guilty of the crime of high treason, but he has no right to insist on being brought to trial for treason. His detention merely as a prisoner of war is an indulgence of which he cannot complain.

2. If, after such person has been handed over to the civil authorities for trial, he were taken out of their hands to be detained as a prisoner of war, we think that a serious question would arise as to the legality of his detention, and that this might be raised by application for a writ of habeas corpus. It might be contended that when he was handed over to the civil authorities he was discharged from custody as a prisoner of war, and that he could not properly be retaken as a prisoner of war on the abandonment of the proceedings before the civil authorities.

No such question could be successfully raised with reference to the detention as prisoners of war of such persons in cases where they have not been handed over to the civil authorities for trial.

3. Such persons, if detained as prisoners of war, should be treated in the same way as the other prisoners of war. We are not aware of any difficulty which stands in the way of the removal of prisoners of war to St. Helena for detention, unless there be something special in the law of the Cape or of St. Helena on this point, which we do not think likely. No special statutory provision appears to us to be necessary, but before any action of this kind is taken, we think that local advice should be obtained from the Attorney-General at the Cape and at St. Helena. The general principle is that the Crown may detain prisoners of war where it thinks fit. Any difficulties that might arise would be of procedure only.

4. We think that there are grave objections to a prolonged detention of such persons before bringing them to trial. A prisoner of war might be brought to trial for treason after any lapse of time upon the discovery of the fact that he is a British subject. But if it is from the first known that he is a British subject, and with that knowledge the Crown detains him as a prisoner of war, we think that this must in fairness be taken to be an election not to treat such person as a traitor. The greater the prolongation of the detention the stronger would be the presumption against the propriety of subsequent proceedings for treason.

5. The answer to this question is governed by the same considerations as those to which we have adverted in our answer to question 4. We think that when the fact that the person is a British subject comes to the knowledge of the authorities they ought to decide whether they will treat him as a prisoner of war or as a rebel, and act accordingly. To detain him as a prisoner of war while the war lasts, and then to bring him to trial for high treason, would be to punish the man twice for the same offence. We may add, however, that we think that probably there would be great difficulty in obtaining a conviction under circumstances of so much hardship.

6. We have nothing to add by way of general advice.

We have, &c.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, February 19, 1900.

Detention of "Beatrice" carrying flour to South African Republic.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you papers as marked in the accompanying list respecting the case of the "Beatrice."

The "Beatrice" is a British vessel which was engaged on a voyage from New York to South African ports terminating at Lourenço Marques.

On coming within British territorial waters at East London it was discovered that she contained large quantities of goods, principally flour, destined for the South African Republic, and these the local Customs authorities required should be landed, on the ground, doubtless, that the "Beatrice," being a British ship, was, by carrying goods destined for the enemy's territory, illegally engaging in trade with the enemy.

As the cargo was stored in such a manner as to make it impossible to land the goods destined for the South African Republic, without also discharging goods intended for Portuguese East Africa, the master and agents preferred to land the whole of the cargo at East London, where it has been stored by the Customs. The removal of large quantities of the goods so landed has, however, from time to time, been permitted for the purposes of consumption locally and in Portuguese East Africa.

The vessel sailed for Calcutta in ballast on the 11th December.

A note to the above effect (Paper A) was sent on the 26th ultimo to the United States' Ambassador at this Court, who had already made representations on the subject.

On the 29th ultimo his Excellency, under the impression that the flour destined for the South African Republic was being detained at East London, replied (Paper B) pointing out that it appeared to him that the action of the British authorities in the matter was in contravention of the views of Her Majesty's Government on the question of food-stuffs, as communicated to him on the 10th ultimo (Paper C), and implied an embargo on the sale and delivery of non-contraband goods in the ordinary course of trade with the people of the Republics of South Africa.

On the 2nd instant Lord Salisbury addressed a note to Mr. Choate (Paper D) explaining that the flour destined for the South African Republic was not detained as contraband of war, but that it had been put ashore because the "Beatrice" being a British vessel could not lawfully carry goods destined for the enemy even when they were not contraband, the flour in question was still at East London because no British ship could lawfully carry it on to its destination, and there were no foreign vessels available for the purpose.

Lord Salisbury added that he did not doubt that the flour or any other merchandize not contraband of war from the "Beatrice" would be handed over to any person who should apply for it, and should be able to show that he was entitled to receive it.

To this note Mr. Choate replied on the 6th instant (Paper E). He urges that the obligation of restitution of the cargoes in question to their owners being conceded, the permission extended to those owners to come and take them cannot be considered as a discharge of that obligation. He goes on to say that the American owners will claim damages for their losses in the matter, and will be supported in so doing by the United States' Government; and he finally inquires whether something cannot be done to minimize these damages by taking steps to have the goods carried on to their destination, or by their immediate purchase by Her Majesty's Government in pursuance of an offer made by the latter to that effect and accepted by him. (Paper F.)

To this communication Lord Salisbury proposes to reply that Her Majesty's Government are prepared to buy the flour at the price it would have fetched at Lourenço Marques on the day on which it would have arrived, had the voyage of the carrying ship not been interrupted; but that this offer can only extend to such flour as is owned by United States' citizens (or other neutrals), and that the transaction cannot be carried out until there is evidence of such ownership, and until it is known to whom the payment should be made.

His Excellency would also be told that, as stated in the note to him of the 9th instant (Paper G), Her Majesty's Government are ready to accept the intermediation of the United States' Consul under the conditions therein stated.

With regard to Mr. Choate's observations as to the damages due to the owners of the cargo, on account of the failure of the ship to deliver it at the port mentioned in the freight contract, Lord Salisbury proposes to inform his Excellency that any claim for damages (assuming such claim to be sustainable at law, a matter which will apparently depend on the terms of the contract of carriage) should properly be brought by the owners of the goods against those who entered into or became responsible for the execution of a contract for delivery which they failed to perform.

I am to request you to take the papers into your consideration and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether such a reply to Mr. Choate as that indicated above would, in the circumstances, be right and proper, and generally with any observations on the case which you may think fit to offer.

A Memorandum (Paper H) of the facts connected with the earlier stages of the case is also inclosed for your information.

We think an answer should be sent to Mr. Choate in the terms suggested in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 19th February.

A sentence might be added at the end stating that Her Majesty's Government cannot recognize any liability in damages to the owners of the flour, as its detention has been due entirely to the circumstance that the vessel was unable to complete its voyage owing to the fact that it was illegal by the law of the flag.

Draft of Letter from the Marquess of Salisbury to Mr. Choate.

Foreign Office, March , 1900.

Your Excellency,

I HAVE had under my consideration your note of the 6th instant respecting the case of the "Beatrice," and I have the honour to inform you that Her Majesty's Government are prepared to buy such flour, being owned by United States' citizens, as was taken out of that vessel, paying for it the price it would have fetched at Lourenço Marques on the day on which it would have arrived there had the voyage of the ship conveying it not been interrupted.

In carrying out this purchase, Her Majesty's Government, as already stated in my note of the 9th instant, are prepared to accept the intermediation of the United States' Consul under the conditions therein stated, but the transaction cannot be completed until clear evidence that the goods concerned are owned by United States' citizens is forthcoming, and until it is known to whom the purchase-money in respect of them should be paid.

With regard to your Excellency's observations as to the damages due to the owners of the cargo on account of the failure of the ship to deliver it at the port mentioned in the freight contract, it would appear that any claim for damages (assuming such claim to be sustainable at law, a matter which will apparently depend on the terms of the contract of carriage) should properly be brought by the owners of the goods against those who entered into or became responsible for the execution of a contract for delivery which they failed to perform. Her Majesty's Government are unable to admit that they are in any way liable in damages to the owners of the flour, as its detention has been due entirely to the circumstance that the vessel was unable to complete its voyage owing to the fact that such voyage was illegal by the law of the flag under which the vessel was sailing.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, February 15, 1900.

Gentlemen,

Duties of South African Banking Companies during the war.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list respecting the duties and obligations of the South African Banking Companies during the present war.

You will see from the despatch No. 17 of the 10th ultimo from the High Commissioner for South Africa (Inclosure 3 in Colonial Office of the 6th February) the terms which, with a view to regulating these duties and obligations, Sir A. Milner proposed on the 10th ultimo to the Managers of the Cape Town branches of the Standard Bank of South Africa, the Bank of Africa, and the African Banking Corporation, and to which it appears from his telegram No. 24 of the 15th January (Inclosure 3 in Colonial Office of the 20th January) that these gentlemen have already assented.

I have to request you to take these terms into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your views as to whether they are in the circumstances right and proper, or whether they should be modified or varied, and, if so, in what direction and to what extent.

Sir A. Milner has indeed already suggested the advisability of adding a further clause (Inclosure 3 in Colonial Office of the 20th January), prohibiting the payment of such of the notes of the banks concerned as are issued in the Transvaal, and I am to inquire whether you are of opinion that this additional condition should be insisted on; and in this event what steps you would recommend should be taken with a view to providing as far as possible against ultimate loss falling on British subjects and other bonâ fide holders for value without notice, who may have received such notes innocently in payment for goods supplied before the outbreak of war or in the ordinary course of trade.

Lord Salisbury would, at the same time, be glad to learn whether you would consider it advisable to ask the London banks to co-operate in the above measures, and if so in what manner you would suggest they should be approached on the subject.

I am also to transmit to you a copy of a letter from the Standard Bank of South Africa respecting their position in the present crisis, and I am to inquire what reply should, in your opinion, be made to it; and what general principles, if any, you consider should be acted on by the South African banks.

I am in conclusion to draw your attention, as a matter connected with the general question of the relations of these banks with the enemy Republics, to Sir A. Milner's telegram No. 23 of the 15th ultimo (Inclosure 2 in Colonial Office of the 20th January last), in which he refers to some negotiations between the Bank of Africa at Delagoa Bay and a representative of Messrs. Warburg and Co., of London, for the purchase of bills for 5,000*l.* against shipments of wool, the produce of the enemy's territory; and I am to ask in what terms you would suggest that Messrs. Warburg and Co. should be warned against the unlawfulness of such trading with the enemy as would apparently be involved were the agreement of their agent at Delagoa Bay with the local branch of the Bank of Africa to be carried into effect.

I am to request you to take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the various points to which your attention has been invited, and generally with any observations which you may have to offer on the subject under discussion.

Report.

The Regulations issued by Sir A. Milner to the banks in South Africa, on the 15th January, 1900, have not in point of law any binding effect. They only amount to an intimation of the view taken by the High Commissioner as to the effect on the business of the banks of the law as to trading with the enemy.

We do not think it is practicable to carry out the first five of these Regulations. They would involve vexatious interference with banking business, and any attempt to enforce them would certainly break down. The 6th Regulation is thoroughly reasonable, and, as long as the banks conform to this Regulation, we do not think they should be pressed to observe the others.

We do not think that any further clause should be added prohibiting the payment of notes on banks issued in the Transvaal.

We do not consider it advisable to ask the London banks to co-operate in the above measures, except in general terms, and in the spirit of the letter from the Standard Bank, dated the 9th instant. The terms of this letter appear to us very reasonable, and as long as the banks act in the spirit of this letter we think that no attempt should be made to interfere with their business.

The attention of all banks should be called to the necessity of their making full inquiries into each case, so as to avoid entertaining any transaction likely to result in aid or assistance to the Queen's enemies.

Messrs. Warburg and Co., who are, as we understand, traders in London, should be warned that if they take part in any export of wool from the Transvaal or Orange Free State, or are concerned in any financial operation to facilitate such export, they will incur liability under the law against trading with the Queen's enemies.

Sir,

Alleged trading with the enemy by Mr. F. W. Murray.

WE were honoured with your commands, signified in Mr. Bertram Cox's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by you to transmit to us a despatch* from the High Commissioner for South Africa regarding an alleged case of trading with the South African Republic by Mr. F. W. Murray.

That a copy of the High Commissioner's Proclamation forbidding trading with the enemy would be found at p. 40 of the Blue Book inclosed.†

That the Attorney-General of Cape Colony was of opinion that Mr. Murray, in instructing a broker at Durban to ship 5,000 packets of sugar to one Michaelson in Pretoria, was not trading with the enemy, nor attempting to trade, and he proceeded to express the opinion that whether trading with the enemy was criminal depended on the nature of the trade. That, although he did not discuss this point exhaustively, Mr. Cox was to observe that he seemed to imply that the sending of some goods to the enemy's country, not being goods which assist the enemy in military operations, such as arms, was no offence.

That you presumed that in this country to supply goods of any description to a country with which the Queen was at war would be adhering to the Queen's enemies within the meaning of the Act 25 Edward III, st. 5, cap. 2, but that the Act was not in force in the Cape. That it was believed that there was no definite statutory law in the Cape containing any definition of treason which would be applicable to this case, the only offence declared to be high treason being, it was believed, that of delivering guns and gunpowder, as provided in section 22 of the Ordinance No. 2 of 1853, and the offence must therefore be punishable, if at all, by the Roman Dutch common law. That an account of treason under this law would be found in Van Leeuwen's "Commentaries on Roman Dutch Law," translated by Chief Justice Kotze, vol. ii, Book IV, chapter 33, p. 256, and in Van der Linden's "Institutes of Holland," Book II, chapter iv, sec. 11, p. 202.

That Mr. Cox was to request us to take these matters into our consideration, and to advise you—

1. Whether, in the circumstances set forth, Mr. Murray was guilty of any offence—
   (a.) By English law.
   (b.) By Cape law.
2. Whether the opinion of Mr. Solomon was correct in point of law, and, if not, in what respect it is erroneous.
3. Generally.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, Mr. Murray would be guilty of a misdemeanour by English law. Mere trading with the enemy does not amount to high treason within the Statute of Edward III. To constitute the offence of high treason there must be a case of adhering to the Queen's enemies in the sense of supporting them in hostilities against the Queen. Trade in innocent articles with a private individual of the enemy State is not high treason.

But trade of any kind with a person in the enemy State is a misdemeanour at common law (2 Roll. Abr., 173), viz., under head "Prerogative le Roy." (L.) Guerre 3, per Lord Mansfield, Gist v. Mason, 1 T. R., 89, per Lord Stowell in The Hoop, 1 C. Rob., 216–17; Hinkle v. L. Exch. Afr. Co., as cited by Sir John Nicholl, arguendo, 8 T. R., p. 556; Potts v. Bell, 8 T. R., 543.

An attempt to commit a misdemeanour is in itself a misdemeanour by the law of England, and it appears to us to be clear that by sending the instructions in question Mr. Murray attempted to trade with the enemy. The matter did not rest merely in intention. The instructions were an act done which, if not intercepted, would have directly led to the commission of the offence.

We are not in a position to advise whether Mr. Murray was guilty of any offence by Cape law. The authorities referred to in Mr. Bertram Cox's letter of the 19th February are too vague and general to throw any light on this question. It may be that trading with the enemy amounts to crimen læsæ majestatis, and we should observe that Mr. Solomon does not appear to rest his opinion on any distinction between the law of England and the law of the Cape upon this point.

Mr. Solomon's opinion seems to us to be erroneous on two points:—

1. If his statement that the question whether trading with the enemy is criminal depends on the nature of the trade is to be taken as having reference to the law of England, as is apparently the case, we are unable to agree with him for the reasons given above.

2. We do not understand his statement that there was not an attempt in law to trade, but only, at most, instructions given by Murray to Cowie to trade. These instructions seem to us to constitute an attempt to trade with the enemy, as we have above explained. They were obviously instructions to Cowie to ship on account of Murray. But even if it were possible to regard them as mere advice by Murray to Cowie, we think that by English law they would render Murray liable to an indictment for endeavouring to procure the commission of a misdemeanour. It does not seem probable that there is any difference between the law of England and the law of the Cape on the question of what constitutes an attempt, but we must, of course, point out that the question whether Mr. Murray has or has not committed a criminal offence must be determined by the law of the Cape.

We have &c.

Annex 1.

Report of Attorney-General of Cape Colony.

THERE is no evidence before me on which I could prosecute Mr. Murray. All the information I have is that he sent a telegram to Cowie, a broker at Durban, instructing him to ship 5,000 packets of sugar to one Michaelson in Pretoria. It does not appear that this telegram was acted upon by Cowie. I presume it was intercepted, and never reached him. There was no trading with the enemy, or an attempt in law to trade, but only, at most, instructions given by Murray to Cowie to trade.

If Cowie had acted on the telegram, and shipped the 5,000 packets of sugar, they might have been captured on the ground that trading by British subjects with the enemy is prohibited, and all property of such subjects engaged in such trade may be confiscated.

Whether trading with the enemy is criminal depends, I think, on the nature of the trade. The mere breach of the Proclamation prohibiting trading does not necessarily amount to a crime. The Proclamation does not make law. If the trade consisted in sending something to the enemy which would assist them in their military operations against the Queen, such as arms and ammunition or general contraband, I should not hesitate to say that such trading amounted to high treason. It is not, however, necessary to discuss this point further, because, as a fact, there was no trading, but only instructions to trade, not acted upon, which would certainly not be criminal. The authorities in Natal should have allowed the telegram to reach Cowie, and then have closely watched him.

Annex 2.

Further Report of Attorney-General of Cape Colony.

I HAVE carefully read the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown on the above subject. I adhere to my opinion that the particular trading in question is not a criminal offence by the law of this Colony. The nature of the trade must determine whether trading with the enemy is a criminal offence. According to the Roman-Dutch law in force in this Colony, it would be a crime to send goods into the enemy's country which would assist the enemy in prosecuting the war; but sending sugar, which is not a necessary of life even, but a luxury, to a merchant carrying on business in the Transvaal, while there is war between that country and England, would not be a criminal offence. In no case could such a transaction be said to affect or endanger the safety of the State, and it could therefore be neither crimen perduellionis nor crimen læsæ majestatis. There is no such thing as a misdemeanour, either by the Statute or common law of this Colony.

By the law of this Colony, an attempt to commit a crime is itself a crime. On further consideration, I am inclined to think that the sending of the telegram by Murray to the broker in Natal was an attempt to trade with the enemy; but as the trade itself in the particular class of goods the broker was instructed to forward to the Transvaal would not be a crime according to the laws of this Colony, so neither would the attempt to engage in such trade be a crime.

[February 26, 1900.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, February 26, 1900.

Sir,

As to confiscation of properties by Boer Governments for non-payment of taxes, &c.

WE were honoured with your commands, signified in Mr. H. Bertram Cox's letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by you to inform us that, in connection with the Notice issued on the 26th January by the High Commissioner for South Africa regarding the forfeiture of properties by the Governments of the South African Republic and Orange Free State, certain further questions had arisen on which you would be glad to have our advice.

That Mr. Cox was to inclose a copy of a telegram from the Governor of Natal (together with copies of the earlier telegrams noted in the margin*), from which we should see that the censors in that Colony had asked for instructions with regard to passing letters ordering or authorizing payments to the Government of the South African Republic, and that the Governor feared that he would be open to a claim for compensation if he instructed the censors to refuse to pass the letters.

That you were inclined to approve Sir W. Hely-Hutchinson's proposed reply, but that Mr. Cox was to observe that, although in the case of the City and Suburban and other mines, efforts had been made to pay the licence moneys due, it was probable that in many cases, the High Commissioner's Notice being general in terms and making no exceptions, it was believed that the Notice was intended to prevent payment of, and to give protection against the consequences of failing to pay, any sort of licence or due to the Government of the Republic.

That that, however, went beyond what was advised by us in our opinion given on the 18th January, and beyond the intentions of Her Majesty's Government, as shown in your telegram of the 27th January (No. 2), and that considering the number of interests involved it was a question whether a further Notice should not be issued to clear up all doubt, or whether it would be sufficient without public Notice to intimate to those asking for advice that payment of licences, rents or royalties under contracts made prior to the commencement of the war were permitted —the procedure recommended by us in our Report supplemental to that of the 18th January.

That Mr. Cox was also to transmit to us the Papers noted in the margin,† with regard to the imposition of "War Tax" by the Government of the South African Republic.

That that tax was, of course, an entirely different one from the tax referred to in our Reports quoted above.

That it was presumably imposed under Law 24 of 1896, although the amount of the tax, and the date at which notice appeared to have been given, did not entirely comply with the requirements of the law.

That it would be within our recollection that during the past year a correspondence took place between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the South African Republic regarding the imposition of War Tax under that law in respect of the Magato campaign.

That Her Majesty's Government were at first advised that the action of the South African Republic constituted a breach of the London Convention and that the Companies concerned, though advised to pay, were told to do so under protest, and that their claims for a refusal would be supported diplomatically by Her Majesty's Government, but that in our Report of the 13th October we stated that we considered that the view of the South African Republic that there was no breach of the Convention must be accepted.

That no action was taken on our Report in consequence of the outbreak of the war.

That you apprehended that the question of the liability of British subjects to pay the "War Tax" in respect of the present war, or of the issue of a supplementary Notice declining to recognize confiscation for non-payment of that tax, such as was suggested by the Henderson Consolidated Corporation (Limited), might be considered independently of the controversy with regard to the "War Tax" imposed in respect of the Magato campaign, but that it would be necessary in drafting any such notice as was proposed, to bear in mind that confiscations of property for "War Tax" might be due to failure to comply with the law on either of those two entirely different occasions.

That Mr. Cox was to point out that the letter of the Henderson Corporation, much of whose property was situated in Swaziland, appeared to assume that the High Commissioner's Notice of the 26th January would apply to that country.

That Mr. Cox was to observe that Swaziland, though administered by the Government of the South African Republic under the Swaziland Convention of 1894, had never been incorporated in that Republic, and that, although the claims of British property-holders in Swaziland to protection were similar to those in the Transvaal, the Notice did not appear to cover Swaziland.

That he was to add that Law No. 11 of 1896, referred to by Mr. Whitty, was the law providing for the collection of direct taxes, and gave the Government in case of non-payment a lien first on the crops and then on the land.

That Mr. Cox was also to inclose a despatch from the Governor of Natal forwarding a letter from Mr. W. A. Knight, who, having become a burgher of the South African Republic, inquired whether he could be "forced to take up arms against his country (i.e., this country), at the peril of losing his property." That other papers relating to similar cases were also inclosed.*

That Mr. Cox was to observe that burghers of British origin, such as Mr. Knight, were undoubtedly bound by the Commando Law to take up arms against the Queen, but that to compel them to do so was a harsh measure, which, as Mr. Knight, observed, had not been pursued with regard to the Dutch burgher forces at the Cape.

That the High Commissioner's Notice appeared to cover the case of the confiscation of the land of a burgher such as Mr. Knight, who refused to fight, and that it appeared, on general principles, to be desirable to detach waverers from the armies of the Republics in that way.

That Mr. Cox was to request us to take the papers into our consideration, and inform you—

1. Whether we considered that a Supplementary Notice to that of the 26th January, should be issued, and, if so, whether it should refer to the payment of ordinary rents and licences, the payment of "War Tax" and confiscation of land for failure to pay "War Tax," and the confiscation of land of burghers who refused to fight against the Queen, or any of such matters; or whether we consider that the existing Notice was sufficient, and whether it covered all or any of those cases, and, if so, in what terms the inclosed inquiries should be answered?

2. That Mr. Cox was to request that if we considered a further Notice was necessary, we would draft the Notice required. That it was desired that such a Notice might either explicitly or implicitly make clear that no liability for giving compensation was thereby admitted by Her Majesty's Government.

3. That finally, Mr. Cox was to inquire whether the confiscation of the movable property of British subjects in the South African Republic or Orange Free State was covered by the Notice issued by the High Commissioner on the 26th January, and, if so, whether the answers which had hitherto been given by Her Majesty's Government in regard to inquiries as to compensation were appropriate, and should still be given.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That in our opinion the existing Notice is sufficient. It covers all the cases mentioned whether the confiscation be for the non-payment of ordinary rents or licences, or for failure to pay the "War Tax," or for refusal to fight against the Queen.

Though Swaziland is not mentioned in the Notice we presume that Her Majesty's Government intend to include it under the general designation of the territories of the South African Republic. It certainly ought to be included, but, at present, no further notice to this effect seems to be necessary.

We think that the Henderson Corporation should be informed that it is not intended to issue any further Proclamation or Notice at present, and that while the "War Tax" must not be paid, Her Majesty's Government raise no objection to the payment of the ordinary rents or licences reserved under the contracts by which the land was taken before the war.

As the letter of the Henderson Corporation states that the Notice appears to cover property of all descriptions, it will be well to state incidentally in reply that it relates to immovable property only.

Mr. Whitty should, we think, be referred to the terms of the Notice of the 26th January, 1900, and informed that the "War Tax" must not be paid, but that there is no objection to the payment of ordinary rents and licences.

Those who have written to inquire whether they will be indemnified in respect of the consequences of their refusal to serve against the Queen should be informed that the Notice of the 26th January applies to the case of forfeiture or confiscation of immovable property for refusal to serve.

2. Does not arise.

3. The Notice of the 26th January has no application to movable property. It applies only to property situate in the territories of the South African Republic or Orange Free State, and the terms of the Notice show that it is not intended to apply to movables. The answers that have been given with regard to inquiries for compensation appear to us to be right. We think that in future the opportunity might be taken for stating that the Notice applies only to immovable property.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, February 15, 1900.

Gentlemen,

Responsibility of Uganda Administration for losses of Protectroate officers through robbery of their goods in transit.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to lay the following circumstances before you in connection with losses recently sustained by officers and non-commissioned officers in Uganda through robberies which have taken place from loads of goods going up to them from the coast.

Both classes of officers are entitled by the Regulations to receive a certain number of porter loads a-year free of transport charges, so that in effect their salaries may be considered to be higher than the nominal figures at which they are put by the value of the transport charges of the loads in question.

In these circumstances it seems open to contention that the Administration has promised the free carriage of these goods as part of the contract of service entered into between it and its employés, and that it may therefore have rendered itself responsible for the safe delivery of the goods.

Any general liability of the Administration in the matter (assuming that such liability exists) might no doubt be limited by previous agreement with the employés; but this has not been done so far, and can hardly now be done with regard to those at present employed under agreements in which no such limitation was originally inserted.

I am to request you to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the above view of the responsibility of the Uganda Protectorate Administration is correct and generally with any observations which you have to make on the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

We understand the question put to us to relate, not to loads carried in the Government caravans, but to loads carried by carriers in the ordinary way in respect of which the officer has a claim against the Government to be repaid the cost of transport.

With regard to these loads we are of opinion upon the materials now before us that the Government are in no way responsible for loss. The officer or his agent has selected the carrier and made his own arrangement for the transport. All that the Government has done is to undertake to repay the cost of the transport of four loads per quarter as part of his salary.

Of course, if the Government had undertaken that they would insure for the officer the safe receipt of sixteen loads in each year, or had undertaken to find the carriage for him of that number of loads, different considerations would arise. If the whole contract between the Government and the officer on this point is correctly stated in the despatch and the further Memorandum there is no liability on the part of the Government for loss.

Colonial Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Downing Street, March 14, 1900

Gentlemen,

Proclamations relating to confiscations of property or mining rights by South African Republic and Orange Free State.

I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Chamberlain to request your consideration of certain questions which have arisen with regard to lands, railways, mines, and other property owned by the Governments of the South African Republic and the Orange Free State, within the territories of the Republics, and of certain further questions which are likely to arise in the event of the destruction by order of the said Governments, or by the citizens of the Republics, of property in mines, buildings, mining machinery, and the like owned by the Governments of the Republics or by private individuals or Companies within the territories of such Republics.

2. It is apprehended that, in view of the possible inclusion of the territories of the South African Republic and Orange Free State within Her Majesty's dominions at the conclusion of the war, the Governments of the Republics may make extensive alienations of property owned by them in land, railways, or mines, in order to prevent such property falling into the hands of Her Majesty at the conclusion of the war, and to cause difficulties between Her Majesty's Government and the subjects of foreign Powers to whom such property may have been made over.

3. It has accordingly been suggested that a Proclamation should at once be issued of a similar nature to that issued by the High Commissioner for South Africa on the 26th January last (a copy of which is inclosed, marked (A)), warning all whom it may concern that such alienations of property will not be recognized by Her Majesty's Government.

4. A draft of such a Proclamation, which has been prepared in this Department, is transmitted herewith, and marked (B).

5. Her Majesty's Government have, further, some grounds for anticipating that, should Her Majesty's forces advance into the territories of the South African Republic, the Government of the Republic may order or permit, or the burghers of the Republic may, without such order or permission, destroy valuable property of Her Majesty's subjects or of the subjects of neutral Powers in the shape of mines, mining machinery and plant, buildings, and the like, or the property of the Government of the South African Republic of a like nature. It is desired to prevent, if possible, the occurrence of such wanton destruction of property, and I am to inclose the draft of a Proclamation (marked (C)) which it is proposed to issue, with a view to warning all whom it may concern, that persons ordering or committing such acts of destruction will be held liable by Her Majesty's Government in property and person for their conduct.

6. I am to request you to take these matters into your consideration, and to advise Mr. Chamberlain:—

1. Whether there is any objection, on grounds of international law or otherwise, to the issue by Her Majesty's Government—

(a.) Of a Proclamation declaring that Her Majesty's Government will not recognize alienations of their property by the Governments of the South African Republic or Orange Free State;

(b.) Of a Proclamation warning persons against wanton destruction of property within the Republics.

2. If not, whether the draft Proclamations transmitted herewith are fit and proper for the purposes for which they are intended, or in what respects they should be amended.

3. Generally.

I am to request that Mr. Chamberlain may be favoured with your Report at the earliest possible moment.

I have, &c.
(Signed) H. BERTRAM COX.

Report.

We see no objection to either of the proposed Proclamations.

The liability under the second will be according to law—martial law if the act is done while the district is under martial law—or the ordinary law of the country.

As altered and initialled by us, we approve of the draft Proclamations.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, March 15, 1900.

Gentlemen,

Attempted commandeering of staff of Robinson South African Banking Company.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to inform you that he learns from the Robinson South African Banking Company that the Government of the South African Republic have endeavoured to force the manager and staff of their branch bank at Johannesburg—all of whom are represented as being British subjects—to "go on commando," and that, on their refusal to take up arms against their Sovereign, preparations have been made for expelling them from the territories of the Republic.

The question is thus raised how far one belligerent State is justified during war in ejecting from its territories the non-combatant subjects of the other belligerent State.

The modern practice seems to tend towards the establishment of a usage whereby enemy non-combatant subjects are permitted to remain in the enemy country during good behaviour.

This usage cannot, however, be said to be either authoritative or of universal acceptance, and Lord Salisbury would therefore be glad if you would take the question raised by the Robinson South African Banking Company into your consideration and favour him with your opinion as to whether any, and, if so, what, action should be taken in the matter by Her Majesty's Government; and with any observations of a general nature which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

It cannot be said that the expulsion of enemy non-combatant subjects is a violation of international law, but it is a harsh measure, and in the absence of some good reason for it, is not in accordance with modern practice.

It is, however, most unusual and improper to require such persons to bear arms against their own Sovereign. The true rule on this subject is laid down in section 391 of Bluntschli's "Droit International" (5th edition 1891) and the accompanying note.

We think that the expulsion of British subjects because of their refusal to bear arms against their own country affords fair ground for remonstrance. Such a remonstrance may be useful by way of calling attention to the very oppressive conduct of the Transvaal Government in this matter.

[1. Le service militaire est de son essence une obligation civique et politique ; on ne peut donc le séparer de la qualité de citoyen de l'État. Or, comme on n'accorde pas dans la règle des droits politiques aux étrangers, il ne peut non plus leur être imposé des charges civiques. Si on les contraignait à servir sous les drapeaux d'un État étranger, ils pourraient se voir forcés de verser leur sang pour une cause qui leur est indifférente, ou pour des intérêts opposés à ceux de leur patrie. Les étrangers établis dans le pays ne peuvent être appelés au service que s'il s'agit d'augmenter les forces d'une localité pour lutter contre des peuplades incivilisées ou contre des brigands ; ils ne peuvent plus l'être s'il s'agit d'une guerre politique.

Gentlemen,

Responsibility of Protectorate Administrations for safe custody in transit of loads for Uganda officers.

I AM directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to acknowledge receipt of your Report of the 27th ultimo, on the subject of the extent of the responsibility devolving upon the Administrations of the East Africa or Uganda Protectorates for the safe custody in transit of the loads of which free transport is allowed to officers of the Uganda Protectorate. His Lordship regrets that in the reference on which your Report was founded the exact position of the transport service to Uganda was not made more clear, and I am now to offer the following explanations in regard to it.

There are two stages in the transport of goods from the coast at Mombasa to Uganda :—

1. By rail, to railhead.
2. By carts, porters, and, on the Lake, by sailing-boats or canoes.

The railway is a Government undertaking which charges rates on all freight, whether Government or not, which passes over its rails.

There is a system of transport from railhead which is kept up by Government for Government purposes out of the funds of the Uganda Administration. All charges connected with it are met out of those funds, and no goods are carried by it for persons unconnected with the Administration. In order to save European officers of the Protectorate the heavy cost of transport on a certain quantity of European necessaries of life, without which their health, and therefore public efficiency, would suffer, the Administration allows them free transport of a fixed number of loads. These loads average between 50 and 60 lbs. weight of goods, and the allowance was made in loads because, at the time, the only means by which goods were conveyed to Uganda was by loads on the heads of porters. So far, therefore, as goods conveyed by the railway or by the Government transport service are concerned, they are from the date of their being placed on the railway only handled by persons in Government employment. There is not actual contract for delivery, and the Administration is ignorant of the contents of the loads which it carries for its officials ; the delivery may take place close to railhead or it may be necessary for the loads to be carried to the most distant part of the Protectorate where porters are still the only means of transport.

There are, in addition to the Government transports, private carriers, but Lord Salisbury does not understand that they are now under consideration, and he thinks that the point on which your opinion is requested may be confined to the liability of the Administration for the contents of loads carried by the Government transport.

I am to request that you will take the matter into your further consideration by the light of these more detailed explanations, and that you will be good enough to inform Lord Salisbury whether they modify, and if so to what extent, the opinion with which you favoured his Lordship on the 27th ultimo.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Report.

Upon the materials now before us, our previous Report which was based upon the despatch of the 15th February and the supplementary Memorandum is no longer applicable.

It appears to us that the Government is liable for any loss of the property comprised in the loads in question unless it can be shown that the loss was not due to any negligence on the part of the Government employees, but was due to some cause which could not be obviated by those whom the Government employed to carry these loads either on the railway or from the railhead to the interior.

On such a contract as the Government has entered into with its officials, the Government is bound to see that due care is taken of the property, and the loss—if unexplained—would be evidence of negligence on the part of those to whom the Government has intrusted the care of it.

Foreign Office, March 27, 1900.

Gentlemen,

Payment of fees on patents in Orange Free State.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to bring before you the following circumstances.

On the 7th instant Messrs. Stanley and Popplewell, a firm of chartered Patent Agents, wrote to say that some of their English clients were owners of patents in the Orange Free State, granted under the Ordinance No. 10 of 1888 ; and that as one of those patents would become void in May next, unless a renewal fee were paid to the Treasurer-General of that State, they were anxious to learn whether such a payment in the present condition of affairs in the Free State might safely be made, and whether, if made, it would be effectual in securing a continuance of the patent rights.

Lord Salisbury thereupon drew the attention of Mr. Secretary Chamberlain to the case, and stated that, with his concurrence, his Lordship proposed to inform Messrs. Stanley and Popplewell that there was no objection to such a fee as they mentioned being paid, but that it was impossible to advise them as to the effect of the payment.

Mr. Chamberlain pointed out in reply that, in consequence of the occupation of Bloemfontein and of the flight of the officers of the Republican Government, doubts naturally arose as to the question with whom the Government of the Free State now rests, and as to whether the fees in question should be paid to the British authorities in possession.

The matter is complicated by the fact that there is no trustworthy information to hand as to the exact state of things which now exists at Bloemfontein.

President Steyn has fled from the capital and ordinary seat of Government, and has been described by the Field Marshal Commanding-in-chief Her Majesty's forces in South Africa as the "late President," but so far as is known he has not by any formal act abdicated his functions. He probably left Bloemfontein because he wished to avoid being captured or surrendering himself on the occupation of that town, but presumably he still claims to be President of the Orange Free State.

It is to be remembered, further, that the British forces are in effective occupation of only a portion of that State; and presumably the de jure Government are within their rights in removing the seat of the Government to some place other than Bloemfontein.

I am to request you to take the above facts into your consideration and to favour Lord Salisbury with any observations you may have to offer on the effect which they have had on those who, as in the case of Messrs. Stanley and Popplewell's clients, have relations with the Government of the Orange Free State; and generally on the rights and duties of Her Majesty's military forces in regard to the civil administration of the occupied territory.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

The Orange Free State cannot be considered as a conquered country. Military occupation is in its nature merely provisional, and it is only a portion of the Orange Free State which is even under military occupation by the British forces. Her Majesty's Government have not finally assumed the administration of the Free State, and if persons in the position of Messrs. Stanley and Popplewell's clients were directed to pay fees to the Commander of the British forces, or to the British Government, this would be a step inconsistent with the essentially provisional nature of military occupation, and would involve an obligation to indemnify such persons in eventualities which though not probable are possible. We think that the attitude which has been already adopted should be adhered to, and that no directions should be given with reference to the payment of such fees.

Military occupation involves the displacement of the ordinary Government of the country, only so far as this is necessary for military purposes, to which everything else must be subordinated. The subject is well treated by Rivier, "Principes du Droit des Gens," vol. ii, p. 299 et seq.; and, speaking generally, the Articles contained in Section III adopted at the Hague Conference fairly express the state of things which results from military occupation. It is merely a step in the prosecution of the war, and does not amount to a displacement of the existing Government, except so far as is necessary for the purposes of the war.

Foreign Office, April 3, 1900.

Gentlemen,

Bridler and Co.'s claim for detention of goods conveyed in British vessels and destined for enemy's territory.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the correspondence, as marked in the accompanying list, respecting a claim for compensation which has been put forward by the Swiss Minister at this Court on behalf of the Swiss firm of Messrs. Bridler and Co., of Lourenço Marques, in respect of certain goods, estimated to be worth 920*l*. 8s., which were being conveyed to them by British ships, and which were landed at various British ports in South Africa on suspicion of their being destined for the enemy's territory.

The particulars of the different cargoes in regard to the detention which Messrs. Bridler ask for compensation are, according to that firm's statement of the case, as follows:—

1. The "Dunolly Castle." This vessel was obliged by the Customs authorities to unload 71 tons of sugar at East London.

2. The "Gaika." Twenty-five cases of condensed milk are said to have been seized on board this vessel, but no particulars are furnished as to whether this happened at Durban or at East London, or by whose order they were so seized.

3. The "Tintagel Castle" was obliged by the Customs authorities to unload twelve cases of biscuits and one case of cigars at Durban.

4. From the "Umtali" thirty cases of condensed milk were unloaded and seized at Durban, but by whom they were unloaded does not appear.

5. From the "Inyati" were taken out at Durban, but by whom is not mentioned, twenty cases of barley, two cases of soap, five cases of preserved fish, five cases of macaroni, twenty cases of starch, five cases of tapioca, five cases of sago, twenty cases of Sunlight soap, one case of gelatine, five cases of marmalade.

6. From the "Clan Graham" seventy-five cases of whisky were seized by the Customs authorities at East London, acting under the orders of the Commanding Officer of Her Majesty's ship "Barrosa."

On the 13th February a letter (Paper E) was received from the Colonial Office on the subject, from which it appeared that, so far at least as the Natal authorities were concerned, their action in the matter had been due to their having been informed by the High Commissioner that Messrs. Bridler and Co. were considered by Her Majesty's Consul at Lourenço Marques to be agents for the Transvaal.

On the 27th February a further letter was received from the Colonial Office (Paper F), to the effect that the goods ex the steam-ship "Dunolly Castle" had been landed at East London by the agents of the vessel of their own motion. As for the whisky ex the "Clan Graham," the Customs had insisted on its being landed at the above-mentioned port, because most of it was destined for the South African Republic, and there was no proof that any was intended for Portuguese consumption. Further particulars as to the consignment from the two vessels will be found in the Colonial Office letter of the 16th March (Paper I).

On the 10th March (Paper G) M. Bourcart was informed that, in the opinion of the Natal authorities, there had been reason for concluding that the ultimate destination of Messrs. Bridler's goods was the Transvaal, and that this being so, they could not lawfully be carried by British ships, which were prohibited from carrying goods destined for the enemy's territory. As M. Bourcart had strongly insisted on the fact that all the vessels had sailed before the outbreak of war, and especially before the issue of the Queen's Proclamation of the 27th December, 1899, it was pointed out to him that this document was merely declaratory of the prohibition of trade with the enemy, and did not itself impose such prohibition.

Lord Salisbury went on to say that as M. Bourcart was enabled, under the instructions which he had received, to communicate the declaration of Mr. F. Bridler that the goods were in fact destined for consumption in Portuguese East Africa, Her Majesty's Government felt that they could rely on that declaration as being supported and confirmed by the Swiss Government. Instructions would accordingly be given to the Colonial authorities at Natal to allow the goods to be carried forward to Lourenço Marques by British ship.

His Lordship added that the goods in question had all along been at the disposal of the owner, and that the only disability attaching to them was that they could not, on the ground which had now been removed by M. Bourcart's assurance, be carried by a British ship.

A copy of this note was sent to the Colonial Office on the same day (Paper H), with a view to the necessary instructions being given to the authorities in Natal.

A letter on the subject (Paper J) has now been received from that Department, covering a copy of a telegram from Her Majesty's Consul at Lourenço Marques, to the effect that Mr. Bridler cannot give any guarantee that the goods in question will not go to the Transvaal Republic. This statement may be compared with the language used in M. Bourcart's note of the 24th January, in which he alludes to the goods as being "destinées, selon les affirmations de Mr. Bridler, à être vendues sur place, et non pas à être importées au Transvaal," and further on as having been "réservées selon la déclaration du réclamant à la consommation locale dans le territoire neutre," and with that which he employs in his note of the 31st January, in which he speaks of Mr. Bridler as a person "qui faisait simplement venir dans un port neutre des marchandises destinées à la consommation locale."

M. Bourcart has now pointed out that no reply has been given to the request contained in his note of the 24th January that compensation should be granted to Messrs. Bridler and Co., and he presses for an answer on the point.

I have the honour to request you to favour Lord Salisbury with your views as to the answer which should be returned to M. Bourcart's request that Mr Bridler may receive compensation, together with any general observations on the case which you may desire to offer.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion the claim for damages should not be entertained.

It should be pointed out that, in view of the attitude of Messrs. Bridler, it is more than doubtful whether the goods were really destined for consumption at Lourenço Marques, as was assumed when it was decided that their transit might be permitted, and that, in any case, damages cannot be claimed for the detention, as there was abundant ground for suspicion that the destination of the goods was such that they could not be lawfully carried by a British vessel according to the law of the flag.

Gentlemen,

"Mashona;" arrest of, on suspicion of trading with the enemy.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers as marked in the margin respecting the case of the "Mashona," a British steam-ship which was seized in Algoa Bay on the 8th December, 1899, by Her Majesty's ship "Partridge," on suspicion of trading with the enemy, and subsequently brought in for adjudication by the Prize Court at Cape Town.

On the 15th ultimo the High Commissioner for South Africa telegraphed (Paper A) to the effect that judgment in the case had been delivered on the 13th March, and that in accordance with its terms the ship had been released. He added, however, that the Attorney-General of the Colony was of the opinion, which he shared, that the judgment was erroneous, and that he had accordingly given notice of appeal, which could be prosecuted or not as Her Majesty's Government might see fit when the text of the judgment itself reached this country, and so allowed of a definite opinion being formed in the matter.

That judgment has now been received (Paper B), and I am accordingly to request you to take it into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the appeal already lodged against it should or should not be prosecuted; as well as with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

A copy of the interim judgment is also inclosed (Paper E) as well as some remarks on the general aspects of the matter by the Admiral in command on the Cape of Good Hope Station (Papers C and D).

Report.

In our opinion the appeal ought not to be prosecuted. There is no doubt as to the law applicable to the case. If the intention is to trade with the enemy only after obtaining a licence from the British Government no offence is committed. The "Mercurius," Edwards 53.

On the other hand the offence may be committed if the intention was to trade with the enemy without a licence under the erroneous belief that no licence was required in respect of the particular goods. "The Hoop," 1 C.R. 196.

In the present case it was alleged on behalf of the ship-owner that the intention was before carrying the cargo to Delagoa Bay to give bond to the satisfaction of the Commissioners of Customs that the goods should be held at the disposal of the British authorities. It must, we think, be taken that the Commissioners of Customs in allowing goods to proceed after such bonds had been given, were acting within the authority of the British Government.

The difference between the majority of the Court and the dissenting Judge, Lawrence, J., was merely on a question of fact.

We think that the view of the majority of the Court is the more reasonable. As it was known that such bonds were being exacted, we think that it ought in fairness to be taken, in the circumstances of this case, that the ship-owner brought the goods to Algoa Bay with the intention of giving such a bond, and we do not think it probable that the decision which has been arrived at on this point in his favour by the majority of the Court would be reversed on appeal.

The arguments presented in the Memorandum prepared by the Naval Commander-in-chief, which we have carefully considered, do not appear to us to be sufficient to enable us to adopt the view which he puts forward.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, May 17, 1900.

Sir,

Orange Free State: Mode of annexing. Effect on laws and status of citizens.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. H. Bertram Cox' letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by you to request our consideration of certain questions relating to the annexation of the Orange Free State, which it was the intention of Her Majesty's Government to proclaim at an early date.

That Mr. Cox was to transmit to us copies of recent telegrams* which had passed between the Colonial Office and the High Commissioner for South Africa, from which it would be seen that Lord Roberts desired that the announcement should be made as soon as Kroonstadt had been occupied by Her Majesty's forces, and that as that was expected to take place in a few days, the matter was somewhat urgent.

That the questions which we were requested to consider fell into two classes: class (A) relating to the manner in which the annexation should be effected; and class (B) the form of Constitution which should be established in the annexed territories.

That it was presumed that upon the formal annexation of the Orange Free State, inasmuch as that country would have been acquired by conquest:—

1. The Laws of the Orange Free State would remain in force unless and until altered by legislation.
2. Such legislation might be effected by order of Her Majesty's Council.
3. The inhabitants of the Orange Free State would become British subjects.
4. Her Majesty had power by Letters Patent to establish a Governor and to empower such Governor to enact laws and to appoint judicial and other officers.

That, with respect to class (A), Mr. Cox was to transmit to us a copy of the correspondence presented to Parliament in 1877 (C. 1776),† from which it would be seen that the annexation of the Transvaal in April of that year was effected (after the grant of a Commission under the Royal Sign Manual and Signet to Sir Theophilus Shepstone to inquire into disturbances which had taken place in that country, and, in certain events, to proclaim that that country should be annexed to, and form part of, Her Majesty's dominions) by a Proclamation of Sir Theophilus Shepstone, based on the authority of that Commission, formally declaring the territory known as the South African Republic to be British territory. That it was, of course, possible to issue such a Commission to Lord Roberts in this country and to convey to him, by telegraph, the announcement that he was empowered thereby to issue a Proclamation of annexation, the terms of which could be at the same time signified to him.

That, on the other hand, it might be preferable to formally annex the Orange Free State by Proclamation, Letters Patent, or Order in Council issued in this country, and to direct Lord Roberts to notify publicly the terms of such annexation in the Orange Free State, and that one of the questions to which our attention was directed was which of the above courses was to be preferred from a legal point of view.

* Telegrams (2), May 5; ditto, May 7; ditto, May 8; ditto, May 10, 1900.

† Parliamentary Paper (C. 1776), 1877. Lord Chancellor's Reports, May 6; ditto, July 18, 1881. Law Officers' Reports, May 12; ditto, September 25, 1877; ditto (2), July 3, 1894; ditto, September 30, 1897; ditto, February 5, 1900.

That Mr. Cox was to transmit to us the draft of a Commission empowering Lord Roberts to annex the Orange Free State,* and of an Order in Council† which, should we think it desirable, could be converted into a Proclamation or into Letters Patent, should that form of procedure seem to us preferable.

That Mr. Cox was also to transmit to us the drafts of a Proclamation‡ to be issued in the Orange Free State simultaneously with the Proclamation or announcement of annexation, in order to notify to the inhabitants that the protection of Her Majesty would be extended to such as peaceably returned to their homes and refrained from acts of violence or hostility.

That Mr. Cox was further, with regard to the questions under class (B) above referred to, to transmit to us drafts of—

(a.) Letters Patent § establishing the form of Government which it was proposed to set up temporarily in the annexed territory;
(b.) Instructions‖ to the Governor to be appointed;
(c.) Draft of a Commission¶ appointing a Governor.

That Mr. Cox was to request us to take the matters into our consideration, and to advise you—

1. Whether upon annexation the laws of the Orange Free State would remain in force unless and until altered by legislation?

2. Whether such legislation could be effected by Order of Her Majesty in Council?

3. Whether the inhabitants of the Orange Free State would become British subjects upon annexation, and, if so, whether such transfer by nationality would apply equally to inhabitants who were and who were not within the Orange Free State at the date of annexation?

4. Whether Her Majesty had power by Letters Patent to establish a Governor and to empower such Governor to enact laws and to appoint judicial and other officers?

5. Whether the annexation should be affected by Proclamation made by Lord Roberts in the Orange Free State, and, if so, whether it was necessary that a formal Commission under Royal Sign Manual and Signet should be issued empowering and directing him to do so, or whether such instructions from Her Majesty could be communicated through a Secretary of State?

6. Whether it was preferable that annexation should be effected by:—

(a.) Proclamation; or
(b.) Order in Council; or
(c.) By Letters Patent in this country, and the fact of the issue of such Proclamation, Order in Council, or Letters Patent should be notified by Lord Roberts in the Orange Free State?

7. Whether the several drafts submitted were fit and proper for the purpose intended in each case, and, if not, in what respects they should be amended?

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

(1) and (2). That we answer questions one and two in the affirmative.

(3.) The inhabitants of the Orange Free State will become British subjects upon annexation.

It has, however, been usual in recent times to allow those who do not desire to become subjects of the conqueror to leave the conquered territory within a reasonable time, and we think this course would properly be followed in the present case. No such persons should, however, be allowed to remove to the Transvaal while the war continues.

The transfer of nationality ought not to be imposed on inhabitants who are not within the State, unless they return to it afterwards.

(5) and (6). We think, on the whole, that the annexation should, when the country has been conquered, be made by Order in Council, which should be proclaimed here and in the Orange River State.

Lord Roberts may be directed by cable to make such Proclamation, the terms of the Order in Council being cabled to him.

(7.) The drafts, as altered and initialled by us, appear to us to be fit and proper for the purpose intended in each case.

Proclamation.

(Published by Her Majesty's Commissioner in South Africa, May 30, 1900.)

WHEREAS certain territories in South Africa, heretofore known as the Orange Free State, have been conquered by Her Majesty's forces, and it has seemed expedient to Her Majesty that the said territories should be annexed to, and should henceforth form part of, Her Majesty's dominions, and that I should provisionally, and until Her Majesty's pleasure is more fully known, be appointed Administrator of the said territories, with power to take all such measures and to make and enforce such laws as I may deem necessary for the peace, order, and good government of the said territories:

Now therefore I, Frederick Sleigh, Baron Roberts of Candahar, K.P., G.C.B., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., V.C., Field-Marshal Commanding-in-chief the British forces in South Africa, by Her Majesty's command, and in virtue of the power and authority conferred upon me in that behalf by Her Majesty's Royal Commission, dated the 21st day of May, 1900, and in accordance with Her Majesty's instructions thereby and otherwise signified to me, do proclaim and make known that from and after the publication hereof the territories known as the Orange Free State are annexed to, and form part of, Her Majesty's dominions, and that provisionally, and until Her Majesty's pleasure is fully declared, the said territories will be administered by me with such powers as aforesaid.

Her Majesty is pleased to direct that the new territories shall henceforth be known as the Orange River Colony.

GOD SAVE THE QUEEN!

Given under my hand and seal at the head-quarters of the army in South Africa, Camp south of the Vaal River, in the said territories, this 24th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1900.

Gentlemen,

Detention of cod-fish ex "Clan Sinclair" as being for enemy.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list relating to a claim made by Messrs. Taylor and Co. of Liverpool for 225*l*., on account of a consignment of cod-fish shipped by them in the "Clan Sinclair" to Lourenço Marques, and detained by the Customs officials at East London in the erroneous belief that it was destined for the enemy's territory.

I have also the honour to inclose a letter which has been received from the Colonial Office dealing with a somewhat similar case, viz., the claim of the Portuguese Consul at Durban for freight paid by him on certain goods consigned to Delagoa Bay, which were landed in Natal under the mistaken belief that they were destined for the enemy, and could not, therefore, be lawfully carried by a British ship.

The reply returned to the Colonial Office is also forwarded herewith.

I am also to inclose for reference a Report which was furnished on the 7th April last to the Secretary of State by your immediate predecessors in office, with reference to Messrs. Bridler and Co.'s shipments, and in which the late and the present Attorneys-General expressed the opinion that damages for landing of goods from British ships could not be entertained when there was ground for suspicion that the destination of the goods was such that they could not be lawfully carried by a British vessel.

I have the honour to request that you will take these papers into your consideration and favour his Lordship with your opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the application made by Messrs. Taylor and Co., and, generally, with any observations which you may desire to make on the case.

Report.

We are of opinion that Messrs. Taylor and Co. ought to be paid compensation for the loss suffered by the detention of the cod-fish shipped by them in the "Clan Sinclair."

We see no reasonable grounds in this case for having detained the goods. In our opinion the fact that the bills of lading were "to order" did not by itself, in this case, constitute any sufficient ground for detention.

We think, in the answer to Messrs. Taylor, whilst agreeing to pay compensation, Her Majesty's Government should not admit any legal liability, and should only express their willingness to pay compensation under the special circumstances of this case.

Sir,

Contracts with enemy persons on outbreak of war.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. H. Bertram Cox's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by you to transmit to us a despatch from the High Commissioner for South Africa, inclosing a Memorandum from Mr. Mackie Niven and Mr. Naph Cohen, in which they pointed out that the High Commissioner's notice of the 25th January, which was issued on the advice of the Law Officers, and which was quoted by them, did not protect persons owing rents and other stipulated payments under private contracts to persons in the Transvaal or Orange Free State, which rents, &c., they might fail to pay; and they suggested the issue of a further Proclamation for the purpose of giving such protection.

That you, in reply to that despatch, stated—on the advice of the Law Officers informally given—that you did not consider that any fresh Proclamation such as was suggested was necessary, but that it would be seen from the inclosed copy of a telegram from the High Commissioner of the 19th May, that in consequence of representations from owners of options, the periods of which had expired during the war, and of lessees, &c., who had been unable to make payments, Sir A. Milner (who had not received your despatch) suggested the issue of a Proclamation providing for delay in the performance of such private contracts.

That Mr. Cox was also to inclose prints noted in the accompanying list, being letters from various persons who had written to the Colonial Office raising questions of a similar kind to those dealt with in Messrs. Niven and Cohen's Memorandum, together with copies of the replies returned thereto.

That Mr. Cox was to request us to take the papers into our consideration and to report—

1. Whether, in our opinion, all contracts entered into before the commencement of the war between persons in Her Majesty's dominions and persons in the enemy's States, or, if not all contracts, then what contract or classes of contract were suspended during the existence of a state of war?

2. Whether any Proclamation should be issued to protect the rights of such persons, or whether they should be left to establish any, and, if so, what branches of these rights in the local Courts after the restoration of peace?

3. What answer should be returned to Messrs. Henderson's letter of the 23rd May?

We have taken the papers into our consideration,* and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That in our opinion it may be stated, as a general rule, that all contracts existing at the commencement of the war between persons in Her Majesty's dominions and enemies in the enemies' States are, according to their nature, suspended or extinguished by the breaking out of war.

Questions of very great difficulty may arise as to whether particular contracts are merely suspended as in a case of debt resulting from a contract otherwise executed or extinguished, on the ground that performance has been rendered illegal by the outbreak of war (see Esposito v. Bowden, 7 E. and B. 763). In our opinion no general rule can be safely laid down in advance beyond the principle indicated in the preceding sentence.

2. In our opinion no such Proclamation is expedient. So far as the parties may not be able to enforce their contracts in the local Courts after the restoration of peace, it may be necessary to legislate in the Orange River and Transvaal territories to prevent injustice from the fact that performance has been prevented by the war, but the terms of such legislation will require very careful consideration, and we think it very inexpedient to attempt by Proclamation to define beforehand the scope of any such proposed legislation.

3. In our opinion Messrs. Henderson should be informed that the Government have the whole matter under their consideration; that it is one which will have to be dealt with on the restoration of peace; that it is impossible at present to give any undertaking as to what conclusions may be come to in individual cases, and that the subject is not one which can be dealt with by Proclamation.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, July 17, 1900.

Sir,

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Bertram Cox' letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by you to transmit to us two despatches from the Governor of Natal, with their inclosures,* having reference to two cases before the Supreme Court of Natal, one arising out of the opening of letters by the Military Censor under authority of martial law, which was proclaimed by the Governor on the 23rd October in a Proclamation† (a copy of which accompanied Mr. Bertram Cox' letter), and the other having reference to the power of the Civil Courts of the Colony to review the proceedings of courts-martial. Interference of Civil Courts with Courts-martial.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was also to transmit two despatches from the Governor of the Cape with inclosures,‡ from which it would be seen that in the Supreme Court of the Cape Colony two of the Judges had expressed the view that, at all events during the existence of martial law, the regularity of the proceedings of courts-martial cannot be inquired into.

That the Judge of the Supreme Court of Natal, however, had expressed an opinion to the effect that, notwithstanding the existence of martial law, a subject of Her Majesty had the right at any time to appeal to the Civil Courts on the ground that martial law was being enforced "recklessly, needlessly, cruelly, or immoderately," and might enforce a demand to restrain such exercise by appeal to the Civil Tribunals; and further, that persons acting under martial law might be called upon by the Civil Courts to justify by proof of necessity any act done in the administration of martial law.

That it appeared to you that if this view of the law was correct, great difficulty might be experienced in the proper administration of martial law unless the extreme step were taken of forcibly suspending the sittings of the Civil Courts.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to request us to take these papers into our consideration, and to advise you—

1. Whether the opinion expressed by the Supreme Court of Natal was correct in law, or if not, in what respects it was erroneous.

2. If the opinion was correct, what steps could be taken to insure that the powers which the military authorities deemed necessary for the proper administration of martial law should not be interfered with by the Civil Courts.

3. Had the Supreme Court of Natal the right to review a decision of a Court constituted during a state of siege (as at Ladysmith) at a time when it was unable to exercise its jurisdiction.

4. Should an appeal be entered against the decision of the Supreme Court of Natal.

5. Generally.

In obedience to your commands, we have the honour to

Report—

1. That, in our opinion, the Judgment of the Supreme Court of Natal is substantially correct. We do not understand that the Supreme Court claims the right to entertain appeals from the sentences passed under martial law, but only to inquire, on an application in the nature of habeas corpus, whether circumstances exist justifying the use of force in the interests of the public safety, and whether the force used is in excess of what is reasonably necessary.

The proclamation of martial law cannot prevent the lawfully-constituted Tribunals of a country exercising their jurisdiction to inquire to this extent into the interference with the liberty of persons who are subject to their jurisdiction. The exercise of any such jurisdiction could only be prevented by force, as by suspension of such Tribunals. Any such application would be barred by an Act of Indemnity legalizing all that had been done in the enforcement of martial law.

2. The interference of the Civil Tribunals can only be prevented—

(1.) By passing such an Act confirming the action of the courts-martial.

(2.) By refusing to comply with the Orders or Judgments of the Civil Tribunals so far as they interfere with the sentences passed by courts-martial.

The latter course should be adopted only when it is imperatively necessary for the public safety, as in a district when war is still raging.

3. See the answer to question 1.

4. We do not think any appeal advisable.

5. We think that an Act of Indemnity and Confirmation should be passed as soon as possible by the Colonial Legislature.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, May 26, 1900.

Gentlemen,

As to introduction of Indian Christian Marriage Act into British East Africa Protectorate.

I AM directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit to you the accompanying extract (Paper A) from a despatch from Sir A. Hardinge, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar, in which he states that it would in his opinion be advisable, in view of the growing foreign population of the British East Africa Protectorate, that the Indian Christian Marriage Act (Act 15 of 1872), should be introduced into the Protectorate in pursuance of the powers conferred upon the Secretary of State by Article 3 of "The Africa Order in Council, 1892." Copies of the Indian Act, and of the Africa Order in Council, as well as of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," and the Orders in Council of 1892 and 1895, which now govern the question of marriage in the Proctectorate, are also transmitted (Papers B, C, D, E, and F).

A similar suggestion was made by Sir A. Hardinge in 1898, as will be seen from the accompanying extract from a despatch received from him (Paper G). After full consideration, and for the reasons set forth in the extract from a despatch sent to Sir A. Hardinge in reply (Paper H), it was decided not to take any steps in the direction indicated; and if the present proposal were agreed to, it would be a reversal of the decision then arrived at.

Lord Salisbury is advised, however, that there is no question as to the actual power, under the terms of the Order in Council, to apply the Indian Christian Marriage Act in the manner proposed; and should you concur in this view, the matter will resolve itself into one of suitability and expediency only.

In view, therefore, of the advantages which, in Sir A. Hardinge's opinion, would flow from the introduction of the Act into the Protectorate, I am to request you to favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether those advantages outweigh the objections pointed out on the former occasion, and (2), if so, whether you can suggest any means by which those objections might be either wholly or in part overcome.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, under "The Africa Order in Council, 1892," there is power to apply the provisions of the Indian Christian Marriage Act to the Protectorate. Such application would not require the repeal of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," nor do we think the introduction of the law of divorce a necessary consequence. It would, however, be very anomalous and inconvenient that there should exist side by side the Foreign Marriage Act and the proposed legislation, as the former presupposes a foreign country, and the latter a country under the dominion of the Crown. And it is difficult to see on what principle, if we provide by territorial legislation for marriage, we should not provide for divorce or judicial separation.

In truth the question is part of a larger one, viz., whether Her Majesty's Government is prepared to assume the sovereignty of this territory. If it is still to be regarded as a country in which the Foreign Marriage Act is in force, we think the balance of convenience is against the proposed legislation. So far as British subjects are concerned, there is no hardship at present. The Governments of the countries to which foreign residents belong may make provision for their marriages, and, on the whole, we think that legislation of the kind proposed should be deferred until Her Majesty's Government is prepared to assume in name the sovereignty which it enjoys in substance.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, October 22, 1900.

National status of citizens of late South African Republic.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit herewith, for your consideration, the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the present national status of persons who were citizens of the late South African Republic and Orange Free State; and the effect thereon of the recent Proclamations whereby the territories of these two Republics have been incorporated in Her Majesty's dominions.

This question has already, to a great extent, been dealt with in the Law Officers' Report to the Secretary of State for the Colonies of the 17th May last, a copy of which has been placed at the disposal of this Department, and is inclosed for convenience of reference.

I am, however, to invite your attention to the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin. It appears from this despatch that a certain M. Abraham Michalski, who became a naturalized citizen of the Orange Free State, and who has also divested himself of his Prussian nationality of origin, now claims the status of a British subject by virtue of the annexation of that Republic by Great Britain, and requests to be furnished with a passport to facilitate his return to the Orange River Colony.

Lord Salisbury, as at present advised, is disposed to think that, in this regard, no distinction can properly be drawn between persons who were natural-born or full citizens of these Republics, and persons who became naturalized therein; and that, subject to the usual practice observed with regard to persons of double nationality when in their country of origin, the same principles should be followed in the case of the latter, as in that of the former. In connection with the consideration of this point, a copy is inclosed of the Laws of the two late Republics.

If this view should be, in your opinion, well founded, it would seem to follow, from the terms of the third paragraph of the Law Officers' Report of the 17th May, that M. Michalski cannot be regarded as a British subject, and, as such, entitled to a British passport, until he shall have actually returned to the Orange River Colony, although the effect of that decision would, for the time being, be to leave him without any national status, since the State to which he previously owed allegiance has now ceased to exist.

As it is not improbable that questions involving similar considerations may arise elsewhere, I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion—

1. Whether any distinction of kind or degree is to be drawn between the case of a natural-born or full citizen, and that of a naturalized citizen of the Orange Free State, or of the Transvaal, as to the change in his national status effected by the annexation of those two Republics—and if so, to what extent.

2. As to the reply which should be returned by Her Majesty's Diplomatic or Consular Representatives abroad to inquiries of a nature similar to that addressed by M. Michalski to Her Majesty's Consul-General at Berlin.

His Lordship will be glad at the same time to be favoured with any observations of a general nature which you may desire to offer on the papers.

I have, &c.

In our opinion no distinction should be drawn between the case of a natural-born and that of a naturalized citizen. The third paragraph of our Report of the 17th May, 1900, does not refer to the case of a naturalized citizen of the late Republics voluntarily claiming the status of a British subject in a British possession by reason of the annexation.

2. Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular Representatives abroad should be informed that naturalized citizens of the late Republics voluntarily claiming the status of British subjects in the late Republics are entitled to be treated as such.

Marriages in the Transvaal during the present war.

Sir,

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Bertram Cox's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by you to transmit, for our consideration, the following papers having relation to certain marriages celebrated in the Transvaal during the present war:—

(i.) A despatch from the High Commissioner, South Africa, No. 480, dated the 4th July, 1900, together with Inclosures Nos. 1 and 2.

(ii.) Copy of letter from the Colonial Office to the Foreign Office of the 14th August, 1900.

(iii.) The reply of the Foreign Office, dated the 23rd August, 1900.

(iv.) Copy of Secretary of State's despatch to High Commissioner, South Africa, dated 30th August, 1900.

(v.) A despatch from the High Commissioner, South Africa, No. 735, dated the 3rd October, 1900, together with original Inclosures Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4.

(vi.) Copy of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892" (55 and 56 Vict., cap. 23).

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to ask us to be good enough to take these matters into our consideration, and to advise you:—

1. Whether a Military Governor in the Transvaal had power to appoint Marriage Officers to celebrate marriages.

2. Whether the "Marriage Commissioners" appointed by notice in the "Government Gazettes" at Pretoria and Johannesburg respectively, "for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Marriage Ordinance of the South African Republic (No. 3 of 1871)," were, under the circumstances appearing in these papers, competent to (a) celebrate marriages under that Ordinance without any religious ceremony, as if they were "Landdrosts;" (b) to make the preliminary inquiries imposed by that Ordinance on the Commissioners (Huwelyke Commissaris) with the view of a subsequent celebration by a minister (leeraar) appointed by the Government of the South African Republic.

3. Whether marriages which might have been celebrated by such "Marriage Commissioners" might, if not otherwise valid, be covered by the provisions of section 22 of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892."

4. Whether it was desirable to validate (a) by Order in Council, or (b) by legislative enactment in the Transvaal, all marriages celebrated by "Marriage Commissioners" during the military occupation in South Africa.

In obedience to your commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

1 and 2. That we have not before us any information as to the special powers (if any) contained in the Orders appointing Military Governors in Pretoria and Johannesburg. We assume, however, that the Military Governors would have power either in express terms or virtute officii to make all such appointments as were necessary for effectively carrying on the functions of Government during the period of the military occupation.

We think, therefore, that the Military Governors had power to appoint the Marriage Commissioners to carry out the duties imposed on the Landdrost, under the Marriage Ordinance of the South African Republic, and that marriages solemnized or licensed, as the case may be, by them in conformity with the Marriage Ordinance are valid.

We do not feel able to agree with the view of Mr. Wessels, that the appointment of the Marriage Commissioner did not carry with it the right to celebrate marriages as the Landdrost might have done. We think it devolved upon him all the duties of the Landdrost under the Marriage Ordinance of the South African Republic.

3. We think that section 22 of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," might be relied on in support of the marriages referred to, but this might involve troublesome questions of fact.

4. It is most important that all marriages celebrated by the "Marriage Commissioners" during the military occupation should be declared valid by legislative enactment in the Transvaal, to prevent any possibility of questions being raised. The points raised are certainly very arguable.

Annexation of Boer Republics: As to notifying to Powers.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the accompanying copies of Proclamations issued by the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-chief in South Africa, annexing the Orange Free State and the South African Republic respectively to Her Majesty's dominions, and to inform you that the time has now arrived when it has become desirable to decide whether a formal notification should be made by Her Majesty's Government to foreign Powers of the annexations thus locally proclaimed.

There are may instances, such as the cession of Alsace-Lorraine by France to Germany, and, even more recently, that of Porto Rico and the Philippines by Spain to the United States, in which a portion of one State has at the conclusion of warlike operations been ceded by that State to another by Treaty; but whether these cessions have been communicated or not to the Powers appears for the present purpose to be a matter of indifference, as they would hardly seem to furnish precedents for dealing with such a case as that now under consideration, in which one State has been absorbed by another, and has ceased to have any further existence of its own.

Such cases as this have within recent years been comparatively rare, and would seem to be limited to the following instances:—

1. The absorption of the various smaller Italian States by Sardinia in 1859–61; but these "annexations" were in the nature of "unions," rather than of conquests, as they were in every case accompanied by popular risings and were ratified by popular votes.
2. The absorption of Hanover by Prussia in 1866.
3. The annexation of Fiji by this country in 1874.
4. The annexation of Burmah by this country in 1886.
5. The annexation of Madagascar by France in 1896.

Memoranda on each of these cases are inclosed. You will see that in three instances, viz., those of the absorption of Hanover by Prussia and of the annexations of Fiji and Burmah by this country, no formal notification of the fact was ever made to foreign Powers. In the case of the absorption of the various Italian States by Sardinia, such communications as were made by the Sardinian Government relative to the annexations were in fact in the nature of incidents in a general correspondence rather than of special independent announcements that a foreign State had been annexed; while in only one of the instances mentioned above, viz., that of the annexation of Madagascar by France, was any formal announcement of the event made to foreign Powers.

The announcement to other Powers of an annexation does not appear therefore, generally speaking, to be essential to the existence of annexation as a fact.

It seems to be merely a convenient mode of fixing other Powers with knowledge of a fact through a channel of communication which they cannot disregard without discourtesy.

But annexation, as a fact, would appear to depend no more on its formal announcement through a particular channel to the Powers than it can be effected as a fact by announcement alone.

The objection to making an announcement to foreign Powers is that some Power might dispute the validity of the annexation, on the ground that the conquest was not complete and amounted only to a military, and perhaps partial, occupation, which had, in any case, not yet lasted long enough to give such a guarantee of permanence as to warrant annexation.

On the other hand, the absence of an announcement may be made a ground for assuming the Republics to be still in existence and acting on that assumption.

It remains to be considered whether there are any special circumstances in connection with the case of absorption now under consideration, which militate especially either in favour of that absorption being formally notified to the Powers or against such a course.

In the first place, it may be remarked that no notification to other Powers was ever made by Her Majesty's Government of—

The formation of the Orange Free State in 1854;

Of the formation of the South African Republic (or Transvaal) in 1852; or

Of the annexation of the Transvaal in 1877.

The Convention of 1881 with the Transvaal granting self-government under British suzerainty was, however, communicated to the Powers. The Circular to Her Majesty's Representatives abroad transmitting a copy of the Convention with instructions as to the communication to be made to the Governments to which they were accredited is inclosed.

The Convention of 1884 with the Transvaal amending that of 1881 is also inclosed.

Further, it is to be observed that Her Majesty's Government notified to foreign Powers the existence of a state of war between Great Britain and the South African Republics, and it might therefore be thought that, sooner or later, the cessation of that state of war, which must either result from a Treaty of Peace or from the extinction of one of the belligerents, should equally be notified. The original notification was, however, made six weeks after the outbreak of hostilities, and as an act of courtesy only in consequence of the French Government appearing disposed, in the absence of any such notification, not to recognize the maritime belligerent rights of this country. The converse position is hardly possible.

A third point for special consideration is the effect which the issue, or non-issue, of such a notification as that under discussion would have on the appointment of foreign Consuls within the conquered territories.

No mention of this particular question is to be found in the Memoranda sent herewith, except in one solitary instance connected with Fiji, when the German Ambassador is reported to have inquired whether Her Majesty's Government intended to notify the fact of the annexation of the islands, "as his Government wished to apply for exequaturs for their Consuls." But it is hardly likely that any practical difficulty would arise on this head, since, in the event of any foreign Powers desiring to have Consuls in the territories of the ex-Republics, they would naturally have to apply for the necessary exequaturs to Her Majesty's Government, who will be in de facto possession of the country.

The last point that calls for special examination is that of the relations of the two ex-Republics with the International Bureau of the Postal, or other International, Union.

The correspondence that has passed on this subject with the Post Office is inclosed, for your information, and you will see from the letter of the 14th instant from that Department that the Bureau have been informed of the proper style to be used for the future in describing the territories formerly known as the Orange Free State and the South African Republic, but that they demur to any alteration of the names at present standing in the official document on which the question has arisen until the names shall have been modified in the principal Convention of Washington.

In these circumstances, the Postmaster-General inquires whether the Secretary of State is prepared to notify diplomatically the adhesion of the two new Colonies to the principal Convention.

It has been suggested to him, in reply, that he should inform the Bureau at Berne that as the proposed modification in the names of the territories concerned cannot be made in their publications until the old designations have been similarly changed in the Convention, it will be more convenient, in order not to delay the Bureau's publications, to leave the names as they are for the present; and it has been added, for the Postmaster-General's own information, that the question whether any diplomatic notifications shall be made regarding the altered national status of the territories in question is under consideration.

In the event of your reporting that it is desirable from the point of view of international law that the fact of the annexation of the Orange Free State and the South African Republic should be notified to the Powers, the difficulty which has been raised by the Bureau at Berne will, ipso facto, disappear; but should you, on the other hand, report that no such notification is necessary, I am to request you to furnish Lord Lansdowne with your views as to how the difficulty in question may best be surmounted, whether by refraining for the present from seeking for the admission of the new territories into the Postal Union or otherwise.

Lord Lansdowne wishes you, in considering the question of an announcement, to give special attention to the extent to which the question is affected, as regards the Transvaal, by the previous existence of British suzerainty over that territory.

I have the honour to request you to take the above observations into your consideration, and to favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether (1) it is necessary that a formal notification should be made by Her Majesty's Government to foreign Powers of the annexations of the Orange Free State and of the South African Colony; and (2) in the event of your considering that such notification is not necessary, whether, having regard to precedents and to international usage, it would be desirable that such a notification should be made, together with any general remarks you may have to offer on the papers now submitted to you.

I have, &c.

Report.

1. In our opinion, it is not necessary that a formal notification should be made to foreign Powers of the annexation of the Orange Free State and of the South African Republic.

No rule of international law has been evolved rendering such notification essential to the validity of annexation.

2. We think that at the present time it is not desirable that any such notification should be made. The war has not in fact terminated, and any such notification under the existing conditions might have the effect of eliciting from some of the European Powers protests based on the allegation that the conquest is not yet complete. Moreover, such a notification would be inconsistent with any claim by Her Majesty's Government to enforce as against neutrals the rights of a belligerent.

When the war has been brought to an end, it may be convenient to notify this fact to the Powers to whom the existence of a state of war was notified, and this notification may be accompanied by a statement of the fact that these territories have been incorporated into Her Majesty's dominions. But the time has not yet arrived when such a step can with propriety be taken.

Sir,

Debts, &c., of late Boer Republics. Responsibility of Her Majesty's Government.

WE were honoured with your commands, signified in Mr. Bertram Cox's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by you to request our consideration of certain questions which had arisen in consequence of the annexation to Her Majesty's dominions of the South African Republic and Orange Free State.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to transmit to us a copy of an opinion given by Mr. Wessels, the legal adviser to Lord Roberts, on the position of Her Majesty's Government with respect to obligations incurred by the late South African Republic.

That it would be observed that Mr. Wessels, after a careful examination of the authorities on the subject, had come to the conclusion that Her Majesty's Government was justified in holding that all concessions granted by the annexed States had lapsed, and that the concessionnaires had no legal claim which they could enforce against Her Majesty's Government; that Her Majesty's Government were free to determine what obligations they would take upon themselves; that they were not compelled as of right to acknowledge the obligations of the annexed States, though as a matter of policy they might promise to fulfil such obligations as they might think fit. That he was further of opinion that a complete refusal to be bound by the obligations of the annexed States was the stronger and more correct position to assume. That in this connection Mr. Bertram Cox was to draw our attention to a Notice, No. 9, 1900, issued by the High Commissioner on the 8th September, 1900, a copy of which was inclosed, and to the case of Cook v. Sprigg (reported in L.R. 1899, A.C., at p. 572) referred to by Mr. Wessels.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to inclose a letter from the Foreign Office, dated the 2nd October, 1900, covering a copy of a despatch received from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Frankfort, on the subject of the treatment by Germany of the existing claims against the French Government upon the annexation of Alsace-Lorraine. That Mr. Bertram Cox was also to inclose a copy of a letter from Dr. Schneider, legal adviser to Her Majesty's Embassy in Berlin, of the 17th September, and a Report contained therein upon the same subject. That a translation of a communication received from the Italian Foreign Office in regard to the liabilities which accrued to the Italian Government owing to the incorporation of other States, and of the manner in which they were treated, was also transmitted with Mr. Bertram Cox's letter, together with a Memorandum prepared in the Foreign Office on the 15th September, on the general question of the liability of States in regard to territories acquired by conquest. That a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington, with inclosures, regarding the treatment by the United States of claims against the Spanish Government in the late Spanish Colonies was also inclosed. That Mr Bertram Cox was also to draw our attention to Book VIII "De la Conquête" of Calvo's "Droit International."

Memo., A. H. Oakes.

Lord Pauncefote, Oct. 1, 1900.

That it appeared to you that the precedents referred to in the inclosed Memoranda could hardly be regarded as completely authoritative, inasmuch as in the case of Alsace-Lorraine the obligations which the German Government assumed were dependent upon the Treaty of Peace concluded with France, a portion of whose territory was being incorporated in the German Empire, whereas in the present case no Treaty had been made, and the entire State had, in the case of the South African Republic and of the Orange Free State, been incorporated in Her Majesty's dominions.

That the precedent would, however, be of value as an indication of the attitude which in modern times a conquering State had adopted towards the obligations of a conquered State, the territory of which was being taken over by the conqueror.

That the only modern instance of the complete absorption of the territory of a defeated belligerent, as to which you had been able to obtain detailed information, was that of the annexation of Upper Burmah in 1886. That Mr. Bertram Cox was to transmit for our consideration certain papers furnished to the Colonial Office by the India Office on the 13th September, which showed the course adopted by the Indian Government in respect of claims and obligations arising out of such annexation. That it would be observed that the Indian Government declined to admit any claims unless based on service actually performed for the annexed State, or on account of goods supplied or money advanced for State purposes, and left it to claimants to show, if they could, that any wider interpretation had been placed on the general doctrine that a Government taking territory by conquest inherited the liability of its predecessors.

That the Indian Government excluded from consideration claims (a) for indemnity for loss of State employment, or for failure on the part of the Government to accept delivery of goods ordered, or to complete contracts; (b) for compensation for injuries sustained by military operations or on account of war; and (c) for payment on account either for work done for the late King or Queen of Upper Burmah or for goods supplied to, or ordered by, them. That further, while sanctioning payment of wages claimed by foreigners in certain cases, the Indian Government declined to satisfy claims by Burmese subjects for services rendered or goods supplied. That you had some doubt whether this precedent could be held to be of binding authority in the present case. That Upper Burmah was an uncivilized country, and it was possible that in dealing with such a State rules more favourable to the succeeding Government could be applied than in a case where two civilized States have been incorporated with Her Majesty's dominions.

That the most important question which had up to the present time arisen in respect to the annexation of the South African Republic and Orange Free State, was the question whether Her Majesty's Government was bound to take over liabilities in respect of the public debts of the annexed States. That Mr. Bertram Cox was to inclose a Memorandum which had been prepared from such information as the Colonial Office possessed, which would show the nature of the liabilities of the Orange Free State in respect of its public debt, and of the South African Republic in respect to the 5 per Cent. Loan. That Mr. Bertram Cox was further to draw our attention to the Judgment of Malins, V.C., in the case of Doss v. Secretary of State for India in Council (reported in L.R., 19 Equity, at p. 530), in which it was stated that every State which took possession of the territories of another, took the annexed territories liable to the debts and loans which existed on its revenues. That assuming, therefore, that Her Majesty's Government were bound to take over, and did take over, the public debts of the extinct Republics, the further question arose as to whether Her Majesty's Government were in this case bound to carry out to the letter all the obligations of the late Republics, or whether they might modify those obligations, and decline to be bound by every term of the contracts entered into by the late Republics. That in view, for instance, of the increased security given for the payment of these loans by the substitution of the British Government, as a debtor for the extinct Government in each case, it would, it was submitted, not be inequitable to reduce the rate of interest, and that you desire to know whether it would be legally competent for Her Majesty's Government, while acknowledging their liability to take over these loans, to give notice that they would be converted at an early date, and subsequently to carry out such conversion on terms based on its own credit.

Spicer and Sons, May 25.
To Spicer and Sons, June 2.
High Commissioner, August 29.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was further to inclose copies of correspondence between Messrs. Spicer and Sons and the Colonial Office, and between the High Commissioner for South Africa and the Colonial Office, with reference to a contract entered into by Messrs. Spicer and Sons with the Government of the South African Republic for the supply of postage stamp paper to that Government, as an instance of particular claims which would no doubt be presented against Her Majesty's Government at no distant date.

That, in conclusion, Mr Bertram Cox was to observe that even on the assumption that Her Majesty's Government, as the successors of the South African Republic, inherited generally the obligations as well as the rights of the late Republic, the further question arose whether their liability could be held to extend to any obligation arising between the outbreak of war and annexation. That it was possible to argue that the outbreak of war created a situation during the continuance of which no obligations could, in the nature of things, arise which would legally pass from the enemy Government to Her Majesty's Government at the conclusion of hostilities. That in this connection Mr. Bertram Cox was to draw our attention to the High Commissioner's Notices of the 26th January and 19th March, issued with the approval of the Law Officers, which expressly repudiated responsibility for certain classes of obligation, and that he was to add that it would seem in any case impossible to hold Her Majesty's Government responsible for certain liabilities, e.g., the liability to pay for warlike stores ordered and supplied during the war for the purpose of destroying Her Majesty's forces. That it was not, however, equally clear that Her Majesty's Government could be held to be free from liability to pay the interest on the ordinary public debt, or on the bonds of a Company with the Government guarantee accruing during the war and left unpaid by the late Republic. That in this connection Mr. Bertram Cox was to observe that, as would be seen from the inclosed telegram from the High Commissioner, Lord Roberts was collecting certain taxes which were in arrear, and it would, no doubt, be argued on behalf of the bondholders, that by claiming payment of arrears of taxes, which fell due during the war, the new Government of the Transvaal must be held liable to accept fully and completely the obligations of the late Government.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to request us to take the papers into our consideration, and to advise you—

1. Were Her Majesty's Government legally bound to take over all the obligations incurred by the Governments of the South African Republic and Orange Free State—

(a.) Before the commencement of the war;

(b.) During the war by the Governments of the South African Republic and Orange Free State?

2. If not, what was the nature of the obligations which Her Majesty's Government were bound to take over, and what obligations was it entitled to repudiate, and on what grounds?

3. Were Her Majesty's Government bound to take over the obligations of the South African Republic and the Orange Free State in respect of the public debts of those States, and, if so—

(a.) Must Her Majesty's Government be bound by all the existing conditions of such debts, or might they take over those debts on such terms as they thought proper.

(b.) Were Her Majesty's Government bound to pay any instalments of principal or interest on such debts which fell due during the war, and previous to the dates of annexation, but which had not been paid by the Governments of such States?

4. What answer should be returned to Messrs. Spicer and Sons.

5. Generally.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to your commands have the honour to

Report—

1 and 2. That we are of opinion that a Government annexing territory after conquest so annexes it subject, speaking generally, to such legal obligations as have been incurred by the previously existing Government before the outbreak of war, and not from their nature conditional on the continued existence of the territory as an independent State. We do not think that for this purpose any distinction can be drawn between the case of annexation after conquest but without Treaty, and that of a Treaty extorted by conquest, and providing for cession. We do not agree with the view expressed by Mr. Wessels that it would be open to Her Majesty's Government, acting upon any recognized principles of international law, to repudiate responsibility for all the obligations incurred by the Governments of the South African Republic and the Orange Free State, so far as they can be fulfilled out of revenues to be derived from the property annexed.

[legal adviser to Commander in Chief in South Africa]

We must, however, point out that the duty to observe such contracts cannot be enforced by a Municipal Court: it rests merely on the recognition of international law of what is equitable upon the acqusition of the property of the conquered State.

We think that obligations incurred during the war, or in contemplation of the war, stand upon a different footing, and we do not know of any principle of international law which would oblige Her Majesty's Government to recognize such obligations.

As to the class of "obligations" known as concessions we have already advised, and pointed out certain general considerations and limitations.

3. Her Majesty's Government, as successor to the Governments of the South African Republic and the Orange Free State, are bound to take over the public debts of these States as a charge thereon, but not, of course, as debts payable otherwise than from revenue derived from the conquered States respectively.

(a.) The conditions attaching to such debts will still continue, but it will be open to Her Majesty's Government to alter such conditions in any respect that may be more equitable, having regard to the altered condition of affairs.

(b.) Her Majesty's Government are bound to pay any instalments of principal and interest which may be due in so far as they have revenue from the conquered territory available for that purpose.

4. The contract of Messrs. Spicer and Son with the Transvaal Government has not been executed by delivery. It seems to belong to the class of contracts which, in their very nature, are conditional upon the continued existence of the Transvaal Government as the South African Republic, and being executory only not capable in strictness of being regarded as binding on the conqueror. But if Her Majesty's Government can utilize the paper they might buy it from Messrs. Spicer as a fair concession to them. This course would avoid the creation of what might prove an awkward precedent if the right to damages for non-acceptance were recognized.

5. Nothing further occurs to us to add.

We have, &c.

Gentlemen,

China and Corea (Supreme Court) O. in C.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to a proposed Order in Council amending the present style and title of Her Majesty's Supreme Court for China and Japan.

It was suggested that since Her Majesty's extra-territorial jurisdiction in Japan has come to an end, the word "Japan" should be omitted from the title of the Supreme Court, and that the word "Corea" should be substituted, having regard to the fact that, under Article 4 (3) of "The China, Japan, and Corea Order in Council, 1884," the jurisdiction at that time exercisable by the Supreme Court in relation to Japan was made, and now is, exercisable in relation to Corea.

Lord Salisbury is of opinion that it is desirable that a short Order in Council should be passed, providing that the expression "Japan" is to be for the future "read out" of the existing Orders for China, Japan, and Corea, wherever it is mentioned. The draft of an Order in Council for this purpose has accordingly been prepared by Mr. Gray, and I am to request that you will take it into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether its terms are right and proper for submission to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

You will observe that a suggestion was made by the Judge of the Supreme Court that the style and device of the Court seal should be altered by order of the Secretary of State. Mr. Gray has pointed out, however, that, under Article 7 of the Order in Council of 1865, the Secretary of State is not authorized to direct what the style of the Court is to be, the device only being left to his discretionary direction. It is therefore proposed to defer any alteration in the Court seal until the draft Order is passed.

CHINA AND COREA.

"The China and Corea (Supreme Court) Order in Council, 1899."

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has power and jurisdiction in China and Corea;

And whereas by the "China and Japan Order in Council, 1865," a Court was established styled Her Britannic Majesty's Supreme Court for China and Japan;

And whereas by the "China, Japan, and Corea Orders in Council, 1884 and 1886," it was provided that all powers and jurisdiction of the said Supreme Court should be exercisable in relation to Corea;

And whereas by virtue of an Order in Council made on the 7th day of October, 1899, the Orders in Council regulating Her Majesty's Consular jurisdiction in the Empire of Japan have, save as provided in the said Order, ceased to be in force and operation within that Empire;

And whereas in view of the recited extension of jurisdiction as respects Corea, and lesser of jurisdiction as respects Japan, it is expedient that the style of the said Supreme Court should be altered, and also that the provisions of the "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1865," and of the Orders amending or extending that Order, should be repealed so far as they relate to Japan:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered as follows:—

1. The Court established by Article 7 of the "China and Japan Order in Council, 1865," shall be styled "Her Britannic Majesty's Supreme Court for China and Corea," and all references in that Order, or in the Orders amending or extending that Order to the Supreme Court for China and Japan, or to the Supreme Court, shall, in so far as the said Orders relate or are applied to China or Corea, be read as references to the Supreme Court for China and Corea.

2. All provisions relating to the exercise of Her Majesty's power and jurisdiction in Japan, contained in "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1865," or any Order amending or extending that Order, are hereby repealed, subject to the provisions of the said recited Order in Council of the 7th October, 1899: provided that where any of those provisions are by the same or any subsequent Order extended or applied to China or Corea, this Article shall not affect such extension and application.

3. This Order may be cited as "The China and Corea (Supreme Court) Order in Council, 1899."

Gentlemen,

Sinking of "Kow-shing:" as to referring to arbitration of American Ambassador.

WITH reference to your Reports of the 17th June, 1896, and the 7th November, 1898, I have the honour to inform you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, that an Agreement has been arrived at between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of China that the question of the liability of the latter, as charterers of the British steamer "Kow-shing," to make compensation for the loss occasioned to her owners in consequence of the sinking of that vessel by the Japanese cruiser "Naniwa" on the 25th July, 1894, shall be referred to the arbitration of the American Ambassador at this Court.

I am to transmit to you a note from the Chinese Minister,* forwarding a draft Protocol for carrying out this Agreement, as well as a copy of the reply which Lord Salisbury has returned to Lofêngluh's communication.†

Lord Salisbury considered it advisable to point out at once to the Chinese Minister that, for the reasons given, the first question in Article I, viz., whether the destruction of the "Kow-shing" was justifiable and in accordance with the law of nations, is not one which Her Majesty's Government could consent to submit to the Arbitrator.

It appears further to his Lordship that the words "wilfully destroyed" in the preamble, which would certainly give offence to Japan, should be struck out. They might perhaps be replaced by the words "fired on and sunk."

Another point which occurs to Lord Salisbury is whether the period of one month which it is proposed by Article II to allow for the preparation of the British Case is sufficient for the purpose.

His Lordship is, subject to any observations which you may be good enough to offer for his consideration on this point, disposed to think that the attitude to be taken up by Her Majesty's Government in the matter should be similar to that which they adopted in the Delagoa Bay Arbitration, in the "Costa Rica Packet" case, and in other cases of claims for compensation made by private parties, viz., that their duty is confined to selecting and arranging a proper Arbitral Tribunal on behalf of the British subjects aggrieved, and to presenting on their behalf their case to the Arbitrator; and that the British claimants should be allowed to state their case in their own way, subject, of course, to their pleadings being expressed in suitable language, and confined to matters within the terms of the Protocol of submission and relevant to the question submitted.

I am to request that you will take the draft Protocol into your consideration, and that you will favour his Lordship, at your earliest convenience, with your opinion on the points above alluded to, and also with your suggestions as to any further alterations in, or additions to, the terms of the submission to arbitration which you may consider necessary or advisable.

I have, &c.

Report.

As altered and initialled by us we approve the draft Protocol. We have inserted a provision giving the Arbitrator power over costs.

We are clearly of opinion that the better course would be to permit the owners of the "Kow-shing" to prepare their own pleadings, and instruct their own Counsel. We think, however, their pleadings should be submitted to Her Majesty's Government for approval before delivery. The draft of the Protocol should be submitted to the claimants before it is returned to the Chinese Minister.

Draft Protocol.

WHEREAS the steam-ship "Kow-shing," the property of the Indo-China Steam Navigation Company, was, while under charter to the Chinese Government, ~~wilfully destroyed,~~ and carrying Chinese officers and troops, on the 25th July, 1894, fired on and sunk by the cruiser "Naniwa," a ship of war belonging to the Japanese Government; and whereas it is alleged by the British Government that the conduct of the Chinese officers and troops on board the "Kow-shing" led to the destruction thereof, and that the Chinese Government are responsible for the same; and whereas the British Government and the Chinese Government have been unable to agree as to the liability for the damage caused by the loss of the said vessel, the two Governments do hereby agree to submit the matter to the arbitration of his Excellency the Honourable Joseph H. Choate, the Ambassador of the United States of America to the Court of St. James', and the said Governments do further agree that the questions to be submitted to the Arbitrator, and the mode of procedure in submitting their respective cases for his award, shall be as follows:—

Article 1. The subjects to be submitted to the Arbitrator shall be:

~~1. Whether the destruction of the "Kow-shing," a British ship, by the "Naniwa" was justifiable and in accordance with the law of nations.~~

~~2. As between the owners and the charterers of the vessel, which of them, if either, ought to bear the loss.~~

Whether the Chinese Government are responsible for the loss of the "Kow-shing," and are liable to pay compensation to such owners, and to the persons on board who were injured in person or property, and to the representatives of such persons as perished.

Should it become necessary to assess the amount of the loss caused to the owners by reason of the destruction of the said vessel, the Arbitrator shall either himself assess the amount of such loss, or cause the same to be ascertained for his information in such manner as to him shall seem proper.

Art. 2. Within ~~a~~ two months from the signing of the present Protocol the British Government shall ~~present to the~~ on behalf of the owners of the "Kow-shing" and other claimants, present to the Arbitrator a statement of claim setting forth the facts on which the said claim is based, together with documents pertaining thereto, and shall at the same time present to the Chinese Minister in London a copy of such statement of claim and documents.

Art. 3. Within ~~a~~ two months from the reception of the statement of claim and documents enumerated in the preceding Article, the Chinese Minister in London shall, on behalf of the Chinese Government, present to the Arbitrator a statement of defence to the claim, accompanied by documents in reply, and shall at the same time deliver to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs a copy of the said statement and documents for communication to the owners and other claimants.

To this Defence a reply will be permitted, and to that ~~again~~ reply a Rejoinder will be allowed, provided that in each case not more than ~~fourteen days~~ one month shall have elapsed since the communication to the Arbitrator and the opposing party of the statement or pleading to which it is a reply; but after the exchange of the reply and rejoinder, no written communication shall be made on either side to the Arbitrator, unless the Arbitrator shall have asked by letter for further particulars. In that event, the other party will be entitled to a copy of the answer, and such time to reply to it as the Arbitrator, in the exercise of his discretion, may be pleased to allow.

Art. 4. The Arbitrator shall hear Counsel on both sides under such conditions and at such times as he may think proper to appoint, and he shall have the power in his discretion to extend the times specified in Articles 2, 3, and ~~5~~ 6 hereof, and to make such other order, or orders, on either party as, in his opinion, may conduce to the full and fair decision of this claim.

Art. 5. All questions of procedure, including the conduct of the oral arguments and the production of documents, shall be determined by the Arbitrator, and the costs shall be borne as the Arbitrator shall direct.

Art. ~~5.~~ 6. The Arbitrator shall, within thirty days after the delivery of the Rejoinder, proceed to examine and decide the questions hereby submitted to him, and shall give his Award as soon as possible after the conclusion of the proceedings, and shall communicate it to the Chinese Minister in London and to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs simultaneously.

Art. ~~6.~~ 7. The two Governments undertake to accept the Award, without reserve, and to give effect to it without delay.

Art. ~~7.~~ 8. If, from any unforeseen cause, the Arbitrator should permanently have to desist from his functions as Arbitrator, the two Governments agree to choose another as soon as possible to decide the matter in conformity with the procedure laid down in the present Protocol.

Prohibition of export of arms to China: draft Proclamation.

I HAVE the honour to inform you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, that in view of the necessity which has arisen, in consequence of the present position of affairs in China, to prohibit the export of materials of war to that country, Her Majesty's Government have introduced into Parliament a Bill (of which a copy is inclosed) to amend the law relating to the exportation of arms, ammunition, and military and naval stores.* It is expected that the measure will receive the Queen's assent by next Monday, the 6th instant.

Under its provisions Her Majesty will be enabled to prohibit, by Proclamation, the export of war materials and stores to any country or place therein named, whenever Her Majesty shall judge such prohibition to be expedient in order to prevent such materials being used against Her Majesty's subjects or forces, or against any forces engaged, or which may be engaged in military or naval operations, in co-operation with Her Majesty's forces.

The draft of a Proclamation prohibiting such exportation to China is transmitted herewith.†

I have the honour to request that you will take this draft into your consideration, and favour his Lordship with your opinion on its terms by Saturday, the 4th instant, at the latest, in order to admit of its communication to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, for submission to the Council Office before the 8th instant.

Report.

We approve the draft Proclamation as altered in red ink, and initialled by us herewith.

We have confined the prohibition to arms and ammunition, as we understood it is not proposed to make the prohibition extend to military and naval stores, which would include coal, or to materials.

We have struck out the words "except with the sanction of Her Majesty's Government," the Statute does not authorize such a dispensing power, and its exercise would be attended with a good deal of difficulty. Of course the prohibition does not bind the Crown, and arms and ammunition may therefore be sent out as before for Her Majesty's forces.

Gentlemen,

Arbitration relating to the "Kowshing." Proposal to include Japan in.

WITH reference to your Report of the 10th April last, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the proposed arbitration on the case of the "Kowshing."

In accordance with the suggestion made in your Report, the draft Protocol, as amended by you, was submitted to the claimants, who replied that they had no remarks to make on it (Papers G and H).

Further correspondence (Papers D, E, and I), has taken place with the Chinese Minister in regard to the objections of Her Majesty's Government to the first question in Article I of the draft Protocol submitted in his note of the 21st March, viz.. whether the destruction of the "Kowshing" was justifiable and in accordance with the law of nations.

On the 15th June Sir Chihchen Lofêngluh addressed a note to Lord Salisbury (Paper I) suggesting that, in order to meet the objections of Her Majesty's Government, the Japanese Government should be made a party to the arbitration.

A draft of the reply which Lord Salisbury proposes to return to Sir Chihchen Lofêngluh's note is also inclosed (Paper J), and I am to request that you will be so good as to inform his Lordship whether you concur in its terms.

Lord Salisbury would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to make on this case.

Draft of Letter from the Marquess of Salisbury to Sir Chihchen Lofêngluh.

Foreign Office, August , 1900.

Sir,

I HAD the honour to receive your note of the 15th June relative to the case of the "Kowshing," and I have given it careful consideration.

You suggest that, in order to meet the objections of Her Majesty's Government to the submission to the Arbitrator of the question whether the destruction of the "Kowshing" by the Japanese man-of-war "Naniwa" was justifiable and in accordance with the law of nations, the Japanese Government should be made a party to the arbitration.

Her Majesty's Government are not prepared to maintain that the action of the "Naniwa" was unjustifiable according to international law, and they could not, therefore, properly invite the Japanese Government to become a party to the arbitration.

~~They would have no objection to that Government being joined as a party if, either at the request of the Chinese Government, or otherwise, they expressed themselves desirous of being, or willing to be, so joined. In the circumstances, however, it appears to Her Majesty's Government certain that the Japanese Government, if invited to become a party to the arbitration, would decline.~~

~~Her Majesty's Government adhere to their opinion that, if Japan is not represented before~~

~~and does not recognize, the Tribunal, it would be irregular to submit to it questions involving the liability of that country.~~

~~It would, moreover, be futile to do so, since the judgment of the Tribunal would not be binding on the Japanese Government.~~

The question for the determination of the Arbitrator is as to the liability of the Chinese Government to pay compensation.

In the opinion of Her Majesty's Government it is unnecessary, and would be improper, to make the Japanese Government parties to an arbitration in which no claim is made except against the Chinese Government.

I referred to the Law Officers of the Crown the draft Protocol inclosed in your note of the 21st March, and I now transmit to you a copy with certain alterations made in consultation with them.

In Article I the question objected to by Her Majesty's Government has been replaced by the following words:—

"Whether the Chinese Government are responsible for the loss of the 'Kowshing,' and are liable to pay compensation to such owners, and to the persons on board who were injured in person or property, and to the representatives of such persons as perished."

The period of one month, dating from the signature of the Protocol, allowed by Article II for the presentation of the statement of claim, would appear to be too short a time to allow for the preparation of the case by the owners, and it is proposed to increase it to two months. Corresponding extensions have also been made in the time allowed in Article III for the presentation of the Statement of Defence, Reply, and Rejoinder.

A provision has also been inserted to the effect that all questions of procedure, including the conduct of the oral arguments and the production of documents, shall be determined by the Arbitrator, and that the costs shall be borne as the Arbitrator shall direct.

I shall be glad to be informed of the date on which you will be ready to sign the Protocol as altered.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 5, 1900.

Instructions to Consuls, &c., relating to export of arms to China.

WITH reference to your Report of the 4th instant (Paper A on the accompanying list), I have the honour to transmit herewith the draft of a telegram (Paper B), which the Marquess of Salisbury proposes to send to Her Majesty's Consular officers in China, informing them of the Proclamation issued on the 7th instant, which is inclosed (Paper C), prohibiting the exportation from the United Kingdom of arms and ammunition to China, and instructing them to do their utmost to prevent such materials from falling into the hands of the Chinese.

His Lordship has been in communication with the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty as to the instructions which should be sent to Her Majesty's naval officers on the China Station, and a letter from the Admiralty is transmitted herewith (Paper D), inclosing the draft of a telegram which their Lordships propose sending to the Commander-in-chief on the China station.

You will perceive that, in their Lordships' view, the action of Her Majesty's naval officers should be limited to giving every assistance in their power to Her Majesty's Consuls to enable them to act effectively; but I am to inquire, whether, in view of Her Majesty's Government possessing exterritorial jurisdiction in China, it would not be legal for Her Majesty's ships to stop and search in the territorial waters of China such British merchant-vessels as may be suspected of having violated the terms of Her Majesty's Proclamation, and to confiscate any arms and ammunition which they may be carrying to China which are not destined for Her Majesty's naval or military forces, or, under permit, for the forces acting in alliance with Her Majesty's forces.

During the recent war between China and Japan, it was assumed in this reference to the Law Officers of the 17th August, 1894 (Paper E), that neither Japan nor China could, on its own initiative, constitute a Prize Court competent to deal with British vessels, as owing to the exterritorial jurisdiction possessed by Great Britain in those countries, neither of the belligerents had power to deal judicially with the persons or property of British subjects, who were under the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Consular Courts.

The Law Officers in their reply (Paper F) did not dispute this statement.

Such jurisdiction has, indeed, been acknowledged in more than one case. It was recognized by the Japanese Government in 1893, when Her Majesty's Consular Courts had similar powers to those possessed by Her Majesty's Consular Courts in China, in the case of the collision between the Peninsular and Oriental steamer "Ravenna" and the Japanese war vessel "Chishima" in Japanese waters, the Japanese Government bringing an action against the Peninsular and Oriental Company in the British Consular Court, as reported in the inclosed despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tôkiô (Paper G).

Moreover, the exercise of control by British ships of war over British merchant-vessels in Chinese territorial waters is secured to Great Britain by Treaty—Articles LIV and XVII of the Treaties with China of the 26th June, 1858, and of the 1st March, 1894 (Papers H and I), securing her most-favoured-nation treatment.

She can, therefore, claim the right granted to the United States by China under Article XXVI of the Treaty of the 3rd July, 1844 (Paper K), which stipulates that "merchant-vessels of the United States lying in the waters of the five ports of China open to foreign commerce will be under the jurisdiction of their own Government, who with the master and owners thereof will manage the same without control on the part of China."

I have the honour to inquire whether the proposed instructions to Her Majesty's Consular and Naval officers are right and proper, or whether the instruction to the latter might not be of a more precise nature.

I am at the same time to request that Lord Salisbury may be favoured with any general observations which you may have to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.

Opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown and Mr. H. Sutton.

Draft Convention relating to Fisheries about the Faröe Islands and Iceland

1. THE following are the observations which occur to us on the draft Convention:—

Article II. With respect to the 2nd paragraph of this Article, we do not advise the insertion of any provision in the draft, applying the principle of this paragraph, to the seas round the British Islands not dealt with by the North Sea Convention. We are of opinion that the recognition of such a principle, having regard to the conformation of the west coast, is not expedient.

The Article speaks, amongst other things, of "banks." This expression is adopted from the North Sea Convention. It cannot in this connection apply to the so-called "fishing banks," over which the sea continuously flows. We understand that the "Banc des Féroë" is a fishing bank of this kind, and that M. de Bille's remarks as to including it within the limits of the Convention merely refer to the desirability of applying the Regulations of the Convention to this part of the ocean.

Article IV. We have not the materials before us for settling what the geographical limits should be, but we would suggest that the southern limit should, from the coast of Norway to a point somewhere to the west of the Shetland Isles, be the 61st degree of latitude, the inclusion of the Faröe bank being provided for by carrying the boundary-line due south from the point which may be selected to the west of the Shetland Isles as far as the 60th degree of latitude, and then along that degree westward as far as may be desired. The boundaries may be drawn on a chart, to be annexed to this Convention, as was done in the case of the French Convention of 1867. (See Article II thereof.)

The adoption of the 61st degree of latitude as the southern limit until a point west of the Shetland Isles is reached will prevent this Convention and the North Sea Convention overlapping, for the northern limit of the latter Convention is the 61st degree of latitude.

Article VIII. There are several verbal inaccuracies in this Article.

It may be desirable that the dimensions of the letters and numbers on the funnels should be given. (See M. de Bille's remarks upon this Article, p. 2.)

Article XXXV. As an Order in Council will in England be sufficient, this Article should run "any measures which may be necessary for," &c.

In Article XXXIX, line 4. For the word "introduced" the word "passed" should be substituted. We suggest that the words "subject to further correspondence between the Governments of the High Contracting Parties" should be omitted and that the Article should proceed "come into operation from and after a day to be fixed upon by the two High Contracting Parties after it shall have been notified by the Danish Government that measures have been passed," &c.

As regards the termination of the Convention, we presume that it is not desired to adopt the principle of Article XL of the Convention of 1867. If the principle of Article XXXIX is adhered to, the last three lines should be altered to the effect that the Convention shall continue in force until the expiration of two years from notice by either party for its termination. Two years' notice seems somewhat long, but that appears to be due to the fact that the Althing only meets every two years. (See M. de Bille's comment.)

It is a matter for consideration whether the Contracting Parties should not have power by mutual consent to modify the Convention in matters not inconsistent with its principles, as in Article XL of the Convention between England and France, dated 1867, so as to avoid as to such matters the necessity of a fresh Treaty being made.

2. As regards the undertaking referred to in the Foreign Office letter of the 26th November, 1900, it is not at present clear whether the Danish Government includes Norway and Sweden among the Powers to be deemed for this purpose interested in the North Sea fisheries.

For the present purpose we think it may be assumed that the Danish Government has in view only the Powers which are parties to the North Sea Convention. We also assume that the undertaking is intended to apply only to the North Sea, but this also is not quite clear. The substance of the undertaking between the two countries should be:—

That Denmark, in consideration of this Convention, engages, if and as soon as any two or more of the Powers, other than England and Denmark, signatories of the North Sea Convention, shall be willing to agree with this country for the exclusion of their trawl fishermen from any non-territorial waters (? in the North Sea) from which British trawl fishermen are excluded by, or by virtue of, any Statute of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or any bye-laws legally made, forthwith to enter into a like agreement with England for the exclusion of Danish trawl fishermen.

3. We are of opinion that legislation is not necessary to give effect to the suggested Convention, and that an Order in Council is all that is required.

Annex.

Draft Convention between His Majesty the King of Denmark and His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for regulating the Fisheries of their respective Subjects outside Territorial Waters in the Ocean surrounding the Faröe Islands and Iceland.

HIS Majesty the King of Denmark and His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, being desirous of regulating the fisheries of their respective subjects outside Danish territorial waters in the ocean surrounding the Faröe Islands and Iceland, have resolved to conclude for this purpose a Convention, and have named their Plenipotentiaries as follows:—

His Majesty the King of Denmark,

His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland,

Who, after having communicated the one to the other their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

The provisions of the present Convention, the object of which is to regulate the police of the fisheries in the ocean surrounding the Faröe Islands and Iceland outside the territorial waters of these islands shall apply to the subjects of the High Contracting Parties.

1900

ARTICLE II.

The subjects of His Majesty the King of Denmark shall enjoy the exclusive right of fishery within the distance of 3 miles from low-water mark along the whole extent of the coasts of the said islands, as well as of the dependent islets, rocks, and banks.

As regards bays, the distance of 3 miles shall be measured from a straight line drawn across the bay, in the part nearest the entrance, at the first point where the width does not exceed 10 miles.

The present Article shall not prejudice the freedom of navigation or anchorage in territorial waters accorded to fishing boats, provided they conform to the ~~special~~ ordinary Danish Police Regulations ruling this matter, amongst others the one stipulating that trawling-vessels, while sojourning in territorial waters, shall have their trawling gear stowed away ~~inside~~ in-board.

ARTICLE III.

The miles mentioned in the preceding Article are geographical miles, whereof 60 make a degree of latitude.

ARTICLE IV.

The geographical limits for the application of the present Convention shall be fixed as follows:—

On the south by a line commencing from where the meridian of North Unst Lighthouse (Shetland Islands) meets the parallel of 61st degree of north latitude to a point where the 9th meridian of west longitude meets the parallel of 60° north latitude, and from thence westward along that parallel to the meridian of 27° west longitude.

On the west by the meridian of 27° west longitude.

On the north by the parallel of 67° 30′ of north latitude.

On the east by the meridian of the North Unst Lighthouse.

The aforesaid limits are shown on the Chart appended to the present Convention.

ARTICLE V.

The fishing-boats of the High Contracting Parties shall be registered in accordance with the administrative Regulations in force in their respective countries.

For each port there shall be a consecutive series of numbers, preceded by one or two initial letters, which shall be specified by the superior competent authority.

Each Government shall draw up a list showing these initial letters.

This list, together with all modifications which may subsequently be made in it, shall be notified to the other Government.

ARTICLE VI.

Fishing-boats shall bear the initial letter or letters of the port to which they belong, and the registry number in the series of numbers for that port.

ARTICLE VII.

The name of each fishing-boat, and that of the port to which she belongs, shall be painted in white oil colour on a black ground on the stern of the boat, in letters which shall be at least 8 centim. in height and 12 millim. in breadth.

ARTICLE VIII.

The letter, or letters and numbers, which shall have been assigned to a vessel on its registration shall be painted in white oil colour on a black ground, and so as to be clearly visible on each bow of the vessel 8 or 10 centim. below the gunwale, provided the space admit it. The letters and numbers of vessels of 15 tons burden (gross tonnage) and upwards shall be 45 centim. in height and 6 centim. in breadth.

For boats of less than 15 tons burden (gross tonnage), the ~~height~~ dimensions shall, if possible, be 25 centim. in height and 4 centim. in breadth.

The same letters and numbers shall also be painted in oil colour on each side of the mainsail of the boat, immediately above the close reef, and in such a manner as to be plainly visible; they shall be painted on white sails in black, on black sails in white, and on sails of an intermediate shade in black or in white, as may ~~decide~~ be decided by the authority superintending the marking, in accordance with Article V of the present Convention.

Steam fishing-vessels shall, ~~moreover~~, in addition, bear the above marks on the funnel in a plainly visible manner. These marks shall be of the same dimensions as those on the bow.

The letter, or letters and numbers, on the sails shall be one-third larger in every way than those placed on the bows of the boat.

ARTICLE IX.

Fishing-boats may not have, either on their outside, on their sails, or on their funnels, any names, letters, or numbers other than those prescribed by Articles VI, VII, and VIII of the present Convention.

ARTICLE X.

The names, letters, and numbers placed on the boats and on their sails and funnels shall not be effaced, altered, made illegible, covered, or concealed in any manner whatsoever.

ARTICLE XI.

All the small boats, buoys, principal floats, trawls, grapnels, anchors, and generally all fishing implements, shall be marked with the letter, or letters and numbers, of the boats to which they belong.

These letters and numbers shall be large enough to be easily distinguished. The owners of the nets or other fishing implements may further distinguish them by any private marks they think proper.

ARTICLE XII.

The master of each boat must have with him an official document, issued by the proper authority in his own country, for the purpose of enabling him to establish the nationality of the boat.

This document must always give the letter or letters and number of the boat, as well as her description and the name or names of the owner or the name of the firm or Association to which she belongs.

ARTICLE XIII.

The nationality of a boat must not be concealed in any manner whatsoever.

ARTICLE XIV.

No fishing-boat shall anchor, between sunset and sunrise, on grounds where drift-net fishing is actually going on.

This prohibition shall not, however, apply to anchorings which may take place in consequence of accidents or of any other compulsory circumstances.

ARTICLE XV.

Boats arriving on the fishing grounds shall not either place themselves or shoot their nets in such a way as to injure each other, or as to interfere with fishermen who have already commenced their operations.

ARTICLE XVI.

Whenever, with a view of drift-net fishing, decked boats and undecked boats commence shooting their nets at the same time, the undecked boats shall shoot their nets to windward of the decked boats.

The decked boats, on their part, shall shoot their nets to leeward of the undecked boats.

As a rule, if decked boats shoot their nets to windward of undecked boats which have begun fishing, or if undecked boats shoot their nets to leeward of decked boats which have begun fishing, the responsibility as regards any damages to nets which may result shall rest with the boats which last began fishing, unless they can prove that they were under stress of compulsory circumstances, or that the damage was not caused by their fault.

ARTICLE XVII.

No net or any other fishing engine shall be set or anchored on grounds where drift-net fishing is actually going on.

1900

ARTICLE XVIII.

No fisherman shall make fast or hold on his boat to the nets, buoys, floats, or any other part of the fishing tackle of another fisherman.

ARTICLE XIX.

When trawl fishermen are in sight of net, ~~of long line,~~ or of ~~seine~~ long line fishermen, they shall take all necessary steps in order to avoid doing injury to the latter. Where damage is caused the responsibility shall be on the trawlers, unless they can prove that they were under stress of compulsory circumstances, or that the loss sustained did not result from their fault.

ARTICLE XX.

When nets belonging to different fishermen get foul of each other, they shall not be cut without the consent of both parties.

All responsibility shall cease if the impossibility of disengaging the nets by any other means is proved.

ARTICLE XXI.

When a boat fishing with long lines entangles her lines in those of another boat, the person who hauls up the lines shall not cut them except under stress of compulsory circumstances, in which case any line which may be cut shall be immediately joined together again.

ARTICLE XXII.

Except in cases of salvage and the cases to which the two preceding Articles relate, no fisherman shall, under any pretext whatever, cut, hook, or lift up nets, lines, or other gear not belonging to him.

When a fisherman fouls, or otherwise interferes with the fishing gear of another fisherman, he shall take all necessary measures for reducing to a minimum the injuries which may result to the gear or to the boat of the other fisherman.

ARTICLE XXIII.

The use of any instrument or engine which serves only to cut or destroy nets is forbidden.

The presence of any such engine on board a boat is also forbidden.

The High Contracting Parties engage to take the necessary measures for preventing the embarkation of such engines on board fishing-boats.

ARTICLE XXIV.

Fishing-boats shall conform to the general rules respecting lights and sound signals, as well as those concerning steering and navigation, which have been, or may be, adopted in respect of these boats by mutual arrangement between the High Contracting Parties with the view of preventing collisions at sea.

ARTICLE XXV.

All fishing-boats, all their small boats, all rigging, gear, or other appurtenances of fishing-boats, all nets, lines, buoys, floats, or other fishing implements whatsoever found or picked up at sea, ~~whatever~~ whether marked or unmarked, shall as soon as possible be delivered to the competent authority of the first port to which the salving boat returns or puts in.

Such authority shall inform the Consul or Consular Agent of the country to which the boat of the salvor belongs, and of the nation of the owners of the articles found. They (the same authority) shall restore the articles to the owners thereof or to their representatives as soon as such articles are claimed, and the interests of the salvors have been properly guaranteed.

The administrative or judicial authorities, according as the laws of the respective countries may provide, shall fix the amount which the owner shall pay to the salvors. It is, however, agreed that this provision shall not in any way prejudice such Conventions respecting this matter as are already in force, and that the High Contracting Parties reserve the right of regulating, by special arrangements between themselves, the amount of salvage at a fixed rate per net salved.

Fishing implements of any kind found unmarked shall be treated as wreck.

ARTICLE XXVI.

The superintendence of the fisheries shall be exercised by vessels belonging to the national navies of the High Contracting Parties. In the case of Denmark, such vessels may be vessels belonging to the State, commanded by Captains who hold commissions.

ARTICLE XXVII.

The execution of the Regulations respecting the document establishing nationality, the marking and numbering of boats, &c., and of fishing implements, as well as the presence on board of instruments which are forbidden (Articles VI, VII, VIII, IX, X, XII, XIII, and XXIII, paragraph 2), is placed under the exclusive superintendence of the cruisers of the nation of each fishing-boat. Nevertheless, the Commanders of cruisers shall acquaint each other with any infractions of the above-~~named~~ mentioned Regulations committed by the fishermen of the other nation.

ARTICLE XXVIII.

The cruisers of the High Contracting Parties shall be competent to authenticate all infractions of the Regulations prescribed by the present Convention other than those referred to in Article XXVII, and all offences relating to fishing operations, whichever may be the nation to which the fishermen guilty of such infractions may belong.

ARTICLE XXIX.

When the Commanders of cruisers have reason to believe that an infraction of the provisions of the present Convention has been committed, they may require the master of the boat inculpated to exhibit the official document establishing her nationality. The fact of such document having been exhibited shall then be indorsed upon it immediately. The Commanders of cruisers shall not pursue further their visit or search on board a fishing-boat which is not of their own nationality unless it should be necessary for the purpose of obtaining proof of an offence or of a contravention of Regulations respecting the police of the fisheries.

ARTICLE XXX.

The Commanders of the cruisers of the High Contracting Parties shall exercise their judgment as to the gravity of facts brought to their knowledge, and of which they are empowered to take cognizance, and shall verify the damage, from whatever cause arising, which may be sustained by fishing-boats of the nationalities of the High Contracting Parties.

They shall draw up, if there is occasion for it, a formal statement of the verification of the facts as elicited both from the declaration of the parties interested and from the testimony of those present.

The Commander of the cruiser may, if the case appears to him sufficiently serious to justify the step, take the offending boat into a port of the nation to which the fisherman belongs.

He may even take on board the cruiser a part of the crew of the fishing-boat, in order to hand them over to the authorities of her nation.

ARTICLE XXXI.

The formal statement referred to in the preceding Article shall be drawn up in the language of the Commander of the cruiser, and according to the forms in use in his country. The accused and the witnesses shall be entitled to add, or to have added, to such statement in their own language any observations or evidence which they may think suitable. Such declarations must be duly signed.

ARTICLE XXXII.

Resistance to the direction of Commanders of cruisers charged with the police of the fisheries, or of those who act under their orders, shall, without taking into account the nationality of the cruiser, be considered as resistance to the authority of the nation of the fishing-boat.

ARTICLE XXXIII.

When the act alleged is not of a serious character, but has, nevertheless, caused damage to any fisherman, the Commanders of cruisers shall be at liberty, should the parties concerned agree to it, to arbitrate at sea between them, and to fix the compensation to be paid. Where one of the parties is not in a position to settle the matter at once, the Commanders shall cause the parties concerned to sign in duplicate a formal document specifying the compensation to be paid.

One copy of this document shall remain on board the cruiser, and the other shall be handed to the master of the boat to which the compensation is due, in order that he may, if necessary, be able to make use of it before the Courts of the country to which the debtor belongs.

Where, on the contrary, the parties do not consent to arbitration, the Commanders shall act in accordance with the provisions of Article XXX.

ARTICLE XXXIV.

The prosecution for offences against, or contraventions of, the present Convention shall be instituted by or in the name of the State.

ARTICLE XXXV.

The High Contracting Parties engage to propose to their respective Legislatures ~~the necessary~~ any measures which may be necessary for insuring the execution of the present Convention, and particularly for the punishment by either fine or imprisonment, or by both, of persons who may contravene the provisions of Articles VI to XXIII inclusive.

ARTICLE XXXVI.

In all cases of assault committed, or of wilful damage or loss inflicted, by fishermen of one of the contracting countries upon fishermen of another nationality, the Courts of the country to which the boats of the offenders belong shall be empowered to try them.

The same rule shall apply with regard to offences against, and contraventions of, the present Convention.

ARTICLE XXXVII.

The proceedings and trial in cases of infraction of the provisions of the present Convention shall take place as summarily as the Laws and Regulations in force will permit.

ARTICLE XXXVIII.

The present Convention shall be ratified. The ratifications shall be exchanged in London as soon as possible.

ARTICLE XXXIX.

The present Convention shall ~~subject to further correspondence between the Governments of the High Contracting Parties, be brought into force as soon as possible after it having~~ come into operation from and after a day to be fixed upon by the two High Contracting Parties after it shall have been notified by the Danish Government that measures have been ~~introduced~~ passed in respect of the Faröe Islands and Iceland by which freedom of navigation and anchorage within the territorial waters of the said islands is accorded to British fishermen (vide Article II, paragraph 3). The Convention shall continue in ~~operation for two years from the day on which one of the High Contracting Parties shall have given notice to the other of its intention to terminate its operations,~~ force until the expiration of two years from notice by either party for its termination.

The High Contracting Parties, however, reserve to themselves the power to make, by mutual consent, any modification in the Convention which experience shall have shown to be desirable, provided it is not inconsistent with the principles upon which the Convention is based.

ADDITIONAL ARTICLE.

Any other Government, the subjects of which carry on fishery in the ocean surrounding the Faröe Islands and Iceland may adhere to the present Convention.

The adhesion shall be notified to one of the Governments at Copenhagen or at London respectively. Such notification shall be communicated to the other Signatory Power.

In witness whereof the Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention, and have affixed thereto their seals.

No. 28.

[March 9, 1900.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, February 28, 1900.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, with regard to the international status of a line of mail-packets owned by a French Company and subsidized by the French Government.

Status of Messageries Maritimes' mail-packets.

In his despatch No. 19, Africa, of the 21st ultimo (Paper A) Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris draws attention to the fact that the French Government consider that, in virtue of the subsidy they receive and the mails they carry, such vessels are to be considered as national ships, or at least must be so when they belong to the Messageries Maritimes, the vessels of which line are stated to be besides commanded by ex-naval officers. who are also, for the most part, in the naval reserve.

An account of the various instances in which questions have arisen between this country and France as to the status of the Messageries Maritimes steamers will be found in the Papers marked (B) and (C). They may be summarized as follows.

In 1868 a riot took place on board the Messageries steamer "Tigre" while at Hong Kong, and the French Consul there claimed jurisdiction over all persons implicated.

The Law Officers, on being consulted in the matter, reported, in the first instance, that if the "Tigre" was employed in the carriage of baggage only, she did not come within the scope of the Convention of 1856 (Convention between England and France relative to communication by post—24th September, 1856—see Paper D). They subsequently, however, expressed the opinion that as she carried baggage and mails she did come within that Convention, and that the attempted arrest of a person on board by the Hong Kong police was illegal.

In 1872 a collision took place off Hong Kong between the French Messageries Maritimes steamer "Ava" and a British vessel, in consequence of which the "Ava," although bearing the mails, was detained for twelve hours by warrant of the Vice-Admiralty Court of the Colony, but subsequently released by order of the Court.

The Law Officers, to whom the question was referred, reported that, in their opinion, French vessels which were national or the property of the French Government, and vessels which were chartered or subsidized by the French Government, and employed for the conveyance of correspondence between French and British ports, were within the Vth Article of the Postal Convention (of 1856), and might not on any account be diverted from their especial duty, or be liable to seizure, detention, embargo, or "arrêt de Prince."

In 1874 the French Government complained that one of the vessels of the Messageries Maritimes, the "Anadyr," had been boarded by the police at Hong Kong with a view to the arrest of one of the crew who was reported to have maltreated a passenger.

Instructions were thereupon given to the police as to the privileges and rights of the vessels belonging to the Messageries Maritimes Company, in order that there might not be any grounds for a repetition of the complaints which had been made.

The Governor of Hong Kong was also informed by the Colonial Office that there was no reason to doubt that the French Consul, if applied to, would in general give facilities for the service or execution of process, civil and criminal, on board those vessels, but that without his sanction no such proceedings should be attempted.

In 1876, the police authorities at Hong Kong applied to the French Consul there for permission to search the mail-steamer "Sindh" for a person accused of embezzlement, who was supposed to have taken refuge on board, but the request was refused. The French Consul subsequently reported that he had himself searched the vessel, but without success.

A further case occurred in 1876 and again at Hong Kong, in which the privileges of the Messageries boats came in question, the body of a Chinese servant belonging to the "Tanais" having been found floating in the harbour.

On this occasion the Attorney-General for Hong Kong complained that while the Messageries boats received the privileges of men-of-war, they did not accept the responsibilities attaching to such a status. Representations were made on the subject at Paris, but nothing further was done in the matter.

In 1880 one of the Messageries steamers, the "Anadyr," was found to be in the Hong Kong waters with a quantity of opium on board, in contravention of the local law. The French Consul declined to give facilities for the execution of the search warrant which the opium farmer had obtained. The Governor in the end instructed the police not to execute the warrant, and the ship was allowed to leave in due course.

In 1881 an Englishman at Galle, on being sued by his servant, took refuge on board the Messageries steamer "Meinam," and the commanding officer of that vessel declined to permit his arrest. Representations were made at Paris, but without effect.

Such are some of the principal instances within recent years in which the French Government have successfully maintained the right of the Messageries steamers to the privileges of national vessels, but it is to be observed that in each of the above-mentioned cases they have always based the claims of their vessels to the privileges in question on the terms of the Convention of 1856, while Her Majesty's Government on their side have, in every instance, admitted their claims on the same grounds.

It would seem that the French Government, never having raised the point that a Messageries boat is, by its nature, a national vessel, could hardly do so now after having allowed so many opportunities to slip of advancing such an argument.

They would appear, moreover, to have furnished still further arguments against themselves in the matter by having agreed to the two successive Postal Conventions between Great Britain and France, which were signed, the one in 1856 and the other in 1890 (Paper E).

Article V of the Convention of 1856 runs as follows:—

"When the packets employed by the British Post Office or by the French Post Office in execution of Articles I and II of the present Convention are national vessels, the property of Government, or vessels chartered or subsidized by Government, they shall be considered and treated as vessels of war, in the ports of the two countries at which they regularly or accidentally touch, and be there entitled to the same honours and privileges.

"These packets shall be exempted in the said ports, as well upon their entrance as upon their departure, from all tonnage, navigation, and port dues; excepting, however, the vessels freighted or subsidized by Government, which must pay such dues in those ports where they are levied on behalf of Corporations, private Companies, or individuals.

"They shall not on any account be diverted from their especial duty, or be liable to seizure, detention, embargo, or 'arrêt de Prince.'"

It is hardly to be supposed that, had the French Government at the time of the conclusion of this Convention considered that vessels chartered or subsidized by them for carrying mails were in their nature national ships, they would have been at pains to negotiate a Convention providing that such vessels should in specified respects only be treated as vessels of war.

There is nothing whatever in the Convention to show that it is declaratory only.

Even stronger evidence in the same direction is afforded by Article V of the Postal Convention of 1890 (Paper E), the first paragraph of which is similar to that above quoted, except that all reference to vessels employed in the carriage of mails being considered and treated as vessels of war is omitted, while the two last paragraphs run as follows:—

"The present Article shall not apply to packets intrusted with a mail service and belonging to Companies subsidized by either State, until a bond has been entered into, once for all, by the said Companies to satisfy, after due hearing and definitive decision, the legal consequences of any liability incurred either by the captains of their packets or by the Companies themselves.

"The aforesaid bond must be guaranteed by a security within the jurisdiction of the Tribunals of the country in which the bond may have been entered into."

It is impossible to suppose that any country would have consented to the application to vessels really national of an Article so derogatory to their status as such.

The Convention is not worded as though it were in derogation of the substantive and original status of subsidized mail-ships; on the contrary, it reads as though it conferred a privilege, which privilege is not to enure until security has been given against abuse of the privilege.

The above-mentioned facts would seem to militate strongly against vessels employed in carrying mails having the status of national vessels, even when the conditions of their service appear to attach them, as in the case of the boats of the Messageries Maritimes, more clearly than in most cases to the Government of the country to which they belong.

On the other hand, it must not be forgotten that the Court of Appeal has laid it down in the case of the "Parlement Belge" (Paper F, p. 3) that an unarmed packet belonging to the Sovereign of a foreign State, in the hands of officers commissioned by him and employed in carrying mails, is not liable to be seized in a suit in rem to recover redress for a collision; and that this immunity is not lost by reason of the packet also carrying merchandize and passengers for hire.

This decision reversed a previous judgment by Sir Robert Phillimore in the same case (Paper G).

It is to be noted, however, that in the above case the vessel was actually the property of the Head of the State, whereas the Messageries Maritimes boats belong to a private Corporation.

At the same time, in face of the decision of the High Court in the case of the "Parlement Belge," it might be difficult to go behind the declaration of the Government of a Sovereign State that a certain ship which was officered by persons holding commissions in the navy of such State and flying the public national flag was owned by the Government,* and was a part of the public naval force.

At any rate, whatever may be eventually decided in regard to the status of the Messageries Maritimes vessels, it is obvious that they must accept the disadvantages of that status no less than the advantages. They cannot assume first a national and then a private character as may be at the moment most convenient. For instance, as at the time of French belligerency during the Franco-Chinese war they had not to suffer in neutral ports the disadvantages of belligerent ships (Papers H and I), so also in times of French neutrality they must suffer the disadvantages which attach to all ships other than public ships.

A ship which is entitled to the privileges of a national ship must also incur the obligations incident to its national status—one of the principal of which is that it must be used for public purposes only—a condition which a subsidized mail-steamer carrying goods and passengers for hire cannot possibly fulfil.

I am to request you to take the above facts into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to the attitude which should be adopted by Her Majesty's Government in the event of the French Government formally claiming that subsidized mail-steamers, or at any rate the boats of the Messageries Maritimes, should be considered as national vessels; and generally with any observations which you may have to offer on the subject.

I annex a collection of extracts from various works on international law (Paper J), from which you will be able to see the opinions held in regard to the general question of the status of mail-ships by various writers of repute.

Report.

In our opinion Her Majesty's Government should not admit any claim by the French Government that subsidized mail-steamers or the boats of the Messageries Maritimes should be considered as national vessels.

Such mail-steamers, if they fulfil the conditions of the Convention, are entitled to the privileges conferred by that Convention on vessels carrying mails. The fact that they are subsidized by the State, and commanded by ex-naval officers belonging to the marine reserve, does not constitute them national vessels. For this purpose it is necessary that they should be the property of the State, or chartered by the State, and employed for public purposes.

These vessels belong to private Companies and not to the French Government, and they are employed for ordinary commercial purposes, such as the carrying of cargo. They, therefore, do not fulfil the conditions which, in the opinion of the Court of Appeal in the case of the "Parlement Belge," entitled a foreign vessel to exemption from civil process in this country. Any exemption of this sort, if enjoyed at all, must be enjoyed under the Postal Convention. Nor are they, in our opinion, exempt from search on the high seas, or in the territorial waters of a belligerent, or from seizure, if they contain contraband. The fact that the Companies which own them are in receipt of a subsidy from the State does not prevent their remaining private vessels.

The definition of national vessels has never been extended by any writer of authority so as to include any other than vessels employed by the State for public purposes. The subject is well discussed in "Ortolan's Diplomatie de la Mer," vol. i, pp. 181–186.

The above conclusions are strongly supported by the fact that the French Government have hitherto always based their claims to immunity on the terms of the Postal Conventions.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, February 14, 1900.

Belligerent right to search neutral merchant-vessels under convoy.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to inform you that his attention has recently been drawn to the fact that Professor T. E. Holland, in his edition of 1888 of "A Manual of Naval Prize Law" (section 148), lays it down that "any resistance made by a neutral convoying ship to the lawful visit and search of a vessel under her escort will justify the detention both of the convoying ship and of all vessels convoyed by her."

This paragraph, in a text-book which is stated on the title-page to be issued by the authority of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and which is, indeed, supplied by them to the Commanders of Her Majesty's ships of war, is likely to lead them to believe that, in case of resistance to search, they will be entitled to detain a neutral convoying man-of-war and the ships convoyed; and, in these circumstances, it appears to Lord Salisbury to be highly desirable that the whole question should be examined, with a view, not only of ascertaining how far such action on the part of a naval officer would be justifiable by international law, but of enabling general instructions on the subject to be formulated for the guidance of Her Majesty's navy.

The question which is to be examined in this view is the general one: whether neutral convoy does or does not secure immunity from search to neutral merchant-vessels?

If the answer be in the affirmative, it will then have to be decided what course the Commander of a British cruiser is to adopt when he finds a neutral ship being convoyed by a neutral man-of-war. With regard to this particular point, I am to call your attention to the remarks made on it by M. Bluntschli in his "Droit International Codifié," which will be found quoted on p. 8 of the collection of papers sent herewith.

If, on the other hand, the answer to the above question is in the negative, and it is decided that neutral convoy does not secure immunity from search to neutral merchant-vessels, then it will have to be decided what the Commander of a British cruiser should do on meeting a neutral merchant-ship so convoyed which he desires to search.

(a.) Is he to send a boat in charge of one of his officers to the merchant-ship to conduct a search in the usual manner?

(b.) If access to a ship lying under the protection of a neutral man-of-war is refused, should a simple protest be lodged or should the Commanding Officer of the cruiser insist on the right of search if sufficiently powerful to do so?

(c.) If access to a ship in the circumstances specified in (b) is refused on the ground that such a ship enjoys immunity from search as being under convoy, should such refusal be treated as a suspicious circumstance?

From the collection of papers which accompanies this letter, and which contains the opinions of various of the better known writers on international law, who have dealt with this particular subject, it will be seen that, while continental jurists are, generally speaking, in favour of extending the privileges of a ship under convoy as far as possible, British and North American writers are inclined to take the view that a ship under convoy may be searched as well as another.

To take the former group of writers first.

Heffter, for instance ("Le Droit International de l'Europe." 4e édition Française. Augmentée et annotée par F. Heinrich Geffken, 1883, pp. 412–14) declares that it is "un principe irrévocablement établi que les navires de commerce neutres régulièrement visités avant leur départ et convoyés par des bâtiments de guerre pourvus des papiers de bord nécessaires, ne doivent pas être soumis à la visite des croiseurs belligérants."

He admits, however, that this privilege is strictly confined to the vessels which form part of the convoy:

"Au surplus, il va sans dire que les navires seuls faisant partie du convoi sont exempts de la visite, et non pas ceux qui sont venus s'y joindre volontairement. Ne jouiront pas non plus de cette exemption les navires qui ont quitté le convoi en route ou qui en ont été séparés; ces navires peuvent être arrêtés en pleine mer comme suspects et visités par les croiseurs belligérants. Enfin ces derniers peuvent procéder à la vérification de l'état d'un convoi, pour s'assurer si, par hasard ou volontairement, des navires étrangers ne se trouvent pas en faire partie."

Ortolan ("Diplomatie de la Mer." 2nd edition, vol. ii, pp. 226–45) has the following observations on the subject:—

"Nous nous rangeons donc fermement, sans aucune hésitation, du côté de ceux qui soutiennent que, indépendamment même de tout Traité, les navires de guerre des Puissances belligérantes n'ont, pas plus que les corsaires de ces mêmes Puissances, aucun droit de visite sur des bâtiments neutres convoyés."

But he admits that the Captain of the belligerent cruiser is not bound to rest satisfied with the simple word of the Commandant of the convoying man of-war that there is no contraband of war on board the ships under his charge; and he remarks:—

"Cependant, il faut reconnaître avec M. de Rayneval, qu'il est des cas où le belligérant peut insister auprès du Commandant du convoi pour qu'une vérification soit faite par ce dernier lui-même. Il peut arriver, par exemple, qu'à la faveur de la nuit, d'une brume, ou d'un gros temps qui ont rompu l'ordre de marche d'une flotte marchande nombreuse, des navires étrangers à cette flotte se soient glissés au milieu d'elle en empruntant son pavillon, malgré la surveillance des convoyeurs. Si ces indices certains de l'existence d'un pareil fait sont fournis au Commandant du convoi, il est du devoir de ce Commandant de procéder par lui-même ou par ses officiers à une visite à bord des bâtiments suspects.

"Nous croyons même qu'il peut, dans ce cas, sans compromettre la dignité de son Gouvernement, admettre comme simple témoin de la visite un officier du navire belligérant."

Calvo ("Le Droit International Théorique et Pratique." 4th edition, 1888, Tome V, pp. 225–42) remarks that "l'inviolabilité absolue des navires marchands convoyés est devenue un précepte, une loi indiscutable pour toutes les Puissances Maritimes, à la seule exception de l'Angleterre, qui n'a pas encore consenti à l'inscrire dans son droit conventionnel. Il est généralement admis que le navire belligérant, que rencontrent des navires marchands convoyés, doit s'en rapporter à la déclaration du Commandant du convoi quand celui-ci atteste que les bâtiments placés sous sa protection sont de sa nation et ne portent point de la contrebande à l'ennemi."

Bluntschli ("Le Droit International Codifié." Translated from the German by M. C. Lardy. 3rd edition, 1881, pp. 478–80), considers that "lorsque l'État neutre fait accompagner par des navires de guerre les navires de commerce neutres, et donne aux belligérants l'assurance que le convoi ne transporte aucune marchandise de contrebande, il ne doit pas être procédé à la visite."

It is, however, he considers, impossible to ask a belligerent Power to give up all right to make any actual examination of a suspected vessel merely on the assurance of a neutral State, and he makes similar reservations with Heffter as to the composition of the convoy.

To turn to British and North American writers, Hall ("A Treatise on International Law." 4th edition, 1895, pp. 747–57) after giving an historic résumé of the various negotiations which have at different times taken place on the subject between this country and others—throughout which Great Britain maintained her traditional view in favour of exercising the right of search, whether a vessel is under convoy or not—concludes thus:—

"Continental jurists are almost unanimous in maintaining the exemption from visit of convoyed ships, not only as a principle to be advocated, but as an established rule of law. That it has any pretension to be so is evidently inadmissible; the assertion of it, and the practice, which have been described, are insufficient both in kind and degree to impose a duty on dissenting States; and it cannot even be granted that the doctrine possesses a reasonable theoretic basis."

This assertion he supports by various cogent arguments.

Sir Travers Twiss ("Rights and Duties of Nations in Time of War," 1863, p. 185) declares that "it is not competent for a neutral merchant to exempt his vessel from the belligerent right of search by placing it under the convoy of a neutral or enemy man-of-war," and supports his dictum by quoting Mr. Chancellor Kent, to the effect that "the very fact of sailing under the protection of a belligerent or neutral convoy is a violation of neutrality."

It may here be remarked that Sir W. Scott, in delivering the Judgment of the High Court of Admiralty in what Wheaton calls the "memorable case" of the "Maria," laid it down:—

"1. That the right of visiting and searching merchant-ships on the high seas, whatever be the ships, the cargoes, the destinations, is an incontestable right of the lawfully-commissioned cruisers of a belligerent nation; and

"2. That the authority of the neutral Sovereign being forcibly interposed cannot legally vary the rights of a lawfully-commissioned belligerent cruiser."

He added that: "The only security known to the law of nations upon this subject, independently of all special covenant, is the right of personal visitation and search, to be exercised by those who have the interest in making it."

With regard to the United States, it is to be observed that that Government has, according to Calvo, frequently admitted by Treaty* that the assurance of the officer in command of a convoy is enough to screen from all search the merchant-vessels in his charge, but United States' writers and Judges have constantly maintained an opposite opinion; and Dana even declares that the Government has never by any national act attempted to deny the right (of searching vessels under convoy) as matter of international law. He further asserts that the right to exclude all search by national protection never did form a part of the law of nations, and certainly does not do so now.

Dana also combats the view that the belligerent in exercising the right of search must take the word of the Commander of the convoying vessel as a substitute for actual search, and observes that all British and American publicists have declined to admit that such a claim forms part of the law of nations; and, with Hall, he argues forcibly against it.

I am to request you to take the above extracts and the inclosed collection of papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the advisability of revising that portion of Professor T. E. Holland's "Manual of Prize Law" which deals with the subject of convoy, and, if so, in what sense; and generally with any observations which you may have to offer on the subject under discussion.

Report.

We have examined the authorities referred to in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 14th instant and in the accompanying collection of papers.

There is no doubt that the directions in the "Manual of Naval Prize Law" correctly represent the English and American view of international law on this subject. According to that view, the right to seize the vessels convoyed, in case of resistance, is beyond controversy, and, according to Lord Stowell's dictum in "The Maria" (1 C. Rob. 376), the convoying man-of-war may, under such circumstances, also be seized.

The French writers on international law—and we may add to those cited, Pillet ("Lois Actuelles de la Guerre," 314) and Despagnet ("Droit International Public," 2nd edition, 718)—take generally the view that the assurance of the officer of the convoying man-of-war should be accepted. Dupuis, however, after reviewing the English and continental doctrines, admits to some extent the reasonableness of the English view, and suggests a solution on the lines of the Treaty between England and Russia of the 17th June, 1801 (Dupuis: "Droit de la Guerre Maritime d'après les Doctrines Anglaises Contemporaines," p. 315, § 247).

The German writers are less decided upon the point. G. F. de Martens merely mentions it as controverted ("Précis du Droit des Gens," §§ 321–26 A). Rivier ("Principes du Droit des Gens, II," p. 423, § 218) merely says that the word of the Commanding Officer of the convoying vessel is generally accepted. Perels ("Droit Maritime," translated by Arendt, p. 325, § 56) states the French view, but adds that it has never been universally admitted. Geffcken, in the "Handbuch des Völkerrechts," edited by Holtzendorff, vol. iv, p 625, points out that the entire immunity of the convoy cannot be maintained, as the Commanding Officer may have been misled as to the nature of the cargo, and as their are different views as to what constitutes contraband, and adopts the view that the compromise embodied in the English Treaty of the 17th June, 1801, with Russia is a fair one. The reasons given by Geffcken against entire immunity are the same as those stated by Bluntschli in his note to § 825 of his "Droit International Codifié."

Bello adopts Lord Stowell's view as stated in "The Maria" ("Derecho Internacional," Madrid, edition 1883, with notes by Silva, pp. 258–61).

The arguments against the entire immunity of convoyed vessels from search on the mere assurance of the officer in charge of the convoy appear to us to be overwhelming. There is, however, on the other hand, a great probability of friction with neutral Powers if this view should be fully enforced in practice. The compromise which was embodied in Articles IV and V of the Treaty between England and Russia of the 17th June, 1801, appears to be a very reasonable one. This, however, is a matter which would have to be arranged by Treaty if it is considered that the practice of convoy is still sufficiently in vogue to render such a settlement desirable.

In the meantime, we cannot recommend any modification of the directions contained in the "Manual of Naval Prize Law," as they correctly express the view of international law which has always been maintained in this country, except in the case of relaxation by special Treaty.

We think, however, that British Commanders should be directed, as a matter of courtesy, in the first instance, to apply to the officer of the convoying vessel, in order that he or his representative may be present at the search.

Whether a protest should be lodged merely, or the right of search insisted on, must depend on the circumstances of the case. The latter course may mean war with a neutral Power, but there is no doubt that, according to the English view of international law, the cruiser would be justified in insisting on the right of search, and seizing the ships if resistance should be offered.

We think that it will be probably better that special instructions should be issued at the commencement of each war to Her Majesty's cruisers as to the line of conduct which they should adopt in the case of convoys. It is a question of policy whether, and how far, the strict rights, which this country regards itself as possessing, should be enforced, and the answer to this question may depend on the views and the dispositions of the neutral Powers with whose vessels Her Majesty's cruisers may have to deal. We think, however, that a sentence might be added to Article 148 of the "Manual" cautioning Commanders of cruisers, as a matter of comity, not to seize the convoying man-of-war unless under very special circumstances (see per Lord Stowell in "The Maria," 1 C. Rob. 376).

Carriage of Enemy Military Persons by Neutral Vessels.

Foreign Office, March 16, 1900.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to inform you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, that his attention has been drawn to the terms in which the question of the carriage of Enemy Military Persons by the vessels of a neutral State is treated in "A Manual of Naval Prize Law," by Professor T. E. Holland—a work which, as you are aware, was issued by authority of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and supplied by them for the use of officers of Her Majesty's navy in time of war.

The Manual lays down (section 88) that "a Commander should detain any Neutral Vessel which is being actually used as a transport for the carriage of soldiers or sailors by the Enemy;" (section 89) that "the vessel should be detained, although she may have on board only a small number of Enemy Officers, or even of Civil Officials, sent out on the public service of the Enemy and at the public expense;" (section 91) that "It will be no excuse for carrying Enemy Military Persons that the Master is ignorant of their character;" and (section 95) that "The Penalty for carrying Enemy Military Persons is the confiscation of the Vessel and of such part of the Cargo as belongs to her Owner."

It will be convenient to consider what other writers on International Law have said on the subjects thus dealt with by Professor Holland.

Heffter, for instance ("Le Droit International de l'Europe;" 4ᵉ édition Française; augmentée et annotée par F. Heinrich Geffcken, 1883, pp. 395–97) observes that "there can be no doubt that the voluntary transport by a neutral 'de soldats, matelots, ou autres hommes destinés au service militaire d'un belligérant' authorizes the seizure and confiscation of the carrying vessel and its cargo as far as that cargo is connected with the hostile object of the voyage."

Ortolan (as quoted by Calvo) expresses the opinion that "a neutral vessel which carries 'des gens de guerre' for a belligerent State loses its character of neutrality, and may be treated just like a belligerent."

Calvo ("Le Droit International Théorique et Pratique;" 4th edition, 1888; vol. v, pp. 74–78) also considers that the carrying vessel may be seized and confiscated, and the men on board made prisoners.

Wheaton ("Elements of International Law;" edited, with Notes, by R. H. Dana; 8th edition, 1866, pp. 630–59) lays it down that "a neutral vessel which is used as a transport for the enemy's forces is subject to confiscation if captured by the opposite belligerent." He also expressly adds: "nor is it material in the judgment of the Prize Court whether the master be ignorant of the character of the service on which he is engaged."

In his notes to the above work, Dana quotes several cases bearing on this point, and says that the following doctrines may be deduced from them:—

"1. If a vessel is in the actual service of the enemy as a transport, she is to be condemned.

"2. If a vessel is not in the enemy's service, still, if the master knowingly takes for the enemy's Government, or its Agents, persons or papers of such a character and destination that the transporting of them under the neutral flag is an actual belligerent service to the State, it is an unneutral act, which forfeits the vessel. If he avers ignorance of the character of the persons or papers, all the circumstances are to be considered, for the purpose of determining not only the truth of his averment, but whether his ignorance, though real, is excusable. He is bound to a high degree of diligence in such cases, and, if the circumstances fairly put him on inquiry, which he does not properly pursue, he will not be excused.

Bluntschli ("Le Droit International Codifié;" 3rd edition; Paris, 1881, p. 474) is of opinion that neither the troops nor the officers of a belligerent may be carried by a neutral, and that this applies to small numbers as well as to large, and to volunteers no less than to regular soldiers. But he says nothing about the confiscation of the vessel as a penalty for carrying such persons, and only admits that the enemy military persons may themselves be taken prisoners.

Hall ("Treatise on International Law;" 4th edition, 1895, pp. 701, 702) is the writer who, perhaps, speaks most strongly of all in favour of the right of the belligerent, maintaining that "in the transport of persons in the service of a belligerent, the essence of the offence consists in the intent to help him; if, therefore, this intent can in any way be proved, it is not only immaterial whether the service rendered is important or slight, but it is not even necessary that it shall have an immediate local relation to warlike operations. It is possible for a neutral carrier to become affected by responsibility for a transport effected to a neutral port, and it may perhaps be enough to establish liability that the persons so conveyed shall be in civil employment."

Subsequently, however (p. 708), in the same Chapter ("Analogues of Contraband") the following passage occurs in connection with the case of the mail-steamer "Trent":—

"It is to be regretted that Lord Russell did not address himself to the refutation of the doctrine that persons can be contraband of war. For the reasons mentioned above, however, there need be no hesitation in rejecting it. In the words of Mr. Bernard, 'it is incorrect to speak of the conveyance of persons in the military or civil employment of a belligerent as if it were the same thing as the conveyance of contraband of war, or as if the same rules were applicable to it. It is a different thing, and the rules applicable to it are different.' If a vessel is so hired by a belligerent that he has entire control over it to the extent of his special needs, the ship itself is confiscable as having acquired an enemy character, and the persons on board become prisoners of war. If, on the other hand, belligerent persons, whatever their quality, go on board a neutral vessel as simple passengers to the place whither she is in any case bound, the ship remains neutral, and covers the persons on board with the protection of her neutral character."

The following questions appear to arise from a study of the foregoing extracts:—

1. Are persons in the civil employment of the enemy included among those the carriage of whom renders a neutral vessel liable to seizure?

No doubt, in the case of the "Orozembo" (6, Chr. Robinson's Reports, p. 430), which was decided in 1807, Sir W. Scott inclined to the opinion that the same penalties attached to the carriage of civil servants of the belligerent State.

Dana, however, observes, with reference to this judgment: "But it is plain, he confines this dictum to the case before him; that is, the case of a vessel let out to a belligerent Government to carry whatever persons it may designate. Even as a dictum it does not touch the case of a neutral vessel not let out as a transport and merely having civil officers of a belligerent Government on board, without other circumstances tending to show the vessel herself to be in the enemy's service."

It is to be noted, in support of this view, that in most of the Treaties concluded on this subject the words are "military persons in actual service," or persons "actuellement au service des dits ennemis et se transportant pour être employés comme militaires dans leurs flottes ou dans leurs armées."

Moreover, even Hall goes no further in the passage just quoted than to observe that "it may, perhaps, be enough to establish liability that the persons so employed shall be in civil employment."

2. Does the number of persons, military or otherwise, carried on board the vessel, make any difference in the guilt of the carrying vessel?

The general opinion would appear to be that it does not, the question being rather one of fact.

3. Does the fact that the vessel has been made to carry the persons in question, either by force or fraud, make any difference in her guilt?

English and American writers for the most part incline to the view that it does not, while foreigners lay stress on the necessity of the transport being of a voluntary character.

It is to be observed, however, that as a line of steamers has agencies in every large town, unless military persons come in such numbers as to betray themselves, the master of a modern liner has no means of finding out the character and the intentions of his passengers.

4. May military persons in actual service be taken from neutral vessels without judicial proceedings being instituted against these vessels?

Dana (notes to edition of Wheaton, already quoted) observes that there are strong arguments in favour of such a course, but that it is "out of harmony with the practice of modern times in cognate cases. The proper rule would seem to be that, if there is no probable cause for thinking the vessel in fault for carrying them, and as no prize proceedings can be had against the persons, the persons should not be taken out of the vessel. But if the case warranted proceedings against the vessel on grounds of probable cause to believe her in fault, she should be brought in for proceedings, and the persons held as prisoners of war, on the responsibility of the State to the neutral flag, until the case is determined.

"Still, it must be admitted that the subject is an embarrassing one, whether the right to take such persons be generally conceded, or be coupled with prize proceedings against the vessel, and seems to present a case for some special proceedings of a peculiar character, arranged by Convention on national guarantees."

And Hautefeuille, in his pamphlet on "Questions of Maritime International Law," seems "to admit that, by force of the old international law, modified by Treaties, a belligerent can take from a neutral vessel 'military persons . . . . actually in the service of the enemy,' without making the vessel a prize, but no other persons."

Such a course, indeed, presents considerable advantages on the ground of policy as contrasted with that of taking the vessel into a Prize Court and seeking to have her condemned. No doubt many writers uphold the theory that, in the event of the captured vessel being proved guilty, her condemnation is a just consequence of guilt; but this theory was enunciated at a time when the value and size of trading vessels could in nowise be compared to the value and size of the trading vessels of the present day, and the confiscation of one of the large ocean-going steamers now employed, in consequence of the presence on board of perhaps half-a-dozen enemy military persons, might seem a punishment out of all proportion to the offence committed, and might not be acquiesced in by the neutral Power to whom she belonged.

5. Is the situation of either the port of departure or the port of destination to be taken into consideration?

Hautefeuille also declares that in no case can military persons be contraband of war "if a neutral vessel is sailing between neutral ports."

Dana (notes to edition of Wheaton, already quoted), on the other hand, lays it down that "If the character of the service be admitted to be unneutral, it is of course immaterial how far the neutral takes the troops on their way, and whether both or either of the termini of his trip are in belligerent territory."

6. To render a vessel liable to confiscation, or to justify the removal from on board of persons carried by her, must such persons be in the actual military employ of the belligerent State, or will it suffice that they should be merely volunteers on their way to join his forces?

Bluntschli, in a passage already quoted, maintains that a neutral is forbidden to carry volunteers no less than regular soldiers; but Perels ("Manuel de Droit Maritime International;" French edition, 1884, pp. 286, 287) observes that "Il ne s'agit pas des individus qui se proposent seulement de s'engager dans la flotte ou dans l'armée ennemie, mais de gens qui en font réellement partie; donc, des soldats ou des marins au sens propre du mot, recrues déjà enrôlées et hommes astreints au service militaire."

7. If a ship has been detained on other grounds than those of carrying enemy military persons—for instance, on account of a suspected cargo which subsequently proves to be innocent—may the fact of there being distinctly enemy military persons on board be taken into consideration in the assessment of compensation or otherwise?

I have to request you to take the above observations and questions into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion thereon, as well as with any general observations which you may have to offer on the subject under discussion.

A collection of extracts from various writers on international law, which bear on the subject under discussion, is appended for convenience of reference.

Report.

1. In our opinion, persons in the civil employment of the enemy are not included among those the character of whom renders a neutral vessel liable to seizure, unless they are in some way connected with the prosecution of the war. The test is whether the military operations of the enemy are being assisted. A person in the civil employment of the enemy may be so associated with the conduct of the war as to render his carriage an unneutral act. Whether he is so associated is a question of fact which must be decided according to the circumstances in each case, and it is impossible to lay down any general rule. Ordinarily speaking it is the carriage of military persons which is obnoxious.

Of course, if the vessel itself has been taken into the enemy's service it may be liable to seizure upon this ground, even though the purpose was the carriage of merely civil functionaries.

2. The number of persons carried on board the vessel does not per se make any difference in the guilt of the carrying vessel, but it may be a most important element in determining whether the vessel should or should not be forfeited. The carriage of say 1,000 men in the military service of the enemy would raise an almost irresistible presumption that those responsible for the conduct of the ship knew what they were doing. On the other hand, one General may be of more importance to the enemy than 10,000 or 20,000 men. But, of course, it is quite possible in the case of one individual that the ship-owner and his agents were ignorant of the errand for which he had taken his passage.

3. If a vessel has been taken into the service of the enemy, it seems to us that Lord Stowell's doctrine, that she has been so taken by force or fraud makes no difference, is sound. She is an enemy vessel and, as such, subject to seizure. But, if the facts stop short of showing that the vessel was in the enemy's service, we think that the fact that the shipowner and his agents were ignorant of the character of the persons they were carrying has a most material bearing on the question whether the ship should be forfeited.

The owners of a mail steam-ship are in no way to blame if a person in the military service of the enemy has, without their knowledge, taken a ticket as an ordinary passenger, and we think it impossible to maintain the view that such a circumstance would render the vessel liable to be condemned.

4. We are of opinion that military persons in actual service cannot, in the present state of international law, be taken out of neutral vessels without the institution of proceedings against these vessels. It would be extremely reasonable that such a practice should be established, but if this is to be done it must be effected by Convention.

5. The situation of both the port of departure and the port of destination may be important upon this question. The real point to be determined, is whether the destination of the persons in the service of she enemy is such as to enable them to render service in the course of the military operations. If their destination is hostile, it is immaterial that their port of departure was neutral. If their port of destination is that ordinarily employed to obtain access to the belligerent forces of the enemy it is, in our opinion, immaterial that it is a neutral port.

In the case of an inland State which has access to the sea only by a particular port, we think that military persons on their way to that port may be treated for this purpose as having a hostile destination, even though that port be neutral. The question, however, is one of degree, and to justify seizure such a neutral port must, in our opinion, be proximately connected with the belligerent—for instance, we do not think that if Russia were at war with the United States a packet-boat running between Dover and Ostend could be properly stopped on the ground that she had on board some Russian officers who intended to proceed from Ostend to Russia by rail. As the question is one of degree no attempt should be made to lay down a rigid rule, but the matter should be dealt with by special instructions having regard to the circumstances of each particular war.

6. We think it is not necessary that such persons should be in the actual military employment of the belligerent State, but that it is sufficient that they should be on their way to join its forces, if it may reasonably be expected that their services will be accepted on arrival. No sound distinction can be drawn between the case of persons actually enrolled as recruits and the case of persons on their way to join the enemy, knowing that they will be accepted as recruits as soon as they arrive.

7. In answer to this question we beg to refer to our Report of the 25th January last. In order to be taken into account the carriage of such persons must be made a head of charge against the vessel in Prize Court proceedings.

8. By way of general observation, we have only to add the following:—There is great difficulty in laying down positively the rule of international law upon the subject now under discussion, owing to the fact that the circumstances of the carriage of passengers at sea are now quite different from what they were when the principles of international law upon this subject are supposed to have been established. During the great war with France when soldiers or officers were to be conveyed by sea it was generally necessary to engage a vessel specially to perform the service. At the present day the seas are covered by fleets of liners carrying on an enormous passenger traffic, and, even in the most recent Treaties, the vast difference which this change must make in the practical application of the rules of international law is hardly adequately recognized.

In some works of authority, for instance in Dr. Geffcken's contribution to Holtzendorff's Collection, it is laid down that the carriage of military persons as ordinary passengers is in no way obnoxious to the rules of international law upon this head; and Hall would appear to share the same view. This view appears to us to be unsound in principle. It cannot be that impunity is extended to the carriage of military persons for the enemy merely on the ground that they are conveyed as ordinary passengers, though this may form an important element in determining whether the penalty of confiscation is to be visited on the vessel. On the other hand, it must be recognized that great inconvenience will be occasioned if a liner is to be brought into port merely because, among her passengers, there are one or two persons in the military employment of the enemy, and this inconvenience is intensified in the case of mail steam-ships, the claim of which to favourable treatment was emphatically asserted by this country in one passage of the despatch sent by Earl Russell in the case of the "Trent." Unless some agreement be arrived at by Convention, the point is one on which no rigid rule ought to be laid down. A good deal must be left to special instructions in the case of each war, and to the exercise of tact and forbearance by the visiting officers.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Control by neutral State of telegraph cables in time of war, &c.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, July 31, 1900.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith, for your consideration, a copy of a case which has been drawn up for your opinion by the Solicitor to the Post Office, in consultation with the Legal Adviser of this Office and with the Legal Assistant Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, acting on behalf of their respective Departments, relative to the control to be exercised by a neutral State, in time of war, over telegraph cables, and with regard to other kindred matters.

I am to request that you will, in due course, favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the various points raised in the printed case inclosed, viz.:—

1. Whether it is expedient to introduce into landing licences, or other instruments regulating the relations of the Government to private Telegraph Companies, any clause having reference to the establishment of a censorship over the messages transmitted, with a view especially to the maintenance of neutrality, or whether the imposition of any censorship which may be desired should be left to the operation of a comprehensive emergency clause providing for censorship as well as compulsory possession.

2. Whether, in the event of a war in which this country is neutral, direction should be given to the telegraphists of the State, and to the private Telegraph Companies, with a view to the exercise of a censorship, or whether any improper use of telegraphs should be left to prevention, in the rare cases in which it may arise, by other means.

3. Whether, having regard to the practice of the Spanish-American war, it is desirable in any future case to make any attempt to prevent the use of neutral telegraphs—

(a.) By belligerent cruisers as distinguished from despatch-boats;

(b.) By belligerent cruisers for the dispatch of messages in cypher or of other messages, the object of which is to influence warlike operations, as distinguished from other messages, and particularly from messages giving a narrative of past operations bonâ fide intended for general publication as news.

4. With reference to the power of a belligerent to protect himself by cutting a cable, whether this power is limited to a cable—

(a.) Connecting two stations of a belligerent, or the station of a neutral Power with the station of a belligerent;

Or extends to a cable connecting stations—

(b.) Of two neutral Powers; or

(c.) Situate on different territories of the same neutral Power;

And whether, in every case, or what cases, the right of cutting may be exercised in the waters of a belligerent only, or also on the high seas; and

5. Generally.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

Report.

1. In our opinion it would not be expedient in granting licences for the Government to reserve powers of censorship or taking possession for the purpose of enforcing neutrality. Such a reservation would be open to the construction that the use of a cable in neutral territory by a belligerent was a breach of neutrality, and if such a power were reserved it might create difficulties in the event of it not being thought advisable or necessary to exercise it.

2. We are of opinion that no such direction should be given. Any improper use of telegraphs should be dealt with when the case arises.

We would point out that in the war between Spain and America no difficulty seems to have arisen in taking this course, as advised by the Law Officers in May 1898.

3. We do not think that anything that occurred in the Spanish-American war renders necessary a modification of the opinion of the Law Officers in May 1898, in which the subject is dealt with. (See also No. 32 as to definition of "Despatch-boat.")

4.—(a.) We are of opinion that a belligerent can protect himself by cutting a cable connecting two stations of a belligerent, or the station of a neutral Power with the station of a belligerent, either in the waters of a belligerent or in the high seas, but cannot cut a cable in waters within the territorial jurisdiction of a neutral.

(b) and (c.) We are of opinion that in these cases a belligerent should not ordinarily cut a cable at all. We cannot, however, lay down as an inflexible rule that the right to cut such a cable on the high seas cannot be exercised; it might conceivably form an essential link of communication, the interruption of which might be essential.

INTERNATIONAL TELEGRAPHS IN TIME OF WAR.

Case for the Opinion of the Law Officers.

(Confidential.)

THE Law Officers were consulted in May 1898, during the Spanish-American war, on several questions relating to the use by or for the purposes of belligerents of telegraph cables worked from or passing over the territories of neutral States. The advice then given (see Report to Foreign Office of the 7th May, 1898), was based upon the principle that—

"There is no general obligation by international law on the part of a neutral Government to prevent the transmission by its subjects, or from its territories, of the messages of belligerents by telegraphic lines or cables. Such messages may be carried, subject to the risk that the other belligerent may protect himself by cutting the cable on the high seas or in the enemy's territorial waters."

The statement of this principle was, however, qualified and illustrated by expressions of opinion with reference to particular cases. Thus, it was said that—

"In the case of a belligerent cruiser putting into one of the ports of a neutral Power, there is an exception to the general rule. It is a term of her admission that she shall not use the neutral port in furtherance of hostile operations. We therefore think that the neutral Government should prevent so far as practicable, and authorized by municipal law, the use even of a telegraph worked by a Commercial Company for the transmission from a neutral port, by or on behalf of such a cruiser, of messages in cypher, or of other messages the object of which is to direct or influence warlike operations.

"But we do not think that a neutral Government is bound, even in this case, to object to the transmission of messages which have no relation to the proceedings of the belligerents, or of messages not in cypher the object of which is to give a narrative of past operations bonâ fide intended for general publication as news."

The Law Officers also expressed the opinion that the exception relative to the use of a cable in a neutral port by a belligerent cruiser did not extend to a mere despatch-boat in the service of a belligerent.

As to the means of giving effect to the principles laid down, the Law Officers advised that—

"The Commander of the cruiser should be informed that it is a condition of being permitted to use the port that he should abstain from transmitting or procuring the transmission of any telegrams relating to the conduct of warlike operations. The Company should also be informed of the views of the Government, and would probably itself establish a censorship in accordance with those views of the telegrams tendered for transmission.

"There is, however, no general power on the part of Her Majesty's Government to control private Telegraph Companies. The power is to require belligerent vessels not to use them."

Upon receipt of this advice, and on an inquiry from the Post Office, the Foreign Office informed the Post Office (by letter of the 21st May, 1898) that in the opinion of Lord Salisbury—

"It was unnecessary to issue any instructions with regard to the control of telegrams of belligerents to the officers of the Post Office engaged in the collection, transmission, or delivery of inland or foreign telegrams in the United Kingdom, or to communicate on the subject with any of the Cable Companies transacting foreign business in this country."

Meanwhile, on the 17th May, the Colonial Office issued a Circular to the Governors of Colonies communicating rules (founded on the Law Officers' advice) to be observed during the war with respect to the use of telegraph cables. These rules stated that—

"The fact of a state of war existing between the United States and Spain is not of itself sufficient to justify the establishment of a censorship, so as to prevent the transmission of messages of belligerents; nor does it justify a Colonial Governor in taking possession of the lines of a Cable Company, or assuming control of the transmission of messages by such a Company. Should, however, special circumstances occur, which, in his opinion, render control expedient, it is desirable that he should telegraph to the Secretary of State for instructions.

"A belligerent man-of-war should be prevented from using the telegraph for the purpose of sending, whether in cypher or otherwise, messages of which the object is to direct or influence warlike operations.

"A belligerent man-of-war may, however, use the telegraph for messages which do not relate to the proceedings of the belligerents or for messages which are not in cypher narrating past operations, and bonâ fide intended for general publication as news.

"The officers in command of belligerent men-of-war should be informed that it is a condition of their being permitted to use a colonial port that they shall abstain from transmitting or procuring the transmission of any telegrams which concern the conduct of warlike operations. This condition should also be communicated to the Telegraph Companies.

"Vessels which merely carry despatches may be permitted to telegraph, and should not, except under special circumstances, be subjected to the same conditions as belligerent men-of-war with respect to not using the cable. If any special circumstances arise, a telegram should be sent to the Secretary of State asking for instructions. Consular officers have a right to free communication with their Governments, whether in clear or in cypher; but if there should be reasonable grounds for believing that such an officer is abusing this right, and is sending messages which relate to the conduct of warlike operations on behalf of a belligerent man-of-war, the facts of the case should be immediately reported to the Secretary of State by telegraph."

Before these instructions had been received, the attitude to be adopted towards a belligerent cruiser seeking to use a cable at a British port had become a practical question. On the 2nd May a Spanish man-of-war put into Bridgetown, in Barbados. The Governor thereupon, after an exchange of telegrams with the Colonial Office, put in force a provision (section 15) of the West India and Panamá Telegraph Company's Act (No. 27 of 1890), and established a censorship, through the Company's clerk in charge, over the telegrams tendered for transmission by the Company's cable. During the existence of the censorship a telegram in cypher was handed in from the United States' Consul to the State Department at Washington. The telegram was handed to the Governor, and subsequently interpreted. Finding that it contained information of the arrival of a Spanish troop-ship, the Governor declined to allow it to be sent. During the same day the Spanish Consul stated that he was desirous of sending two telegrams, one to the Minister in Madrid, and one to friends of the Commander of the Spanish war-ship. Upon being informed, however, that they must be submitted for the perusal of the Governor, the Consul abandoned his intention.

In consequence of this occurrence, the Law Officers, at the request of the Colonial Office, applied the principle laid down in their opinion of the 7th May to the case in question, and advised—

"(a.) That the Governor ought not to have instituted a censorship merely because a belligerent man-of-war put into the port.

"(b.) That the Governor had no other power (i.e., other than the power conferred by the local statutory provision under which he established the censorship) to control the cable. He had power to make it a term of the admission of the Spanish vessel (to the port) that the cable should not be used for warlike purposes, and could enforce the performance of this condition by preventing, if necessary, access to the telegraph office by the Captain or his subordinates."

It thus appears clear that the Law Officers in 1898 took the view that Her Majesty's Government had no power, save in pursuance of some express provision of a Statute or other instrument binding the Company, to control private Telegraph Companies in the use which they might choose to allow of their cables or lines. This conclusion makes it of some importance to consider what are the special provisions for control now existing, and whether further provision in that behalf should be made.

The Telegraph Act of 1863 contains a provision, in relation to Companies to which the Act applied, to the following effect:—

"52. Where, in the opinion of one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, an emergency has arisen in which it is expedient for the public service that Her Majesty's Government should have control over the transmission of messages by the Company's telegraphs, the Secretary of State, by warrant under his hand, may direct and cause the Company's works, or any part thereof to be taken possession of in the name and on behalf of Her Majesty, and to be used for Her Majesty's service, and subject thereto for such ordinary service as may seem fit; or may direct and authorize such persons as he thinks fit to assume the control of the transmission of messages by the Company's telegraphs, either wholly or partly, and in such manner as he directs. Any such warrant shall not have effect for a longer time than one week from the issuing thereof; but the Secretary of State may issue successive warrants from week to week as long as in his opinion such emergency continues. The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury shall pay to the Company, as compensation for any loss of profit sustained by the Company by reason of the exercise by the Secretary of State of any of the powers of the present section, out of money to be provided by Parliament for the purpose, such sum as may be settled between the Secretary of State and the Company by agreement, or in case of difference by arbitration, such arbitration to be conducted in manner provided in the last foregoing section, the Secretary of State being only substituted for the Board of Trade."

The Telegraph Act of 1863 applied only to Companies authorized previously or subsequently to 1863, by special Act of Parliament, to construct and maintain telegraphs.

But by "The Telegraph Act Amendment Act, 1866," the provision just quoted was applied to "all incorporated Companies, existing or future, constituted with the object of carrying on the business of constructing, maintaining, or working telegraphs, and to the works of those Companies."

A clause relating to the possession of cables in an emergency has also been inserted in many landing licences granted by the Board of Trade, in Colonial licences and Statutes, and in contracts by which the Treasury have subsidized Cable Companies. Specimens of these provisions are annexed to this case. It will be seen that they differ considerably in wording, and that while most forms of the clause seem to deal with censorship only as an incident of the possession of the cables, one or two—such as the provision in the Act of 1863 and that in "The Indian Telegraph Act, 1885"—contemplate a censorship as an alternative to taking possession.

In all instances the clause relates to cases of emergency, and this expression has generally been interpreted to relate to a war or some civic commotion directly affecting the United Kingdom or some other part of the Empire. Probably, however, as we shall have occasion to remark at a later point in the case, it is not necessary to place so restricted an interpretation on the expression.

In connection with a recent application of the Eastern Telegraph Company to lay two new cables from Porthcurno, in Cornwall, to Gibraltar, the question arose whether, by express provision the Company should be required to institute a censorship in accordance with the directions of the Government to facilitate the discharge by this country of its obligations as a neutral in time of war, and the following clause was prepared by the Solicitor to the Post Office for consideration:—

"In case of war, the Company shall conform to such directions as may be given from time to time by the duly accredited Representative of Her Majesty's Government at any port or place in Her Majesty's dominions where the Company transacts business, with reference to the reception, transmission, or delivery of messages of a belligerent."

The clause was drawn merely to indicate the principle to be asserted, and requires revision in detail.

As the policy of inserting such a clause seemed to require some consideration, the Company were in the result allowed to take their licence without the clause, on an undertaking to agree to its subsequent insertion, if desired by Her Majesty's Government.

As international law is founded on the practise of civilized nations, the acts of the several parties during the recent Spanish-American war, and the drift of opinion which they seem to show on the question of the duties of neutrals towards belligerents, with respect to cables on neutral territory, will probably be thought to be relevant to the consideration of this question.

In the first place, then, the use of cables passing from the seat of war in the West Indies over British territory to Spain took place continuously, without remonstrance of any kind, diplomatic or otherwise, on the part of the United States.

Thus, on the 29th April, it was reported from Kingston in Jamaica that—

"The cable with Santiago de Cuba is working unceasingly, and long Spanish cypher messages are being sent and received."

(See "Standard" of May 2, 1898.)

Daily communications took place during the early part of May between Marshal Blanco, commanding in Cuba, and the Spanish Government, such communications passing viâ Jamaica and Bermuda; also between Marshal Blanco and General Macras, the Governor of Porto Rico, such communications necessarily passing viâ Jamaica.

On the 14th May (see "Standard" of that day) General Macras was enabled to announce, through this channel, the bombardment of San Juan by the Americans. Admiral Cervera, again, when he reached Santiago de Cuba, was enabled to keep in touch, viâ Jamaica and Bermuda, with the authorities in Madrid. Such communications were uninterrupted until the Santiago terminus of the cable to Jamaica fell into the hands of the Americans.

So, in the East, up to the day (2nd May) when Admiral Dewey cut the cable between Manila and Hong Kong, the messages of the Spanish Admiral and General at Manila were transmitted from that place viâ Hong Kong (i.e., over British territory) to Madrid, without remonstrance or question on the part of the United States. The same messages also passed at one point over Egyptian territory.

The action of Admiral Dewey in cutting the cable over which these messages were sent exactly confirms the opinion expressed by the Law Officers. The United States by refraining from diplomatic remonstrance, and by adopting the alternative of cutting the cable, indicated that in the opinion of the Government of that country there was no obligation on Great Britain "to prevent the transmission by its subjects or from its territories of the messages of belligerents," but that "such messages might be carried subject to the risk that the other belligerent might protect himself by cutting the cable."

We have dealt so far with messages passing between two points on the territory of one of the belligerents, and merely transmitted in their course over the territories of a neutral.

But the practice of the belligerents went further.

Jamaica was constantly used by the United States' cruisers as a point for handing in despatches. The following are reports in the press proving such use:—

"Washington, May 29.

"The Navy Department has received a despatch from Commodore Schley, brought by the 'Harvard' to Kingston, Jamaica, and thence cabled here (Washington) to the effect that he was still blockading Santiago, but whether Admiral Cervera was there or not was not definitely known."

("Daily Mail," May 30.)

"Washington, May 30.

"All doubts as to Admiral Cervera's whereabouts have been dispelled by a despatch from Commodore Schley, which was cabled from Kingston, Jamaica. Mr. Long cabled to Commodore Schley:—

"'Under no circumstances permit the Spanish to escape. Capture or destroy.'"

("Daily Mail," May 31.)

"A telegram from Kingston, Jamaica, says that there has been a rapid exchange of despatches between Commodore Schley and the Washington Government during the past thirty-six hours, and that an important movement on the part of the American squadron is expected shortly."

("Standard," June 1.)

The Island of St. Thomas was similarly used. For example, Admiral Sampson telegraphed on the 12th May to the Navy Department, Washington—

"A portion of squadron under my command reached San Juan this morning at daybreak. No armed vessels were found in the port."

("Times," May 12, 1898.)

On the 17th May it is reported from Washington that—

"A despatch from St. Thomas states that the 'Yale' had begun coaling, but was stopped suddenly by order from the authorities. On Monday evening she cleared the port and headed westward."

("Standard," May 18, 1898.)

Similarly, telegrams were sent by United States' officials at Curaçao and Hayti to the authorities at New York, either giving information as to the enemy's movements or asking for orders as to the operations of the war. In particular, Admiral Sampson is said to have sent despatches to Washington viâ Hayti. where they were handed in by a torpedo-boat, and to have announced the sinking of a ship in the channel at Santiago by similar means.

The cables at Martinique were used in like manner, as appears from the following reports:—

"Washington, May 13.

"Despatches from Captain Cotton, Commander of the 'Harvard,' best known as the former liner 'New York,' were received at the Navy Department to-day. They state that four Spanish armoured cruisers and three destroyers called at Port de France and passed St. Pierre bound northward in the direction of Cuba."

("Standard," May 14.)

"New York, May 13.

"The 'Herald' correspondent at St. Pierre, Martinique, telegraphing viâ Hayti, says that the Spanish torpedo-boat destroyer 'Furor' arrived there late on Wednesday night, but immediately put to sea again. Her arrival created tremendous excitement; about 5 o'clock on Thursday afternoon the Spanish torpedo-boat destroyer 'Terror' also arrived at St. Pierre."

"As this despatch goes," continues the correspondent, "five Spanish war-ships are in sight, bound north, apparently towards Cuba. It is believed that they are part of the Cape Verde squadron."

("Standard," May 14.)

Thus the messages of one of the belligerents were openly accepted on the territories of Great Britain, Denmark, the Netherlands, France, and the Republic of Hayti, and no diplomatic remonstrance, so far as is known, was made by the other belligerent in any case

Moreover, the messages were sent indiscriminately by the operating forces of the United States, by Consuls of the same Power, and by private individuals or representatives of the press.

As regards the telegrams sent by the forces of the States, they certainly were not "narratives of past events bonâ fide intended for publication as news," nor were they handed in by despatch-boats as distinguished from war-ships. The "Harvard" and "Yale," which are reported to have cabled important despatches from Kingston and St. Thomas, were powerful armed cruisers.

At Cap Haytien (Republic of Hayti) the despatches were taken to and from the port by a torpedo-boat.

It appears, therefore, that the authorities of Jamaica, St. Thomas, and Hayti made no endeavour to restrict the use of the cables at their ports, even to the extent and in the manner indicated by the Law Officers, and, in the case of Jamaica, the rules laid down by Mr. Chamberlain must have reached the Governor while the cables were being extensively used in the manner described.

So, again, it is clear that the Spanish naval forces used cables at Martinique (and probably also at Curaçao) for communication with Madrid—

"Madrid, May 13.

"Great excitement has been caused in official centres by the news of the arrival of the Cape Verde squadron at Martinique. It is now said that the squadron went there purposely to coal, and two large trans-Atlantic steamers waited in Martinique laden with the necessary coal to transfer to the bunkers of the war-ships. The other object of the visit of the Cape Verde fleet to Martinique was to be able to communicate with the Government, and to ascertain the whereabouts of the American squadron. Admiral Cervera now knows everything which has transpired since his departure from Cape Verde. He has full instructions, and will leave Martinique immediately for an unknown destination."

("Standard," May 14.)

"Madrid, May 14.

"A telegram from Martinique states that only one Spanish torpedo-boat destroyer, and not the whole squadron, as at first reported, entered the harbour of Port de France. This destroyer carried despatches."

("Standard," May 16.)

In the east, after the cutting of the Manila–Hong Kong cable by Admiral Dewey, all telegrams had necessarily to be sent by both belligerents from some neutral port, and the cables at Hong Kong and Labuan were freely used for the purpose; the despatches cabled were sent indiscriminately by vessels forming part of the navy of the United States and by trading steamers. The despatches were known by the British authorities directly to concern the conduct of the war (and not to be merely "narratives of past events boná fide intended for publication as general news"), since the officers dispatching them, whether on board a despatch-boat or a trading-steamer, were allowed to remain in port for the express purpose of receiving an answer from Washington or Madrid, as the case might be. The Spanish Commander also communicated through the Spanish Consul at Singapore.

Note.—This applies also to the west. See examples at Jamaica, on p. 12 of "Incidents."

The vessel which conveyed some of the most important of Admiral Dewey's despatches to Hong Kong—the "Hugh McCulloch"—though generally described as a despatch-boat, and said to be unarmed, is reckoned, in President McKinley's Message to Congress announcing the victory at Manila, as a unit in the squadron which engaged the enemy, and, at a later stage, she is stated to have taken part in the final bombardment of Manila. It is difficult, therefore, to avoid considering her as a war-ship, and, in any case, her use for the purpose of cabling despatches shows how difficult it would be to enforce the distinction between a war-ship and a despatch-boat, suggested by the opinion of the Law Officers.

Another neutral country—Egypt—was also used during the war as the terminus ad quem of the messages of a belligerent addressed by the Central Government to its officers engaged in the operations of the war. This appears from the following reports:—

"Madrid, June 27.

"Orders have been sent to Admiral Camara's squadron to proceed through the canal to Suez."

("Times," June 28.)

"Madrid, July 4.

"An official despatch says that the last vessels of Admiral Camara's squadron have passed the Suez Canal."

"Port Saïd, July 5.

"The Spanish torpedo-boats have been ordered to Messina."

"(Later.)

("Daily Telegraph," July 5.)

Not only were cables passing over, starting from, and arriving at neutral territory used during the war by one belligerent without protest from the other, but there were instances in which new arrangements, favourable to a belligerent, and involving the transmission of telegrams over the territory of a neutral, were made, with very slight, if any, objection from the other party.

The most remarkable case related to the cables of the Compagnie Française des Câbles Télégraphiques. A cable of this Company connecting Guantanamo, in Cuba (Spanish territory), with Cap Haytien, in Hayti (Republic of Hayti), was at one time cut by the Americans. Subsequently Guantanamo came into the hands of the Americans. and the French Company were allowed to restore and work the cable from Santiago to Guantanamo and thence to Cap Haytien, where it was connected with a direct cable to New York. At the Cuban end the cable was led first into a cable ship of the American fleet at Guantanamo, and afterwards into a telegraph station at the head-quarters of the American army at Santiago; and the line was worked under a military censorship established by the American operating forces. Thus, a Company of neutral nationality became the instrument of conveying telegraphic despatches between the forces and the head-quarters of one of the belligerents, and the territory of another neutral was used for the transmission of such despatches. The case was carried even further, for an intermediate office (Mole St. Nicholas, on the territory of the Republic of Hayti) was cut out to expedite communication for the benefit of the belligerent; and a number of new offices were opened—on the line worked for the benefit of the belligerent—on the territory of the other belligerent, viz., in Cuba. The opening of these offices was communicated to the International Telegraph Bureau at Berne by the North Atlantic Cable Companies, as though it were a perfectly regular proceeding. Not till this was done was any protest elicited from Spain; and then it related only to the opening of new offices on her territory without her consent. Spain is not known to have made any representation to the French Government as to the action of the French Company, or any representation to the Republic of Hayti as to the use of its territory for the transmission of telegrams by a cable which had been placed, by exceptional means, at the disposal of the United States.

The other case is less striking. The West India and Panama Cable Company—an English Company—had, when the war commenced, a cable working from Jamaica (British territory) to Martinique (French territory) through Ponce, in Porto Rico (Spanish territory); but Ponce itself was not a telegraph office, the two cables being joined in the Telegraph Hut and through communication afforded. When the forces of the United States occupied Ponce, a telegraph office was opened by the Company at that place, and thus a Company of a neutral State and the territories of two neutral States were used to transmit telegrams from an office opened especially for the convenience of one of the belligerents. No protest was, however, made by Spain, the other belligerent.

No doubt, however, the weakness of the belligerent whose interests were prejudicially affected by these novel telegraphic arrangements must be taken into account in estimating the value of the incidents.

At the commencement of the war, General Greely, the Chief Signal Officer of the United States, issued an order to the Transatlantic Cable Company working in the United States. This order (dated the 12th May, 1898, and printed at p. 28 of the paper entitled "Incidents of the Spanish-American War")* forbade the transmission of telegrams falling within certain specified classes on the ground that they were in fact messages of an enemy, and consequently contraband of war. The order is somewhat ambiguous in some of its expressions, but it appears to be governed by the concluding paragraph which refers to "the propriety of American and foreign Corporations abstaining from the transmission within American jurisdiction of information, contraband of war, to the enemy of the United States," and the order seems to have had for its main object the prohibition of Spanish messages or messages useful to Spain over the land-lines and cables of the Companies actually connected with United States' territory.

Accordingly, the Cable Companies which are constituted under the laws of neutral States e.g., Great Britain and France, construed the order as relating only to the short cables actually landed in the United States and the land-lines to towns in the States, and not to the main Transatlantic cables, laid, for the most part, between points in British territory—in one case between points in French territory. They consequently declined to transmit official Spanish telegrams or messages useful to Spain as defined by the order to and from places in the United States, but continued throughout the war to transmit such telegrams across the Atlantic between points in British or French territory, e.g., Canada and Newfoundland (British) and St. Pierre (French), on the one hand, and Ireland, Great Britain, and France on the other. In particular, telegrams were being sent between Spain and the West Indies viâ Halifax, in Nova Scotia, and Bermuda.

The two Cable Companies which are constituted in and controlled from America (the Commercial Cable Company and the Western Union Company) on the other hand, did, after General Greely's order, refuse to transmit Spanish Government telegrams across the Atlantic, and such telegrams were diverted to the cables of the British Companies.

The United States' Government acquiesced in the construction put upon its order by the British and French Cable Companies, and no attempt was made to coerce these Companies (e.g., by seizing their property in United States' territory or cutting their cables in United States' waters) into a complete boycotting of Spanish Government messages or messages useful to Spain.

Indeed, the incident seems to show that the action of the United States' Government was founded less on any doctrine relating to the duties of neutral States than on the view that private trading Companies enjoying advantages at the hands of a belligerent should not use those advantages for the benefit of the other belligerent. It is in this spirit that General Greely comments upon the conduct of the foreign Cable Companies in his Report, made after the conclusion of the war. "The French Telegraphic Cable Company," he says, "gave the strongest possible evidence of loyal and faithful compliance with the requirements of the United States, acceptable evidence that the hospitality shown by the Government to this Company was appreciated. During the critical period in Cuba, this Company strove to fulfil its obligations as a neutral Corporation, although most trying and difficult conditions obtained, with a Spanish military censor at its office in Santiago, and an American military censor at Playa del Este." (See "Incidents," p. 48).

General Greely's order and the action taken upon it also show how the intimate commercial relations between civilized nations at the present day make it difficult to interfere,† in the interests of a belligerent, with the great channels of communication.

The Spanish Government made no attempt, by exercising any power it possessed over the Cable Companies using its territories, to prevent the transmission of American official messages through neutral, or even at one point, through Spanish territory.

It may, therefore, confidently be said, that every incident of the late war supports the principle laid down by the Law Officers, that it is not the duty of a neutral State to prevent the transmission, by telegraphic lines or cables on its territory, of the messages of belligerents.

It is, however, to be borne in mind, that, owing to the situation of the belligerents, each found it in his interests to use telegraphs on neutral territories. Consequently, neither would perhaps be likely to complain of the facilities afforded to the other in this connection.

† The British Government has, during the war with the South African Republic, stopped at Aden code or cypher telegrams for the whole of East and South Africa.

As the obverse of the freedom of neutral telegraphs, the Law Officers laid down, that a belligerent "might protect himself by cutting 'the cable' (used to carry his adversary's messages) on the high seas or in the enemy's territorial waters."

It is interesting to note to what extent the practice of the late war illustrates this view.

In giving their advice, the Law Officers made no distinction between the cutting of a cable connecting—

1. Two stations of the enemy;
2. A station of the enemy and the station of a neutral;
3. Two neutral stations.

The war furnishes many instances of the cutting of cables, in the first category; e.g., that between Santiago de Cuba and Manzanillo (Cuba), and that between Manila and Iloilo (Philippine Islands), both of which cables were cut by the United States.

The United States also cut cables in the second category, namely, between Manila and Hong Kong, and between Santiago de Cuba (Spain) and Hayti (Republic of Hayti). They also attempted to cut the cables between Santiago de Cuba (Spain) and Jamaica (British), and they succeeded in cutting one, but apparently it was a "dead" cable which had been abandoned. (See "Incidents," pp. 23 and 46.)

Great Britain made no remonstrance against the cutting of the Manila–Hong Kong cable, or the avowed intention of the United States to cut the Santiago–Jamaica cables, if they could.

But no cable in the third category was cut by either belligerent, though Spain at one time talked of isolating the United States by cutting all the transatlantic cables.

These cables could not have been cut so as to isolate the United States except by cutting them between two stations of neutrals; and the suggestion that they might be so cut evoked some little comment in the press of this country. But no serious attempt was made to act upon the suggestion.

All the cables cut seem to have been cut in territorial waters and not on the high seas. The Hong Kong–Manila cable was cut in Manila Bay; and, in cutting the cable loops along the coast of Cuba the United States sometimes lost heavily from the fire of the forts.

It appears that the restriction of cable cutting by the United States to the territorial waters of the enemy was not accidental, but was founded on the deliberate opinion of the Chief Signal Officer—doubtless, in its turn, based on legal advice. In his Report, General Greely says: "Long before the expedition sailed, the Chief Signal Officer had carefully considered the question of cable cutting, and had announced his official opinion that the destruction of a cable, even though the property of a neutral, was fully justified, provided that operations were confined within the territorial jurisdiction of the enemy."

The whole paragraph which commences with this sentence is interesting as showing the view taken by the United States' authorities. (See "Incidents," p. 46.)

Professor Holland, the well-known authority on international law, in a letter to the "Times," expressed the opinion that the cutting of a cable between a belligerent and a neutral was lawful in territorial waters, but not on the high seas, and that under no circumstances was the cutting of a cable between two neutral stations permissible. (See "Times" of the 24th May.) The views and practice of the United States were in accordance with Professor Holland's dicta.

In considering the law as to the cutting of cables the analogy of the seizure of vessels carrying enemy's despatches naturally occurs to the mind. Indeed, the Law Officers to some extent founded their opinion on this analogy.

It is to be noted, however, that a private ship carrying despatches is only liable to seizure if found with the despatches on board. The analogy, if it should hold good, would therefore only justify the cutting of the cable at the time when the message was passing (obviously an impossibility), or the cutting of a cable by which messages were habitually sent. On the other hand, the cutting might, by analogy, clearly take place on the high seas, as the right to seize ships for carrying contraband is exercised more particularly there.

It is interesting to consider the question of compensation by the light of the supposed analogy.

It has never been suggested that the owner of a ship carrying the enemy's despatches could claim compensation for the seizure of his ship by the State affected—in fact, such an idea involves a contradiction in terms. The penalty he pays for serving one of the belligerents is the forfeiture of his property to the other.

Yet it has been suggested that the owners of a cable serving a belligerent where such owners are subjects of a neutral State, have a claim to compensation against the other belligerent if as an act of war he cuts their cable; and it has even been discussed whether, if the cable belongs to the subject of the enemy, such subject may not have some claim to compensation on the ground that the destruction of private property, if not demanded by the necessities of war, is illegal. The Attorney-General of the United States, however, is stated to have rejected the claims of British Companies to compensation, basing his ruling on the doctrine that the right of a belligerent to destroy property within the enemy's territories includes the right to damage, in lawful hostilities, the property of neutrals. (See "Standard" of the 6th February, 1899; "Incidents," p. 26.)

These conflicting views and suggestions seem to show that the analogy between the carriage of despatches by the private vessel of a neutral, and the transmission of telegrams over cables belonging to the subjects of a neutral, cannot be pushed too far. Indeed, the Law Officers point out, in their opinion of the 7th May, 1898, that there is a fundamental distinction between the deliberate acceptance of despatches by a ship, the ordinary duty of which is not to carry such despatches at all, and the acceptance of the telegrams of a belligerent by a State or a Company for transmission, in turn with other messages, over cables open to all the world.

Packets of a regular mail-line have never been considered in fault for carrying a belligerent's despatches. (See Hall's "International Law," 4th edition, 703.)

At the recent Peace Conference the Representative of Denmark proposed that an amendment should be made in the project of the Brussels Conference to the effect that landing cables within territorial waters should be placed in the same category as land telegraphs. The result of this would have been to declare that such cables might be seized or destroyed by an army of occupation, even though belonging to Companies or private persons, but that the material should be restored and indemnities provided upon the declaration of peace. The proposal was first amended by an omission of any reference to territorial waters, the wording of the clause running, "les télégraphes de terre y compris les câbles d'atterrissage;" and subsequently, upon instructions from the Home Government, the British Delegate asked the Danish Delegate to abandon his proposal, on the ground that it had been agreed to exclude naval matters from the deliberations of the Conference.

If, then, the practice of the late war confirms the view that it is not the duty of neutrals to prevent the transmission of the telegraphic messages of belligerents, but to leave belligerents to protect themselves, and if the drift of opinion seems even to be in favour of some limitation of belligerents' right of self-protection, and to a certain extent to set towards the preservation and free use of neutral cables, it seems questionable whether there is any necessity for the introduction of new conditions having for their object the preservation of neutrality, into the relations of the State towards Cable Companies consisting of its subjects or operating from its shores. The right of a State to impose a censorship in its own interests, on telegrams leaving or reaching its territories, has never been called in question. It is expressly asserted by the following clauses of the Telegraph Convention of St. Petersburgh:—

"ARTICLE VII.

"The High Contracting Parties reserve to themselves the power to stop the transmission of any private telegram which may appear dangerous to the security of the State, or which may be contrary to the laws of the country, to public order, or decency.

"ARTICLE VIII.

"Each Government also reserves to itself the power to suspend the service of the international telegraphs for an indefinite period if it deem necessary, either generally or only upon certain lines and for certain classes of correspondence, upon condition that it immediately advises each of the other Contracting Governments."

These Articles do not, of course, create a right, but save it, having regard to the opening Article of the Convention, which asserts that "the High Contracting Parties recognize the right of all persons to correspond by means of the international telegraphs" (Article I).

The United States (as it happens, not a party to the Convention) exercised the right of censorship freely. The manner of the exercise is worth notice. On the 25th April, 1898, by order of the President, the cable telegraph systems, seven in number, having their termini in New York, were constructively taken possession of by the Chief Signal Officer of the United States' army. This action appears to have been taken under some statutory provision of the United States' law, which is variously stated as "vesting in the Chief Signal Officer the control and operation of military telegraph lines," and as "charging the Chief Signal Officer with the control of all telegraph and cable lines within the United States in time of war." It appears that possession was not actually taken by the military authorities. The Presidents of the various Companies entered into written engagements with the Chief Signal Officer to abide by his directions, and assistants in each Company's office were sworn to faithfully observe the orders of the Military Censor—an officer appointed ad hoc by the Chief Signal Officer. The telegraphs were thus administered primarily for the benefit of the State, both in respect of suppressing objectionable messages, giving information from messages, and expediting the communications of the Government with its forces. Subject to this primary object, the telegraphs were worked, as in time of peace, for the benefit of the community. (See the interesting Reports of the Chief Signal Officer and the Military Censor, "Incidents," pp. 47 and 55.)

Similar arrangements could be made in the United Kingdom and the Colonies, whenever the interests of the country demanded it, under the clause already alluded to, which gives a right of possession and control in case of emergency. It may be thought better to leave the supervision of a Commercial Company's telegrams to the operation of such a general clause, carefully framed, than to insert any clause expressly having reference to the preservation of neutrality. As the Law Officers advised with reference to the Barbados case (see ante, p. 3), the apprehended use by a belligerent of the cable of a neutral might, conceivably, under certain circumstances (e.g., if it were known that the other belligerent would undoubtedly view the permission to use the cable as an act of war), give rise to such an emergency as is contemplated by the clause. The right of interference in the last resort being thus preserved, it may perhaps be thought undesirable and impolitic—in view of the general tendencies indicated by the late war, and of the fact that the interests of this country—with its widespread commercial connections and its powerful navy—would appear to be best served by maintaining the freedom of cables on neutral territory—to take any new step which should seem to be in the direction of impairing that freedom.

The form of the landing licence to be henceforth granted by the Board of Trade to Cable Companies has for some time past been under the consideration of a Committee representing many of the Government Departments. The form of emergency clause recommended by this Committee will be found in the Appendix to this Case (see letter G). It is still, however, under consideration in some parts.

In connection with the question of inserting a special clause relating to the duties of neutrals, the procedure to be adopted in carrying out the advice given by the Law Officers in 1898 might, under similar circumstances, arise for consideration. The view taken by the Post Office, and approved by the Foreign Office, was that no directions need be given either to State telegraphists or to the Cable Companies, but that, if an illegal user of the telegraphs at a British port by a belligerent was contemplated, the Governor of the place should intervene by requesting the belligerent ship to leave the port, or by otherwise preventing the access of the belligerent to the telegraph office.

The action of the Colonial Office in the Barbados case, and Mr. Chamberlain's despatch of the 17th May, may, on the other hand, perhaps be interpreted as suggesting that the views of the Government should be communicated to its own telegraphists and to the Cable Companies (which have offices in the United Kingdom as well as in the Colonies) in order that they may establish a censorship.

This question does not, indeed, press for immediate consideration, and its importance is much diminished if the Law Officers should be of opinion that the practice of the late war shows that some of the qualifications of the general principle which they laid down are difficult of enforcement, and not likely to be insisted on by belligerents.

The importance of international telegraphy to the civilized world is of comparatively recent growth, and it cannot be said that international law has definitely pronounced upon the important questions which may arise at any moment from the conflicting interests of neutrals and belligerents in time of war. It may be convenient, therefore to consider some of these questions from a general point of view before particular cases arise for decision.

The Law Officers are requested to advise—

1. Whether, in their opinion, it is expedient to introduce into landing licences, or other instruments regulating the relations of the Government to private Telegraph Companies, any clause having reference to the establishment of a censorship over the messages transmitted, with a view especially to the maintenance of neutrality, or whether the imposition of any censorship which may be desired should be left to the operation of a comprehensive emergency clause providing for censorship as well as compulsory possession.

2. Whether, in the event of a war in which this country is neutral, direction should be given to the telegraphists of the State, and to the private Telegraph Companies, with a view to the exercise of a censorship, or whether any improper use of telegraphs should be left to prevention, in the rare cases in which it may arise, by other means.

3. Whether, having regard to the practice of the Spanish-American war, it is desirable in any future case to make any attempt to prevent the use of neutral telegraphs—

(a.) By belligerent cruisers as distinguished from despatch-boats;

(b.) By belligerent cruisers for the dispatch of messages in cypher or of other messages, the object of which is to influence warlike operations, as distinguished from other messages, and particularly from messages giving a narrative of past operations bonâ fide intended for general publication as news.

4. With reference to the power of a belligerent to protect himself by cutting a cable, whether this power is limited to a cable—

(a.) Connecting two stations of a belligerent, or the station of a neutral Power with the station of a belligerent;

Or extends to a cable connecting stations—

(b.) Of two neutral Powers; or

(c.) Situate on different territories of the same neutral Power;

And whether, in every case, or what cases, the right of cutting may be exercised in the waters of a belligerent only, or also on the high seas; and

5. Generally.

APPENDIX.

EMERGENCY CLAUSES.

(A.)—In Licence granted by Board of Trade to the Western Union Telegraph Company.

AND also that if and whenever, in the opinion of one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, an emergency shall have arisen in which it is expedient for the public service that Her Majesty's Government should have control over the transmission of messages by the Company's telegraphs or by the said cables or cable, it shall be lawful for the Secretary of State, by warrant under his hand, to direct and cause so much of the Company's works as are within the United Kingdom, or any part thereof, to be taken possession of in the name and on behalf of Her Majesty, and to be used for Her Majesty's service, and subject thereto for such ordinary service as may seem fit, and in that event Her Majesty's Government shall respect and abide by all the obligations of the Company and keep the Company indemnified against all claims and damages, costs, charges and expenses arising thereout, and, in the event aforesaid, the Secretary of State shall have power to direct and authorize such persons as he thinks fit to assume the control of the transmission of messages by the Company's telegraphs or by the said cables or cable, either wholly or partly, and in such manner as he may direct.

Provided always that no such warrant shall have effect for a longer time than one week from the issuing thereof. Provided, nevertheless, that the said Secretary of State may issue successive warrants from week to week as long as, in his opinion, such emergencies continue.

Provided also, and it is hereby agreed and declared, that the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury shall pay to the Company as compensation for any loss of profit and for any damages, costs, charges, and expenses sustained by the Company by reason of the exercise by the said Secretary of State of any of the powers hereby reserved such sum as may be settled between the said Secretary of State and the Company by agreement, or, in case of difference, by arbitration, such arbitration to be conducted in manner provided by section 51 of the Telegraph Act of 1863.

(B.)—In Treasury Contracts (South African Contract of 1879).

In case of war, rebellion, or other emergency, the Imperial Government of the United Kingdom, or the Government of any British Colony or possession, duly authorized by Her Majesty's Government in that behalf, may take possession of the cables, stations, offices, and apparatus of the said line, and may keep possession thereof for so long as such Government may think requisite, and the Companies and their successors in business shall do all in their power to enable such Government to have and enjoy the benefit and advantage thereof. And Her Majesty's Government shall make to the Companies, or their successors in business, such compensation in money for all loss suffered by the Companies, or their successors in business, by the exercise of the powers by this clause as shall be admitted or determined (in case of dispute) by arbitration to be reasonable in that behalf.

(C.)—In Jamaica Law, 1898 (Direct West India Company).

In case of war, rebellion, or other emergency, the Government may take possession of the line and of the stations, offices, and apparatus on such telegraph line, may keep possession thereof for so long as the Governor may think requisite, and may, while such line is in possession of the Government, work the same by Government servants. The Governor shall, out of the general revenue of the Colony, make to the Company such compensation in money for all loss suffered by the Company by the exercise of the powers by this section conferred, other than loss calculated on the basis of an assumed increase of receipts while such telegraph line remains in the hands of the Government, as shall be admitted or determined, in case of dispute by arbitration, to be reasonable in that behalf.

(D.)—In Zanzibar, Seychelles, and Mauritius Contract of April 11, 1893.

In case of war, rebellion, or other emergency, Her Majesty's Government may take possession of such telegraph line and of the stations, offices, and apparatus on such telegraph line, and may keep possession thereof for so long as Her Majesty's Government may think requisite, and the Company shall do all in its power to enable Her Majesty's Government to have and enjoy the benefit and advantage thereof, and Her Majesty's Government may work such telegraph line by Government servants. And Her Majesty's Government shall make to the Company such compensation in money for all loss suffered by the Company, by the exercise of the powers by this clause conferred, as shall be admitted to be reasonable or determined, in case of dispute by arbitration, as hereinafter mentioned.

(E.)—In Turks and Caicos Island Ordnance of 1891.

Where, in the opinion of the Commissioner, an emergency has arisen in which it is expedient for the public service that Her Majesty's Government should have control over the transmission of messages by the said Company's telegraph, the Commissioner, by warrant under his hand, may direct and cause the said Company's works, or any part thereof, to be taken possession of in the name of Her Majesty's service, and subject thereto for such ordinary service as may seem fit; or may direct and authorize such persons as he thinks fit to assume the control of the transmission of messages by the said Company's telegraph, either wholly or partly, and in such manner as he directs. Any such warrant shall not have effect for any longer time than one week from the issuing thereof, but the Commissioner may issue successive warrants from week to week as long as, in his opinion, such emergency continues; and the Commissioner shall forthwith thereafter report the same, together with his reasons for issuing any such warrant or warrants, to the Governor-in-chief of Jamaica, and there shall be paid to said Company as compensation for any loss of profit sustained by the said Company by reason of the exercise by the Commissioner of any of the powers of the present section, out of the general revenue of these islands, such sum as may be settled between the Commissioner and the Company by agreement or, in case of difference, by arbitration, such arbitration to be conducted as follows :—

1. The Commissioner and the Company shall each, within fourteen days after the delivery by one to the other of a demand in writing for an arbitration, appoint an arbitrator

2. The two Arbitrators nominated shall, before entering on the arbitration nominate an Umpire.

3. If either party or Arbitrator make default in nominating an Arbitrator or Umpire within fourteen days after receiving from the other a demand in writing for such nomination, the Judge of these islands may, on the request of the Commissioner of the said Company, under his hand nominate an Arbitrator or Umpire.

4. The Arbitrators shall make their Award within twenty-eight days after their nomination, otherwise the matter shall be left to be determined by the Umpire.

5. The Umpire shall make his Award within twenty-eight days after notice from the Arbitrators, or one of them, that the matter is left to be determined by him; or in default a new Umpire shall be appointed as nearly as may be in manner aforesaid, who shall make his Award within the like time, or in default be superseded, and so toties quoties.

The Award of the Arbitrators or Umpire shall be final and conclusive as between the Commissioner and the said Company.

(F.)—Indian Telegraph Act, 1885.

"(1.) On the occurrence of any public emergency, or in the interest of the public safety, the Governor-General in Council or a Local Government, or any officer specially authorized in this behalf by the Governor-General in Council, may—

"(a.) Take temporary possession of any telegraph established, maintained, or worked by any person licensed under this Act; or

"(b.) Order that any message or class of messages to or from any person or class of persons, or relating to any particular subject, brought for transmission by or transmitted or received by any telegraph, shall not be transmitted or shall be intercepted or detained, or shall be disclosed to the Government or an officer thereof mentioned in the Order.

"(2.) If any doubt arises as to the existence of a public emergency, or whether any act done under sub-section (1) was in the interest of the public safety, a certificate signed by a Secretary to the Government of India or to the Local Government shall be conclusive proof on the point."

(G.)—Form settled by recent Inter-Departmental Committee.

And it is hereby agreed and declared as follows, that is to say :—

(1.) If and whenever any Department of Her Majesty's Government requires the Company to transmit any message on Her Majesty's service, such message shall have priority over all messages, and the Company shall, as soon as reasonably may be, transmit the same and shall, until transmission thereof, suspend the transmission of all other messages.

(2.) If and whenever in the opinion of one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State an emergency shall have arisen in which it is expedient for the public service that Her Majesty's Government should have control over the transmission of messages by the Company's telegraphs, it shall be lawful for the said Secretary of State by warrant under his hand to direct and cause so much of the Company's works as are within the United Kingdom or any part thereof to be taken possession of in the name and on behalf of Her Majesty, and to be used for Her Majesty's service, and subject thereto for such ordinary service as may seem fit, and in that event any person authorized by the said Secretary of State may enter upon the offices and works of the Company and take possession thereof and use the same as aforesaid.

(3.) One of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State may, when he considers such an emergency as aforesaid to have arisen, instead of taking possession of the offices and works of the Company, direct and authorize such persons as he thinks fit to assume the control of the transmission of messages by the Company's telegraphs either wholly or partly, and in such manner as he may direct, and such persons may enter upon the Company's premises accordingly, or the said Secretary of State may direct the Company to submit to him, or any person authorized by him all telegrams tendered for transmission or arriving by the Company's telegraphs, or any class or classes of such telegrams, and to stop or delay the transmission of any telegrams, or deliver the same to him or his agent, and generally to obey all such directions with reference to the transmission of telegrams as the Secretary of State may prescribe; and the Company shall obey and conform to all such directions.

(4.) In any such case as aforesaid Her Majesty's Government shall pay to the Company by way of compensation for any direct injury or loss of profit sustained by the Company by reason of the exercise by the Secretary of State of any of the powers hereby reserved such sum as may be settled between the Secretary of State and the Company, or, in case of difference, may be determined by arbitration.

Foreign Office to Attorney-General.

Dear Attorney-General, Foreign Office, November 20, 1900.

Use of telegraph lines by belligerents: As to difference between despatch-boat and cruiser.

YOU will recollect that in 1898 the Lord Chief Justice (then Attorney-General) and yourself with Simpson wrote a rather detailed Report on the subject of the obligations of a neutral Power with regard to the use of telegraphic lines or cables by belligerents (see annexed copy of Law Officers' Report of the 7th May, 1898).*

Towards the end of paragraph 4 of that Report you drew a distinction between the treatment to be accorded to a "despatch-boat" sent under such circumstances as were mentioned in Lord Tweeddale's letter and that to be accorded to a "cruiser," and the distinction which you drew in 1898 in this regard is preserved by the terms of the later Report which you furnished on the 15th August last.

The whole matter is now engaging the attention of the Departments principally concerned (Admiralty, General Post Office, Colonial Office, and Foreign Office), with a view to the preparation of instructions for their officers by the light of these two Reports, and some doubt exists amongst those who have had to deal with the Reports as to the exact sense in which you employed the expression "despatch-boat" in the Report of the 7th May, 1898.

My own strong belief is that you were intending to draw a distinction between vessels of war or national ships of a belligerent on the one hand, and vessels ("despatch-boat sent under such circumstances as were mentioned in Lord Tweeddale's letter") on the other hand, which were not actually in the navy of the belligerent, nor employed by it for belligerent purposes, and which consequently do not come under the restrictions as to stay in port, limited right of coaling, &c., applicable in the case of national vessels.

But owing to the fact that the term "despatch vessel" is also employed to denote a well-known class of national vessels, in which armament is entirely subordinated to speed, the Report is perhaps open to the construction which has also been put upon it, that the distinction intended to be drawn is between a "cruiser" or fighting national vessel on the one hand, and a despatch vessel or national news-vessel on the other.

It seems to me that this cannot really be so, as there is no distinction in essence between a despatch vessel and a fighting vessel in the public employment of the State. Both are national vessels, and each is equally subject to the restrictions adverted to above.

We do not like, however, especially in the presence of the doubt which has been expressed to put a gloss upon your language which it is possible it may not have been intended it should bear, and I therefore have suggested that it would be desirable to refer the matter back to you privately. We can, on hearing from you, either put an explanatory note, with your authority, in the margin of the Report, or if you think that the language of the 1898 Report ought in any respect to be amplified with regard to this special point that can equally readily be done.

Yours very sincerely,
(Signed) W. E. DAVIDSON.

I agree with the view expressed in your letter of the 20th as to the meaning of the passage in paragraph 4 of our Report of the 7th May, 1898.

Probably a note might be added explaining that the passage does not apply to vessels forming part of the fleet of the belligerent, though they are chiefly or entirely used for carrying despatches.

Gentlemen,

O. in C. applying Extradition Treaty with San Marino.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the draft of an Order in Council, carrying into effect an Extradition Treaty between the United Kingdom and the Republic of San Marino, which was signed at Florence on the 16th October last, and of which the ratifications were exchanged at Rome on the 5th ultimo.

I am to inclose the accompanying letters from the Home, Colonial, and India Offices, expressing concurrence in the terms of the draft Order in Council, and I have the honour to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether it may, in its present form, be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by the Extradition Acts, 1870 to 1895, it was, amongst other things, enacted that, where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that Her Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in the part of Her Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient;

And whereas a Treaty was concluded on the 16th day of October, 1899, between Her Majesty and the Captains Regent of the Most Serene Republic of San Marino for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, which Treaty is in the terms following:—

[See Treaty Series No. 9, 1900.]

And whereas the ratifications of the said Treaty were exchanged at Rome on the 5th day of December, 1899:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to her by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the * day of January, 1900, the said Acts shall apply in the case of San Marino, and of the said Treaty with the Captains Regent of the Republic of San Marino:

Provided always that the operation of the said Acts shall be and remain suspended within the Dominion of Canada so long as an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the Extradition of Fugitive Criminals," shall continue in force there, and no longer.

No. 34.

[April 10, 1900.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, April 4, 1900.

Gentlemen,

Titles to land in British Concessions in Japan; claim to levy rates.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to the question of the titles to land held by British subjects in the foreign Concessions in Japan, and the claim of the Japanese authorities to levy rates and taxes in respect of such land and the buildings thereon.

Article XVIII of the Treaty between Great Britain and Japan of the 16th July, 1894 (Paper A), which came into force on the 17th July last, provides that the several foreign Settlements in Japan shall be incorporated with the respective Japanese communes, and shall thenceforth form part of the general municipal system of Japan. By the same Article it is further provided that, when such incorporation takes place, the existing leases in perpetuity under which property is now held in the said Settlements shall be confirmed, and no conditions whatsoever other than those contained in such existing leases shall be imposed in respect of such property.

On the 7th July, 1899, an Imperial Japanese Ordinance (No. 329) was issued relating to the registration of rights in immovables acquired by foreigners, and providing that such rights, if not already registered at a foreign Consulate, must be registered at the proper Japanese registry office within one year of the coming into effect of the revised Treaties (Sir E. Satow, No. 130, 26th July, 1899, Paper B).

In a despatch dated the 5th September, 1899 (Paper C), Her Majesty's Minister

* Date to be inserted by Council Office, and to be a date ten days after publication in the "London Gazette."

1900 reported that the Judicial authorities at Yokohama, to whom the duty of registering such rights belonged, interpreted the Ordinance in such a way as to materially affect the privilege secured to British subjects by Article XVIII of the Treaty. Her Majesty's Consul at Yokohama was informed by the President of the Local Court that whenever a lot of Settlement land, belonging to a foreigner, has been registered, the title-deed ceases to have any legal value, and the entry in the register becomes the sole evidence of title. Moreover, the land book provides only for the registration of superficies, mortgages, and short leases. The character of superficies, Sir E. Satow states, is defined in the Japanese Civil Code. The effect of Article 276 of that Code is that if the superficiary owner becomes bankrupt the landlord—in this case the Japanese Government—may claim the extinguishment of the superficies.

In these circumstances, Sir E. Satow addressed a note to the Japanese Government, a copy of which is inclosed in his despatch, pointing out that the Ordinance, as interpreted by the Japanese authorities, had the effect of invalidating the leases in perpetuity, which Article XVIII of the Treaty expressly stipulates shall be confirmed.

The Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs, in his reply (inclosure in Sir E. Satow's No. 9, 22nd January, 1900, Paper D), explains that the word superficies, when applied to such leases as those now in question, is recognized by his Government to mean a special kind of superficies, and not superficies under the provisions of the Civil Code. His Excellency further states that the title-deeds of leases in perpetuity held by foreigners would, after their registration under the Imperial Ordinance No. 329 (see above), still have the same validity as before such registration. Viscount Aoki also incloses a copy of an Imperial Ordinance No. 458 of the 27th December, 1899, amending Imperial Ordinance No. 329. In this later Ordinance the words "perpetual lease" are specially inserted within brackets after the word "superficies," and his Excellency states that this makes it clearer that the "so-called superficies is a perpetual lease." He considers that the amending Ordinance has the effect of confirming the validity of the title-deeds; and Sir E. Satow observes that if it should prove that the Japanese Courts take the same view as his Excellency, the result may be to confirm the existing leases in perpetuity in the manner contemplated by Article XVIII of the Treaty of 1894. As, however, the word "superficies" is objected to by foreigners, and Sir E. Satow was of opinion that it imported into the matter an element of doubt and confusion that might have been avoided, he addressed a further communication to Viscount Aoki, taking note of his declaration, and reserving the rights of British subjects secured to them under Article XVIII of the Treaty.

In a despatch No. 10 of the 22nd January (Paper E) Sir E. Satow forwards a report of a meeting of land-renters in the former foreign Settlement at Yokohama, which was held on the 19th of that month, and at which dissatisfaction was expressed at the terms of the Imperial Ordinances Nos. 329 and 458, and it was resolved to address the Japanese Government on the subject through the foreign Representatives at Tôkiô.

In a further despatch No. 18 of the 13th February (Paper F) Sir E. Satow incloses a letter from Mr. W. Till, the representative of the British land-renters, together with the Resolutions passed at the public meeting above referred to. It will be seen that Her Majesty's Minister, in his reply, stated that while the use of the word "superficies" might be objectionable in connection with "leases in perpetuity," it appeared to him that no practical inconvenience need be experienced if the Courts placed on the two Ordinances the meaning which the Japanese Government have officially declared that they attach to them, and that until a case occurred proving that the Courts take a different view he did not see his way to making any further official representations to the Japanese Government on this point.

On behalf of the land-renters it is contended inter alia—

1. That it has been proposed to alter the tenure of their property;

2. That there has hitherto been no confirmation by the Japanese Government of their existing leases in perpetuity as called for in the Treaties;

3. That the law of superficies provides that if no time for the duration of the superficies has been fixed in the Act by which it was created the Court may fix the duration of the right at from twenty to fifty years, and it is suggested that at some future time, as a perpetual lease has no time fixed for its duration, the Court would have the power to reduce it to (say) fifty years from the time of its commencement, unless the perpetual leases be specially confirmed.

Sir E. Satow subsequently received a deputation of the land-renters; an account of what passed is given in his despatch, and I am to invite your special attention to the views expressed by him at this interview.

The question of taxation is dealt with in Sir E. Satow's despatches No. 166 of the 5th October, 1899, and No. 196 of the 29th November, 1899. (Papers G and H.)

In the first of these despatches Sir E. Satow forwards a letter from Mr. A. B. Walford, an English barrister residing at Yokohama, in which, on behalf of certain British subjects, he contends that land-renters in the foreign Settlements are not liable to pay house taxes or local rates, or stamp duties, or taxes on registration of a transfer of land.

The proposed tax of 2½ per cent. on transfers of land having been abandoned by the Japanese Government it is no longer necessary to consider this point.

At all the ports open to foreign residence by the Treaty of 1858, land was leased to foreigners in perpetuity by the Japanese Government at a rental fixed at a figure which covered some, but not all, of the municipal charges. But Article XVIII of the Treaty of 1894 (Paper A) is held by Mr. Walford to go further, in providing that no conditions whatsoever other than those contained in the existing leases shall be imposed in respect of property held by foreigners in the existing Settlements.

Article XXI of the French Treaty, dealing with the same matter, adds that no imposts, taxes, or charges shall be levied other than those expressly stipulated in the leases in question, and British land-renters would be entitled to claim the benefit of this clause by virtue of the most-favoured-nation Article of the British Treaty.

A Memorandum on the subject by Mr. Wilkinson (the Judge of Her Majesty's Court for Japan), to whom Mr. Walford's letter was referred, is inclosed in Sir E. Satow's despatch, as well as a copy of a Memorandum which Her Majesty's Minister delivered to the Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs on the 29th September last, and in which Sir E. Satow pointed out that the land and buildings in the foreign Settlements had hitherto been exempt from all Imperial and local taxes, with such exceptions only as are contained in the respective title-deeds, and stated that, under the provisions of Article XVIII of the Treaty of 1894, it was clearly intended that they should continue to be so exempted. Sir E. Satow further suggested that "property" referred to in that Article included both land and houses.

Viscount Aoki in his reply (inclosure in Sir E. Satow's No. 196) (Paper H), while admitting that it is intended by the Article that no burdens shall be imposed upon the land other than those contained in the leases, contends that this exemption does not extend to the houses built on the land; that the "property" referred to is the property set out in the leases, or, in other words, the land leased in perpetuity.

Sir E. Satow incloses forms of some of the leases which have been issued at different times, and are still in force, and in which the only property referred to as to be leased is land.

On the other hand, in the leases issued for land in the Settlement at Nagasaki, and in the original Settlement at Yokohama, buildings are referred to in the clause which deals with forfeiture for non-payment of rent, the buildings in that case becoming the property of the Japanese Government, and it is contended on behalf of the lessees that this clause shows that the buildings are held under the leases.

In the leases for land in the Settlements at Hiogo, Osaka, and Yedo (Tôkiô) there is no similar forfeiture clause and no mention whatever of buildings, though Sir E. Satow states that it would probably be contended on behalf of the lessees that the land was intended to be built upon, and was leased with that object.

If the view taken by Viscount Aoki were accepted, it would appear that foreigners would as regards repairs of roads and drains, lighting the streets, &c., be paying twice for the same municipal services as explained in Sir E. Satow's despatch.

On the other hand, there are now other local heads of expenditure besides those just mentioned towards which, in Sir E. Satow's opinion, foreigners cannot equitably claim exemption from contributing.

I am to request that you will take the papers submitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion—

1. As to whether any further representations should at present be addressed to the Japanese Government with reference to the confirmation of the titles to land held by British subjects on perpetual lease in the foreign Settlements or Concessions, and, if so, on what grounds such representations should be made; and

2. As to what instructions should be given to Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô with regard to the claim of the Japanese authorities to levy local rates in respect of the buildings on such land.

His Lordship will also be glad to receive any observations of a more general character which you may desire to offer on the subject of this reference.

Report.

1. We do not regard the present state of things with respect to the title of land held by British subjects on perpetual lease as constituting a satisfactory settlement of the Treaty obligation.

The Japanese "superficies," as defined in the Japanese Civil Code (Articles 265-269), appears to be closely analogous to the form of property known by the same name in the Roman Law, from which, indeed, it appears to have been taken. It is the right of using the surface of land which remains the property of another person, and is, in its nature, different from a lease of the land itself. We think that registering these perpetual leases under the head "superficies," even with the addition of the words "perpetual lease," is very apt to create confusion, and we are by no means satisfied that the Japanese Courts would take the same view as that expressed by Viscount Aoki in his despatch of the 15th January, 1900. Viscount Aoki refers to Article 45 of the Law concerning the operation of the Civil Code. But it is to be observed that that Article refers in terms to a "superficies" created for an alien. A perpetual lease is not a "superficies," but confers a right of property in the land itself, and this would appear to be the nature of these leases as they have been hitherto understood in Japan. We would, therefore, suggest that the Japanese Government should be requested to consider the possibility of passing a Law in terms recognizing the exceptional rights in these perpetual leases which are secured to their holders by Article XVIII of the Treaty.

The method which has so far been adopted is very cumbrous. We think it doubtful whether the desired end has been attained, and it would certainly appear to affect the value of these leases owing to the doubt raised as to their falling under the Japanese conception of "superficies," which is a different kind of property altogether.

2. It appears to us that Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô should be instructed to resist the claim of the Japanese authorities to levy local rates in respect of the buildings on such land. We cannot recognize as valid the distinction which Viscount Aoki asserts between the right to tax the land and the right to tax the house. The house is the property of the perpetual leaseholder just as much as the land on which it has been built. We think that Article XVIII, when it provides that no conditions other than those contained in the leases should be imposed in respect of the property, protects the perpetual leaseholders from local rates as well as from any additional rent or taxation. If any doubt could be entertained on the point it would be removed by the terms of the French Treaty and the note to the German Treaty, and the right of British subjects to equality of treatment.

Sir,

As to Extradition of Deserter on ground of larceny of his uniform.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Lucas' letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by you to transmit to us for our consideration—

1. A despatch from the Governor of British Honduras, dated the 23rd August last, relative to the case of four persons whose extradition had been demanded by the Mexican Government under the provisions of the Treaty made between Great Britain and the United States of Mexico in September 1886, and who were now under arrest at Belize;

2. The original proceedings taken before the Acting District Commissioner at Belize upon the application made for extradition;

3. The Report made by the Attorney-General of British Honduras to the Governor on the case;

4. A copy of the Extradition Treaty of September 1886, made between Great Britain and the United States of Mexico;

5. Copy of "The Extradition Act, 1870;"

6. Draft of Secretary of State's proposed telegram and despatch to Officer administering the Government of British Honduras;

7. Copy of Secretary of State's letter to the Foreign Office (11th September, 1900); and,

8. Copy of reply of Foreign Office thereto (17th September, 1900).

That Mr. Lucas was to ask us to be good enough to take these papers into our consideration, and to advise you—

1. Whether larceny of his uniform by a fugitive soldier or sailor was an extraditable offence according to English law, or to the law of her Colonies having a similar system of criminal jurisprudence;

2. Whether we concurred in the proposed reply of the Secretary of State to the Officer administering the Government of British Honduras, or if not,

3. Generally, as to what reply should be returned.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That we think that under ordinary circumstances a deserter would not properly be found guilty of larceny in respect of the uniform which he was wearing at the time of his desertion. The uniform is accessory to his person, and in ordinary cases the proper inference would be that he took it with him, not with the felonious intention of appropriating it, but because he was wearing it at the time, and could not go without it.

There might, of course, be special circumstances from which such a felonious intent might be inferred, as if, for instance, the deserter afterwards sold the uniform in question. There are, however, no such special circumstances in this case, and we do not think that extradition for larceny should be granted if it be the case that the only articles that the deserters took with them were those that they were wearing at the time. There is, upon the evidence, nothing to show whether this be the case or not. It is not proved that the articles found in their possession were those that they were wearing at the time of desertion, and there is no satisfactory evidence that the men took with them any other article. We think that some inquiry should be made on this point, and unless there is some evidence to show that the prisoners took other articles or property of the Mexican Government with them, or feloniously converted those that they were wearing, extradition should not be granted.

THE OCEANA GROUP PUBLISHERS

Draft of Despatch from Mr. Chamberlain to the Officer administering the Government, British Honduras.

(No. .)

Sir, Downing Street, October , 1900.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch No. 148 of the 23rd August last, with reference to the case of four fugitive offenders whose extradition has been demanded by the Government of the United States of Mexico, under the Extradition Treaty made between that country and Great Britain in September 1886.

2. In continuation of my telegram to you of the 23rd October I have to inform you that after having carefully considered the Attorney-General's Report upon the case, I think that if the only articles in respect of which larceny is charged were those worn at the time of the desertion, extradition should not be granted. Further inquiry should be made on this point, on which the evidence does not at present throw sufficient light, and if it appears that these men took with them other articles than those they were wearing at the time of desertion, extradition may be granted.

3. With regard to the probability that the punishment that would be inflicted by the Mexican Tribunal would be made to cover the offence of desertion, which is not an extraditable offence, I cannot assume against the Mexican Courts that they would inflict any punishment that is not warranted upon a conviction for larceny; but it is necessary first to see that there is a real case of larceny primâ facie established. To say that the mere fact of a soldier having uniform on when he deserted renders him subject to extradition, would be in substance to make desertion an extraditable crime.

4. I agree with the Attorney-General in thinking that a deserter cannot be properly charged with stealing such articles of uniform as he was wearing at the time of his desertion, merely in respect of this fact, and that there is not sufficient evidence to connect these men with the larceny of the articles of uniform shown to have been missing after they had deserted. It is. however, not proved that the articles found in the possession of the prisoners were merely those worn by them at the time of desertion; but the circumstances are such that before extradition be granted this point should be cleared up, and if the fair conclusion is that they were, extradition should not be granted. Under such circumstances there would be no sufficient evidence of felonious intent. If, however, it appears that the prisoners took with them other articles, extradition should be granted.

5. If extradition be granted, for the purpose of insuring the due observance of Article VII of the Treaty, I have to request you to call the special attention of the Mexican authorities to the exact offence for which these men are surrendered, viz., larceny of articles other than the articles of uniform they were wearing when they deserted.

PERSIA.

No. 35.

[December 12, 1900.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, November 27, 1900.

Illegal importation of arms into Persia.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to a case of importation on a British ship of arms into Bushire in contravention of the Persian law.

The facts of the case as they appear from telegraphic reports of Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tehran and Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bushire, are as follows:—

The British ship "Hathor," which was chartered by the firm of Messrs. Bucknall Brothers of 23, Leadenhall Street, and which was in the course of a voyage from Cardiff, and Marseilles to Suez Canal ports, Jibuti, Aden, Bushire, and Bussorah, arrived on the evening of the 8th November in the harbour of Bushire, when Colonel Kemball, Her Majesty's Consul-General at that place and Political Resident in the Persian Gulf, received information from M. Simais, a Belgian, who is Director of the Persian Customs at Bushire, that the vessel was suspected of carrying arms. This information was based on statements made to the Persian Customs officer by the coolies unloading the cargo.

Colonel Kemball sent a Representative to accompany the Custom-house officer on board, when 30 packages containing 329 arms and 27 cases containing 32,000 rounds of ammunition were found stored in the forehold with the cargo.

The master of the "Hathor" professed entire ignorance of these goods, which were not entered in the ship's manifest. He informed the Director of Customs that he believed they were shipped by an Arab passenger—a native of Koweit (which is a district on the Arabian coast of the Persian Gulf, not far from the mouth of the Shat-el-Arab). The Arab denied all knowledge of them, and was not entered as a passenger, though he declared that he paid the master his passage-money, and that he had upon him a paper signed by the master.

The goods appear to have been shipped at the French port of Jibuti—the cases of ammunition were marked "Jibuti; munitions de sûreté; cartouches;" one of the packages of arms was inscribed with the name "Mubarek" in Arabic, Mubarek being the name of the Arab passenger (Mubarek is also the name of the Sheikh of Koweit); others had letters in Arabic, and also numbers written upon them. The arms are of French manufacture, and many of them are marked with the lion and sun, which makes it probable that they were intended for Persia.

The master authorized the Director of Customs to take charge of the arms and ammunition, and the Director demanded a fine of 800*l.* from the master, or, in his default, from the charterers, in accordance with Article 4 of the Persian Law of the 1st January, 1900 (see Paper P). The fine was demanded through Colonel Kemball, but no charge has been regularly made before his Consular Court.

The Director of Customs allowed the "Hathor" to proceed on her voyage to Bussorah on the understanding that the case would be taken on her return, and the detention of the ship is then claimed until the matter is settled. The information in the telegrams is somewhat conflicting on the question whether any security has been given for the fine; but according to the latest report from Colonel Kemball no bail bond was taken, nor was any money lodged before the ship's departure. The statement which was made in Mr. Spring-Rice's telegram No. 84 of the 10th November (Paper A), that money to meet the fine was deposited with the Imperial Bank of Persia, appears therefore to be erroneous.

No arrangement appears to have been made as to what Tribunal is to take the case when the ship returns.

Colonel Kemball has little doubt of the connivance of the master or of his knowledge of the fact that the Arab passenger and the contraband cargo were on board.

The reasons given for this view are (1) that the master omitted to show on the ship's manifest the cases and packages, which are both numerous and bulky, and which could not have been the private effects of the passenger; (2) that he denied all knowledge of them; (3) that he purposely omitted the name of the passenger from his papers and also from the bill of health; (4) that he made contradictory statements to the Director of Customs and to Colonel Kemball in a procès-verbal.

From the above statement of the facts it appears that a considerable quantity of arms and ammunition destined for Persia was taken into Bushire in a British ship in contravention of the Persian Law of the 1st January, 1900, and that this was probably done by an Arab native of Koweit with the connivance of the master, a British subject. The arms and ammunition have been seized by the Persian authorities, and the questions of the punishment of the Arab, the imposition of a fine upon the master, and the further detention of the ship are still pending.

So far as the Arab is concerned no certain information as to his nationality has yet been received, and further inquiries will be made in the matter; but it would appear that, as a native of Koweit, he will be justiciable by Persian Tribunals in the presumable absence of any claim on the part of the Sheikh of Koweit to extra-territorial jurisdiction in Persia. He has, however, been claimed by the Turkish Vice-Consul as an Ottoman subject.

With regard to the seizure of the arms by the Persian authorities it is to be observed that the Persian Law of the 1st January, 1900, has been notified to all British firms and shipping agents by Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bushire, and this fact might be held to justify the Persian authorities in seizing the arms in the territorial waters of Persia.

The case of the master is on a different footing. It appears that the Persian Law of the 1st January, 1900, has never been made applicable to British subjects by a Queen's Regulation under Article 49 of the Persian Coasts and Islands Order in Council of the 13th December, 1889, or under Article 290 of the Persia (Inland) Order in Council of the same date (Papers Q and R); and the question therefore arises whether a British subject can be made amenable to the Persian Law in the absence of such Queen's Regulation. It is to be observed, with regard to the Articles of the two Orders in Council above referred to, that Article 49, sub-Article (1), of the Persian Coasts and Islands Order does not contain certain words which appear in the corresponding Article 290 of the Persia (Inland) Order. These words in Article 290, sub-Article (1) of the Inland Order are:—

"Or of any native or local law or custom, whether relating to trade, commerce, revenue, or any other matter."

The original papers have been carefully inspected with a view of ascertaining whether there was any reason for this omission, and it has been clearly established that no such reason existed at the time when the Orders were prepared in 1889, and that the words above quoted were inadvertently omitted from the Persian Coasts and Islands Order.

Instructions on various other points besides those above enumerated are requested by Mr. Spring-Rice, but the only one of these which calls for any special observations is the suggestion of the Persian authorities (see his telegram No. 93 of the 24th November, paragraph 1, Paper I) that the master might be tried by the Customs authorities with the assistance of Her Majesty's Consul-General under Article 7 of the Treaty between Persia and Russia of 1828 (Paper S). Lord Lansdowne, as at present advised, does not quite understand how the Persian Government can have a valid claim to jurisdiction over a British subject by virtue of a provision in a Treaty between Russia and Persia to which Great Britain is not a party, in view also of the fact that the Queen has exclusive jurisdiction over British subjects in Persia by usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, although Her Majesty cannot, in the case of Persia, claim such jurisdiction under the specific language of any Treaty or actual grant.

It appears to Lord Lansdowne that the questions put in Mr. Spring-Rice's telegrams Nos. 85 and 93 of the 14th and 24th November (Papers B and I) relating to the possibility of proceeding against the master under Article 233 of "The Persia (Inland) Order, 1889," and Articles 10 and 57 of "The Coasts and Islands Order, 1889," should be answered in the negative, but his Lordship thinks it right to call your attention to them.

Among the papers inclosed will be found a correspondence which has passed with Messrs. Bucknall Brothers, the charterers of the "Hathor" (Papers T, U, V, W, X), and it will be seen that in their letter of the 26th November, to which no reply has yet been returned, they request that steps may be taken to obtain the immediate acquittal or release of the master and steamer which is now stated to be detained at Bushire; and further, that representations may be made to the Persian authorities insisting that any fine which may have been paid shall be reimbursed, or if no fine has been paid, that none shall be imposed.

I am to request that you will be good enough to take the accompanying papers into your consideration and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether the master of the "Hathor" is amenable to Persian law.
2. Whether the Persian law should not form the subject of a Queen's Regulation or Regulations under Article 49 of the Persian Coasts and Islands Order in Council of the 13th December, 1889, and under Article 290 of the Persia (Inland) Order of the same date, so as to enable infringements of its provisions to be punished in Her Majesty's Consular Court when such infringements are committed by British subjects.
3. Whether the Persian authorities have any right to detain the ship on her return to Bushire failing the payment of the fine by the master or charterers.
4. Whether the Persian Law of the 1st January, 1900, can be enforced under Article 233 of the Persia (Inland) Order, containing general provisions for criminal authority and procedure, taken in connection with Article 10 of the Persian Coasts and Islands Order with respect to smuggling. (See Mr. Spring-Rice's telegram No. 85 of the 14th November, Paper B.)
5. Whether the master can be prosecuted in a British port on the charge of the arms not having been included in the ship's manifest. (See Mr. Spring-Rice's telegram No. 89, Paper F.)
6. Whether the Political Resident in the Persian Gulf (who is also Her Majesty's Consul-General) can compel the master's return to Bushire. (See Mr. Spring-Rice's telegram No. 89, Paper F.)
7. Whether Persia can claim jurisdiction over the master under Article 7 of the Treaty between Persia and Russia of the 22nd February, 1828 (Paper S). (See Mr. Spring-Rice's telegram No. 93, Paper I.)
8. If the answer to the preceding question is in the negative, whether the master can be tried by Her Majesty's Consul-General under Article 10 of the Persian Coasts and Islands Order respecting smuggling, and Article 57 of the same Order conferring the powers of a Justice of the Peace on Her Majesty's Consul-General. (See Mr. Spring-Rice's telegram No. 93, Paper I.)
9. Whether, in your opinion, any other, and if so what, general instructions may advantageously be given to Colonel Kemball and Mr. Spring-Rice respectively, in regard to this case.
10. What reply should, in your opinion, be returned to Messrs. Bucknall Brothers' letter of the 26th November (Paper X).

I have, &c.

Report.

1. In our opinion the master of the "Hathor" is not amenable to Persian law. The importation of arms into Persia is not an offence under the laws of England, and as the Persian Law of the 1st January, 1900, has not been made applicable to British subjects, the master has not been guilty of an offence cognizable in the British Courts in Persia. To acquiesce in his being tried by a Persian Court would be an abandonment of the position hitherto asserted that British subjects should be tried in Persia by a British Court, and is, we submit, most unadvisable.

2. We think it would be advisable that the Persian Law of the 1st January, 1900, should be made applicable to British subjects. This may be effected by Regulations under the Order in Council as to inland Persia (Article 290). As regards the Coast and Islands Order, owing to the different wording of Article 49, this cannot be effected by Regulations, and if it could the penalty would be only 100 rupees.

Under these circumstances probably the best course would be to pass an Order in Council dealing with the point as regards all parts of Persia.

3. As the ship has not been detained at Bushire, this question does not arise.

4. The answer to this question is in the negative, as the importation of arms is contrary to prohibition, and could not be held to constitute the offence of smuggling as defined by Article 10.

5. We do not think that, under the circumstances stated, any prosecution would lie against the master of the "Hathor."

6. No.

7. Such jurisdiction could not be be claimed by Persia under the Article in the Treaty referred to. That Treaty is not binding upon Her Majesty's Government, and the most-favoured-nation clause in the Treaty of Paris could not curtail the rights of Her Majesty's Government.

8. As stated in the answer to the 4th question, the facts would not support a charge of smuggling.

9. We think Colonel Kemball and Mr. Spring-Rice should be instructed to explain to the Persian authorities the reason why proceedings have not been instituted, and the intention of Her Majesty's Government forthwith to apply the Persian Law of the 1st January, 1900, to British subjects.

10. It is now unnecessary, as the ship has not been detained, to consider the reply to Messrs. Bucknall's letter.

Gentlemen,

Delagoa Bay Railway Arbitration Award. U.S. Scheme.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, in connection with the Award recently pronounced by the Berne Tribunal of Arbitration, which, as you are no doubt aware, was constituted, under an Agreement for Arbitration signed on the 13th June 1891, between the Representatives at Berne of the United States, Great Britain, and Portugal, to fix the compensation due by the latter country for the rescission of the Lourenço Marques Railway Concession, and the taking possession of that railway by the Portuguese Government.

The text of the Award, which was delivered on the 29th March last, is contained in the accompanying volume (Paper A). The material portions of it, in so far as present purposes are concerned, will be found on pp. 195, 196, 197, 199, and 200. (See passages in italic.)

The decision of the Arbitration Tribunal is given on pp. 199 and 200, and is as follows:—

"1. Le Gouvernement du Portugal, partie défenderesse, est condamné à payer aux Gouvernements des États-Unis de l'Amérique du Nord et de la Grande-Bretagne, parties demanderesses, ensemble, en plus des 28,000*l.* versées à compte en 1890, la somme de 15,314,000 fr., en monnaie légale Suisse, avec, en plus, les intérêts simples de cette somme, au taux de 5 pour cent l'an, du 25 Juin, 1889, jusqu'au jour du paiement.

"2. Cette somme, après déduction de ce qui sera nécessaire pour couvrir les frais de l'Arbitrage incombant aux parties demanderesses, et, de plus, le reliquat des 28,000*l.* versées à compte en 1890 seront affectés au paiement des créanciers obligatoires, et autres, s'il y a lieu, de la Delagoa Bay Company, selon leur rang.

"Les parties demanderesses dresseront à cet effet un état de distribution.

"Le Gouvernement du Portugal aura à verser entre les mains du Gouvernement des États-Unis la somme qui, suivant le dit état, reviendra à Mme. MacMurdo, représentée par ce dernier Gouvernement, en sa qualité de créancière obligatoire en 1er et en 2e rang.

"Il versera le surplus au Gouvernement de la Grande-Bretagne pour le compte de tous les autres ayants droit.

"3. Le délai de six mois fixé par le dernier alinéa de l'Article IV du Compromis Arbitral courra à partir de ce jour.

"4. Quant aux frais:

"Les dépens des parties seront compensés. Les frais de l'Arbitrage, suivant état à fournir en conformité de l'Article V du Compromis, seront supportés par parts égales, par les trois parties en cause, soit par un tiers par chacune d'elles.

"5. Les conclusions des parties, pour autant qu'elles diffèrent du dispositif ci-dessus, sont écartées.

"6. Une expédition authentique de la présente sentence sera délivrée par l'intermédiaire du Conseil Fédéral Suisse à chacune des trois parties en cause.

"Ainsi délibéré en séance du Tribunal Arbitral, et expédié à Berne le 29 Mars 1900.

"Les motifs ont été approuvés à Berne le 30 Mai, 1900."

The manner in which the amount awarded is to be distributed is specified on pp. 195, 196, 197.

It will be seen that no exceptional treatment is to be accorded to Mrs. MacMurdo, the American claimant, but that she is to be treated precisely like any other first or second mortgage bondholder in the Delagoa Bay Railway Company, in so far as the amount of her share in the Award is concerned.

On p. 197, last paragraph, it is laid down that Portugal need not await scheme of distribution, but may at once free herself from further responsibility by placing the entire sum due in the hands of some depositary of undoubted stability.

In connection with this passage, it will be seen from the accompanying letter from the Treasury of the 7th July (Paper B), that a proposal was made to the Bank of England on the 3rd instant by the Comptoir National d'Escompte de Paris, to pay over a sum of 939,996*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.*, with some addition for accrued interest, in full discharge of the obligations of the Portuguese Government towards the Governments of Great Britain and the United States under the Award. As the Bank of England had no instructions to receive the amount, and were unable to give a receipt in the form required, the money was declined.

On the 13th instant the United States' Ambassador addressed a note to Lord Salisbury (Paper C). This note states the readiness of the United States' Government to accept a plan, understood to be the result of suggestions made by the British claimants to the American claimant, and which is briefly as follows:—

1. The first mortgage debenture holders agree to accept 4 per cent. instead of 7 per cent. on their securities, thus creating a new and separate fund of about 240,000*l.*

Of this the American claimant is to receive 83,000*l.*, and is to pay all costs and expenses in connection with the arbitration, for which she or the United States' Government are liable.

Another sum of 7,800*l.* out of this fund is to be paid to the United States' Government for distribution among the depositors of 39,000*l.* of second debentures, which were delivered to the United States' Minister in London in 1891.

With these deductions, the remainder of the fund, that is to say, 149,200*l.*, less the British costs of arbitration, is to be distributed among the other holders of second debentures.

A further sum of 2,500*l.* with 4 per cent. interest is to be paid to the United States' Government for equal division between the American claimant and the depositors of 2,500*l.* first debentures with the United States' Minister in London in 1891.

The note explains that under the Award as it stands the first debenture holders, if paid interest at 7 per cent. as they claim, would practically exhaust the whole fund, the only amount coming to the United States being 2,500*l.* with interest on account of first debentures deposited in 1891 with the United States' Minister in London.

If Her Majesty's Government accept the plan, the United States' Government will join them in notifying Portugal of their readiness to receive the indemnity and to give joint and several receipts for the whole amount, and for the parts to be paid by Portugal to each Government respectively under the proposed plan.

The question, however, arises as to how far Her Majesty's Government would be justified, and if justified, would be wise, in taking any responsibility not specifically cast upon them by the terms of the Award itself.

Lord Salisbury is disposed to think that Her Majesty's Government should confine themselves to carefully fulfilling their obligations under the "Compromis Arbitral" (see pp. 88 to 91 of the Volume, Paper A), and the Award, and he doubts whether they can actively participate in any arrangements other than those contemplated by these documents, for the division of the sum awarded among the rightful claimants.

He is disposed to think that any arrangement between the various claimants such as is set out in Mr. Choate's note should be carried out independently of Her Majesty's Government by some machinery, which would give it effect after the payments resulting from the strict interpretation of the Award have been made at the instance of Her Majesty's Government.

I am to request you to take these papers into your consideration, and favour his Lordship with your opinion:—

1. Whether, having regard to the language of the Award, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in entering into the question dealt with in the note of the United States' Ambassador.

2. Should your answer to the previous question be in the affirmative, whether it would be advisable or prudent on the part of Her Majesty's Government to enter into the question dealt with in the note of the United States' Ambassador.

Lord Salisbury would at the same time be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.

We do not think Her Majesty's Government would be justified in being, or ought to be, involved in any scheme of distribution outside the Award. The scheme suggested by the American Ambassador appears to us to be one entirely outside and apart from the Award.

Gentlemen,

Delagoa Bay Railway Arbitration: Distribution of Award.

IN your letter of the 24th July last you reported, with reference to a proposal made by the United States' Ambassador respecting the disposal of the sum awarded by the Delagoa Bay Arbitration Tribunal, "that you did not think Her Majesty's Government would be justified in being, or ought to be, involved in any scheme of distribution outside the Award." I have now the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you a letter, together with its inclosures, signed by Representatives of the first and second mortgage debenture-holders of the Delagoa Bay and East African Railway Company, submitting a scheme for the distribution of the money paid under the Award.*

The substance of the Agreement is given in the second paragraph of the letter.

The third paragraph states that this scheme, which was unanimously approved by meetings of both classes of debenture-holders, is by virtue of the trust deeds (Inclosures 3 and 4) binding upon all the debenture-holders, and the writers are informed that it will be accepted by the Government of the United States.

If this statement is correct, the arrangement would seem to have the approval of all claimants under the Award, but Lord Salisbury has asked for an assurance from the Company that the scheme has the consent of all the parties who can possibly claim a right to share in the distribution of the money paid under the Award.

By clauses 2 and 7 of the "heads of compromise or arrangement" (Inclosure 5), it is agreed that the receipts of Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, and Co. shall be a good and effectual discharge to the Governments of Great Britain and of the United States.

I am to request you to take these papers into your consideration, and I am to inquire whether the facts reported therein in any way affect the opinion reported in your letter of the 24th July.

Lord Salisbury would, at the same time, be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

Assuming that all the beneficiaries are bound, we see no reason why Her Majesty's Government should not concur in the scheme proposed.

Gold of late South African Republic: Shipment at Lourenço Marques.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers marked in the accompanying list, on the subject of certain gold which is alleged to have been improperly seized by the late Government of the South African Republic.

The Johannesburg Chamber of Mines, acting on behalf of the Mining Companies whose mines had been worked by the late Government of the South African Republic, represented that nearly 2,000,000*l.* of gold had been taken from the mines, and that a large amount of bar gold was believed to be at Lourenço Marques, to which the officials of the late Government could have no right, as they had now become private individuals. The Chamber therefore asked that steps might be taken to recover the gold.

The Portuguese Government was approached on the subject, and issued an order prohibiting the export of bar gold from Lourenço Marques.

Shortly after the date of this order, Messrs. Wilcken and Ackermann, of Lourenço Marques, who were well-known agents of the late South African Republic, alleged that they held a large amount of gold which had been delivered to them by the Government of the Republic in payment of goods legitimately imported, and they therefore asked permission to export it. They offered to prove the legitimacy of the transaction by an inspection of their books. This offer was eventually accepted. But on Her Majesty's Consul-General proceeding to act on it, the firm disclosed only such documents and evidence as showed that the Transvaal Government had handed to them 105,000*l.* in bar gold, and refused to disclose the names and accounts that would have been required to satisfy an Accountant of the truth of their original statement that the gold had been handed to them in payment of goods legitimately imported. Notwithstanding these facts, however, the Consul-General did not feel justified in pressing for a further detention of the gold, and, having so informed the Portuguese authorities, it was allowed by them to be exported.

Messrs. Wilcken and Ackermann had already exported a large amount of bar gold not long before the issue of the prohibition to export, and when this gold reached Hamburg an embargo was laid upon it, as is understood, by a German Insurance Company which had granted a policy on certain gold which the Transvaal Government had commandeered soon after the beginning of the war. This step was taken, according to a verbal communication by Mr. Fraser (of Messrs. Goertz and Co.), not because the Company had any special claim to this particular parcel of gold, or could in any way identify it with the commandeered gold, but because they believed it to be the property of the Government of the South African Republic, and therefore capable of arrest to satisfy the Company's claims.

Her Majesty's Consul at Trieste has now written to the effect that uncoined gold was exported on the "Styria" from Lourenço Marques by Messrs. Wilcken and Ackermann on the 2nd October, and therefore after the issue of the prohibition against exportation.

Advances made by a Trieste bank on this gold were used to make certain payments to ex-Transvaal soldiers who had returned in the "Styria."

The refusal of Messrs. Wilcken and Ackermann to show how the gold passed into their possession as payment for goods delivered, the action of the German Insurance Company in laying an embargo on the gold at Hamburg, and the use to which that landed at Trieste was put tend to show, it is thought, that Messrs. Wilcken and Ackermann held the gold merely as agents for the late Government of the South African Republic, and in these circumstances, Lord Lansdowne would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to whether it would be advisable, having regard to the previous history and all the circumstances of the present case, to bring before the Portuguese Government the facts which have recently come to light, and to request that Government in any future case of a similar kind to stop the export of the gold until the would-be exporter produces proof of the legitimacy of the transaction by which he became possessed of it, and further, whether, having regard to the fact that the gold has already actually left Lourenço Marques, Her Majesty's Government can otherwise take any further (and, if so, what) action in the matter.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion the facts stated with reference to the exportation of gold by Messrs. Wilcken and Ackermann are not sufficient to support any claim to the ownership of such gold, and we do not think the Portuguese Government, upon such facts, could reasonably be asked to take any further action.

As regards future cases, unless there are facts which can be submitted to the Portuguese Government which show a title to gold that may be about to be exported, we do not think that the Portuguese Government could be asked to do more than delay the exportation pending inquiry, and, unless upon such title being shown, there would be no ground for requiring the would-be exporter to produce proofs of the legitimacy of the transaction by which he became possessed of it.

As to the gold in the present case, on the materials before us, we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government cannot take any further action.

Foreign Office, July 26, 1900.

Gentlemen,

Trade-marks Convention with Salvador. Proposed Additional Articles.

I HAVE the honour to state, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, that, in the course of the negotiation of a Convention between this country and Salvador relating to trade-marks, the Government of that Republic proposed that the arrangement should include in the form of Articles, copies of which are inclosed, stipulations respecting the position of mercantile and other firms and Societies in the two countries, and providing for protection against the circulation of counterfeit notes and coins.

His Lordship has now decided to instruct Her Majesty's Minister in Central America to sign a Convention restricted to the matter of trade-marks, and to inform him that the question of dealing in a separate arrangement with the subjects of the two Articles referred to is under consideration.

In these circumstances Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your opinion whether the proposed provisions would be in accordance with English law, and, if so, whether they could be usefully and properly embodied in a separate Convention with Salvador.

His Lordship would also be glad to receive any general observations which you may have to offer on the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ST. JOHN BRODRICK.

Report.

We think Article III unnecessary so far as the establishment of such associations and agencies in this country is concerned.

The English law recognizes foreign corporations, and the provision for their enjoyment of the rights given by the law of their domicile, so far as it is not opposed to English law, is nugatory. We would refer to the Conventions of the 15th May, 1862, with France, of the 25th November, 1867, with Italy, and of the 27th March, 1874, with Germany, for clauses dealing with this subject.

As to Article IV, it is objectionable, and would not be practicable in its enforcement. It might be pointed out that any foreigner can set in motion the laws in this country relating to forgery or counterfeiting if his rights are infringed.

We cannot recommend the adoption of either of these Articles.

Annex.

Draft of Articles III and IV of Convention between Great Britain and Salvador relating to Trade-Marks.

ARTICLE III.

MERCANTILE, banking or credit, industrial and agricultural corporate Bodies or Associations of either Contracting State will enjoy in the other such rights and privileges as are now granted, or may hereafter be granted to them by the laws of the country of their domicile, provided that such rights and privileges are not opposed to the laws of the State that has to afford them protection.

Agencies, branches, or delegations of such corporate Bodies or Associations, whether mercantile, banking or credit, industrial or agricultural, of one Contracting State, which are established, or may hereafter be established, in the other Contracting State, will enjoy the rights and privileges referred to in the preceding paragraph, providing that they fulfil the formalities which are enjoined by the local laws, and present the guarantees required by the State which grants the protection.

ARTICLE IV.

The Contracting Parties guarantee to one another the most complete protection against every kind of forgery and counterfeiting of monetary tokens, marks, seals, State bonds and notes or obligations issued by private individuals, public or private corporate Bodies or Associations, whether mercantile, banking or credit, industrial or agricultural.

Consequently, as soon as one of the two Contracting Parties receives notice that one of the forgeries or counterfeitings provided for in the preceding paragraph has taken place in its dominions or possessions, it will order the embargo of the monetary tokens, marks, seals, public papers or bonds, notes or obligations that have been forged, and of the machines and other instruments which served for the forgery. The embargo will take place at the demand of the law officers or at the request of the interested party, but always in accordance with the internal legislation of either State, and without prejudice to the prosecution and punishment, in accordance with such legislation, of the crimes of forgery and counterfeiting.

Siam: Draft [Registration] Order in Council.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith the correspondence noted in the accompanying list, relative to the registration of British subjects in Siam.

I am at the same time to inclose the draft of an Order in Council which has been prepared by Mr. Albert Gray in conformity with the opinion expressed in the Law Officers' Report of the 8th February, 1899, a copy of which is inclosed for convenience of reference.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the draft Order may, in its present form, be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

Draft Order in Council.

REGISTRATION.

General Provisions.

WHEREAS by Treaty, capitulation, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty has jurisdiction within the territories of the King of Siam:

Now, therefore:—

1. In this Order the expression "British subject" includes a person who, by virtue of section 15 of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise, enjoys Her Majesty's protection in Siam.

2. A register of British subjects shall be kept in the office of every Consulate in Siam.

3. Every British subject resident or arriving in Siam, being of the age of 21 years or upwards, or being married, or a widower, or widow, though under that age, may, subject to the provisions of this Order, be registered in a Consular register.

4. The registration of a man shall comprise the registration of his wife or wives if living with him; and the registration of the head of a family shall comprise the registration of all females and minors, being his relatives, in whatever degree, living under the same roof with him at the time of his registration.

5. A British subject resident in Siam shall not be registered elsewhere than in the register of the Consular district in which he resides; but a person arriving in Siam may be registered either in the register of the Consular district in which he first arrives or in that of the district in which he goes to reside.

6. A person arriving in Siam, and not already registered, must apply for registration within one month after arrival; a person resident in Siam must apply for registration in January in every year: Provided that a person who fails to obtain registration within the time so limited may be registered at any time if he excuses his failure to the satisfaction of the Consular officer.

7. A person registered in any register of British subjects established under "The Siam Order in Council, 1899," shall be registered under the provisions of this Order, unless the Consular officer is satisfied, after inquiry, that the previous registration was erroneous, or that such person is not entitled to registration under the provisions of this Order.

8. The Consular officer shall, on every registration, give to the person registered a certificate of registration signed by him, and sealed with his Consular seal.

9. The name of a wife, if her registration is, under the provisions of this Order, comprised in her husband's, shall be indorsed on the husband's certificate.

10. The names and descriptions of females and minors, whose registration is under the provisions of this Order comprised in that of the head of a family, shall be indorsed on the certificate of the head of the family.

11. Every person applying to be registered under this Order shall, unless excused by the Consular officer, attend personally for that purpose at the Consulate on each occasion of registration.

12. Every person shall, on every registration of himself, pay a fee of 2s. 6d., or such other fee as the Secretary of State from time to time appoints. The amount of the fee may be uniform for all persons, or may vary according to the position and circumstances of different classes if the Secretary of State from time to time so directs, but may not in any case exceed 5s.

13. If any British subject fails to obtain registration under the provisions of this Order, he shall not be entitled to be recognized or protected as a British subject in Siam, but he shall, although not registered, be subject to the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Consular Courts in Siam.

Provisions affecting particular Classes of British Subjects.

14. A person, not of Asiatic descent, arriving in Siam, and applying to be registered as a British subject, shall be so registered if the Consular officer is satisfied, after such inquiry as he may deem fit, that he is entitled to the status of a British subject.

15. A person of Asiatic descent arriving in Siam, and applying to be registered as a British subject, shall be so registered if he (a) produces a passport as a British subject from British India or a British possession; or (b) files an affidavit or sworn declaration showing that he was born within Her Majesty's dominions or within the territory of any Prince or State in India under the suzerainty or in alliance with Her Majesty, or that he has been naturalized in the United Kingdom; and (c) in either case gives satisfactory evidence of his identity.

16. A person born in Siam, being the child of a person of Asiatic descent who arrived in Siam, may be registered as a British subject if it is proved that the father (a) was registered as a British subject at the time of the child's birth; or (b) ~~though~~ being entitled was prevented from being so registered by causes for which he was not responsible.

Any child of a person registered under the provisions of this Article shall not be entitled to be registered as a British subject by reason only that his father and grandfather were so registered.

17. A person of Asiatic descent, being a native of Upper Burmah or of the British Shan States, shall not be registered as a British subject if it appears that he arrived in Siam before the 1st January, 1886, and has become domiciled there.

18. A woman, being the widow of a person of Asiatic descent who was in his lifetime registered as a British subject, shall be registered as a British subject if her name appears on the last certificate given to her husband before his death, but not otherwise.

19. The Consular officer may, without fee, register any British subjects, being minors, living in the houses of foreigners or Siamese subjects.

20. Article 94 of the "Siam Order in Council, 1889," is hereby repealed, provided all registers kept under that Order shall continue in force until superseded by registers kept under this Order.

21. This Order may be cited as "The Siam (Registration) Order in Council, 1900."

Foreign Office to the Lord Chancellor.

Registration of British subjects. O. in C. in Siam: As to wife or wives.

My dear Lord Chancellor, Foreign Office, November 7, 1900.

WE are anxious for an opinion from you on a small question of wording which has arisen in carrying into effect an Agreement with the Siamese Government for the registration of British subjects in Siam. You have already advised on the subject.

The Law Officers considered that as the new rules cut down in some respects the previous rights of British subjects they ought to be embodied in an Order in Council.

An Order has been drafted accordingly.

The Law Officers have approved it, but as you will see they think the terms of Article 4 rather wide.

That Article provides, inter alia, that "the registration of a man shall comprise the registration of his wife or wives if living with him."

The Siam Order in Council of 1889 provided only, section 94 (1), that "the registration of a man shall be deemed to include the registration of his wife (unless she is living apart from him)."

Your opinion given in January 1899 was that, in view of the provision in the Interpretation Clause of the Order that the singular includes the plural, the word "wife" was sufficient to include wives.

Davidson thinks that you would be in favour of omitting in the new Order in Council the words "or wives" as superfluous, and that this is desirable in order to avoid formal and specific recognition of polygamy by an Order in Council.

On the other hand, supposing these words to be omitted, I think that a Consular officer reading in Article 4 "the registration of his wife" and collating it with Articles 9 and 10 "the name of a wife," "the names and descriptions of females and minors," might feel grave doubts whether he might register and indorse on any one certificate more than the name of a single wife.

Could you kindly let us have your view?

Yours very sincerely,
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

P.S.—I have annexed all the papers which I think you will require.
Law Officers' opinion and draft Order in Council.
Mr. Gray's letter inclosing the draft Order in Council.
Law Officers' previous opinion that an Order in Council is necessary.
Your opinion of the 10th January, 1899, with Siam Order in Council of 1889.
T. H. S.

I think the words "or wives" ought to stand.

I think this was the legal construction of the Order as it stood before, but I think it is better to make it plain.

I do not appreciate the objection to plainly expressing what is the legal interpretation of the one word.

We cannot get rid of the fact that we do in fact recognize the polygamous marriages of British subjects both in India and Siam.

Maltreatment of brothers Justice in Switzerland.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 13, 1900.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the inclosed papers relative to the treatment experienced by two brothe[illegible] Messrs. Michael and William Justice, British subjects, at the hands of their employer, M. Barral, the Superior of the Bethlehem Institute at Immensee, and of the police authorities of the Canton of Schwyz.

In November last a letter was received from the Messrs. Justice complaining that owing to their refusal to join M. Barral's "Order" they were overworked and underfed, and were not receiving regular payment of their salaries. The letter was referred to Her Majesty's Consul-General at Zurich, who wrote to M. Barral, with the result that the letter lodged a complaint against the Messrs. Justice with the District Magistrate, and the brothers were eventually sent in custody, under circumstances of considerable hardship and great indignity, to Her Majesty's Consulate at Zurich.

On the 27th January Mr. William Justice, who with his brother had been sent to his home in Ireland, died from the effects, it is alleged, of the cold and hunger suffered at the time that he was in the custody of the Swiss police.

Representations with regard to the case had already been addressed to the Swiss Government by Her Majesty's Minister at Berne, and in consequence of the unsatisfactory nature of their reply, which will be found inclosed in Mr. St. John's despatch No. 15 of the 23rd February, he was instructed to submit all the papers in the case to M. Boiceau, the Legal Adviser to Her Majesty's Legation.

M. Boiceau in his Report, which forms the inclosure in Mr. Lowther's despatch No. 66 of the 27th ultimo, gives a complete and detailed account of the whole case and expresses the opinion that the surviving brother and Mrs. Justice, the mother, can only obtain the reparation to which he considers they are entitled by the institution of proceedings before the competent Court of Law against the police authorities at Kussnacht and M. Barral.

Lord Salisbury is disposed to think that, in the interest of British subjects generally, every effort should be made to obtain legal redress for the treatment to which the Messrs. Justice were exposed, and that a competent Swiss lawyer should be employed for the purpose.

It is, however, unlikely that Mrs. Justice and her son can themselves bear the expense of legal proceedings, or give security for costs, and it seems doubtful whether a suit undertaken by them in formâ pauperis would offer satisfactory prospect of success.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your observations on the case generally, and especially with your opinion as to the expediency of instituting legal proceedings, and whether the case is one of such a nature as to justify an application to the Treasury to defray the necessary expenses.

I have, &c.

Report.

Upon the facts stated there has been oppression of a gross character exercised against the brothers Justice.

As to the question of legal liability by Swiss law, we must, of course, rely upon the opinion of M. Boiceau; we have not the materials for forming an independent judgment on the question of Swiss law and procedure. We understand him to suggest a suit against M. Barral, in the nature of an action for a malicious arrest, and against the Magistrate for lending himself to M. Barral's proceedings and for neglect of duty.

We think that the case is one of such a nature that the Treasury may properly be asked to defray the necessary expenses for the legal proceedings advised by M. Boiceau.

Sir,

Irregular Cyprus Corps for service in army. WE were honoured with your commands signified to us in Mr. Bertram Cox's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed to request our consideration of certain questions which had arisen with regard to a proposal of the Colonial Defence Committee, having for its object the raising of an Irregular Corps in Cyprus for service with Her Majesty's army abroad.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to transmit to us copies of (1) the Convention between Great Britain and Turkey, dated the 4th June, 1878; (2) the Annex to that Convention, dated the 1st July, 1878; (3) Agreement of the 14th August, 1878, as to vesting powers of Government of Cyprus in Her Majesty; (4) Order in Council, dated the 14th September, 1878; (5) Order in Council, dated the 30th November, 1882; (6) Army Act, 1881; (7) Cyprus Ordinance 5 of 1878; (8) Law Officers' Reports of the 21st March, 1879, and 8th January, 1881, with regard to the position of natives of Cyprus.

That it would be seen that by the Convention of the 4th June, 1878 (Article I), the Island of Cyprus was assigned to England to be "occupied and administered" by her until such time as Russia should restore to Turkey the Asiatic possessions (Batoum, Kars, &c.) which she had taken from her in the late war.

And that by the Annex to this Convention, dated the 1st July, 1878, certain conditions were imposed upon such annexation and administration, and an express provision was inserted (Article VI) that upon such restoration of conquests as above mentioned the island would be evacuated by England, and the Convention be at an end.

That on the 14th August, 1878, an Agreement was made transferring to and vesting in Her Majesty, "for the term of the occupation and no longer, full powers for making Laws and Conventions for the government of the island in Her Majesty's name, and for the regulation of its commercial and Consular relations and affairs free from control by the Sublime Porte."

That on the 14th September, 1878, an Order in Council was passed for making provision "for the exercise of the power and jurisdiction vested by Treaty in Her Majesty the Queen in and over the Island of Cyprus" by the appointment of a High Commissioner, and of Legislative and Executive Councils with the usual powers given to a Colonial Governor.

That that Order was amended by a further Order, dated the 30th November, 1882, so far as matters relating to legislation and the Legislative Council were concerned.

That it would be seen from the despatch of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of the 30th May, 1878, proposing the Convention that the intention was that the Island of Cyprus should "still continue to be part of the Ottoman Empire," and it was there stated what where the reasons which led Her Majesty's Government to desire to occupy the island.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was further to refer us to "The Army Act, 1881" (44 & 45 Vict., cap. 58), sections 95, 177, and 190 (8) and (23), which latter section included Cyprus in the definition of "Colony," and to Cyprus Ordinance 5 of 1878.

Finally, he was to request us to take the papers into our consideration, and to advise you whether the conditions under which Great Britain occupied the Island of Cyprus would permit of the passing of an Ordinance in Cyprus for the purpose of raising a force which would be liable to serve with Her Majesty's army in any part of the world.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and in obedience to your commands have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, it would not be competent for the Legislative Council of Cyprus by an Ordinance to authorize the raising of a force for service in Her Majesty's dominions outside Cyprus.

The power granted to Her Majesty by the Agreement of the 14th August, 1878, to make Laws and Conventions for the government of the island, and under which the Legislative Council is constituted, would not extend to raising forces for service outside the island.

We have, &c.

[November 21, 1900.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, November 15, 1900.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you herewith, for your consideration, a despatch, together with its inclosures, from Mr. H. W. de Sausmarez, Assistant Judge of Her Majesty's Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, relative to a question which has arisen with regard to the jurisdiction of that Court in the case of one Zacharia Eutychides. Jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Court over Zacharia Eutychides, charged with forgery.

The facts of the case are fully set out in this despatch, and are briefly as follows:—

In the months of March, April, and May of this year, a series of frauds were perpetrated by means of forged cheques on the "Bank of Mitylene," a Turkish institution carrying on business at Mitylene, in the Island of Lesbos.

An application was made on behalf of the bank to the Supreme Court at Constantinople for a warrant of arrest of Eutychides, who is a British subject, on the ground of his having been a party to the forging, or, at all events, to the uttering of these cheques.

Mr. de Sausmarez, the Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court, to whom this application was made, intimated a doubt as to the Court's jurisdiction in the matter, and the application was thereupon dropped.

Subsequently, however, a fresh application was made on the sworn information of the cashier of the bank, Demetrius François Vernondaki, who is a Greek subject, and who produced an authorization from his Consul for his submission to Her Britannic Majesty's Court.

A warrant for the arrest of Eutychides, on the charge of forging two cheques, and of uttering the same, knowing them to be forged, was thereupon granted. Before, however, the warrant could be executed, Eutychides had left the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Consular Court, but his arrest and surrender having been applied for under the provisions of Article 52 of "The Ottoman Order in Council, 1899," and "The Fugitive Offenders' Act, 1881," he was surrendered to Her Majesty's Supreme Court for the Ottoman Dominions, under the warrant of Her Majesty's then Secretary of State for the Home Department, dated the 18th September, 1900, and has, under the said warrant, been since conveyed to Constantinople in the custody of an official of the Consular Court.

The cheques which form the subject of the prosecution purport to be drawn by the firm of Doros Brothers, who, like Vernondaki, are subjects of His Hellenic Majesty.

The specific charges (1) of uttering a forged cheque for £ T. 400; (2) of obtaining £ T. 400 from Vernondaki by false pretences; and (3) of falsification of accounts, on which, as a result of the preliminary examination, Eutychides has been committed for trial before Her Majesty's Supreme Consular Court, will be found fully set out in the inclosure in Mr. de Sausmarez' despatch.

It is not suggested that the loss will be borne by any party other than the Bank of Mitylene, but Vernondaki contends that it was necessary for him to apply to Her Majesty's Supreme Consular Court, he being a subject of His Hellenic Majesty. No demand has been made to Her Majesty's Court by the Ottoman authorities for the delivery to them of Eutychides, nor have they objected to the exercise by that Court of jurisdiction in the case; they have, however, refused to hand over to Her Majesty's Supreme Court the cheques which form the subject of the prosecution, and the Court is only in possession of copies of those documents.

I am to inclose a copy of "The Ottoman Order in Council, 1899," and in connection with the general question of British jurisdiction in the Ottoman Dominions, I am to refer you to pp. 152–154 of the late Mr. W. E. Hall's "Treatise on the Foreign Powers and Jurisdiction of the British Crown." In cases where a British subject has committed a criminal offence against an Ottoman subject within the Ottoman Dominions, such British subject has, in practice, for many years past been held to be justiciable by the Ottoman Tribunals, a British Dragoman being present to watch the proceedings on his behalf.

In view, however, of the fact that the prosecutor in this case is not an Ottoman, but a Greek subject, and that he has, moreover, with the consent of the Greek authorities, himself invoked the exercise of Her Majesty's jurisdiction, Lord Lansdowne, as at present advised, is of opinion that it is neither necessary nor desirable for Her Majesty's Government themselves to initiate any discussion, or to suggest that any doubt exists, with reference to the extent of the jurisdiction, either sole or concurrent, of the Supreme Consular Court in the case of criminal offences committed by British subjects within the Ottoman Dominions against other British subjects on the one hand, or against the subjects of third Powers on the other, or to appeal as matters stand to the various Treaties bearing on the subject. The Treaty between the United States and the Porte, to Article IV of which Mr. de Sausmarez refers, is, however, inclosed, should you wish to refer to it, and other Treaties, containing analogous provisions, are mentioned in the note on p. 153 of Mr. Hall's work on Foreign Jurisdiction, to which reference has already been made.

It is to be assumed, for the purpose of this reference, that the criminal offences which form the subject of the present charge were committed by a British subject at Mitylene, in the Island of Lesbos, in the Ottoman Dominions, and that they were committed against the subject of a third Power, and not against a subject of the Ottoman Porte.

In pursuance of the provisions of section 4 of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," Mr. de Sausmarez has now submitted the following question to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs:—

"Whether the trial of the said Zacharia Eutychides upon the said charges is a proceeding within the jurisdiction of Her Majesty in Turkey?"

It becomes necessary to carefully consider the exact terms in which Lord Lansdowne should answer the question thus formally submitted.

I am accordingly to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and, as the accused person is awaiting his trial, that you will, at your early convenience, favour his Lordship with your opinion—

1. As to the precise terms of the answer which his Lordship should return to the specific question put by the Assistant Judge of Her Majesty's Supreme Consular Court for the Ottoman Dominions.

2. Should you be of opinion that the said Court has jurisdiction in the matter, whether it should formally request the Ottoman authorities to hand over the cheques necessary for the purposes of the prosecution.

I am also to request that you will at the same time be good enough to favour Lord Lansdowne with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.

1. The Assistant Judge of Her Majesty's Supreme Consular Court for the Ottoman Dominions should be informed, in reply to the question submitted by him under section 4 of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," that the trial of Zacharia Eutychides on the charges appended to the document submitting the said question, is a proceeding within the jurisdiction of Her Majesty in Turkey.

In our opinion, the jurisdiction exists both by custom and also under the Treaty rights of Her Majesty's Government, but it is unnecessary, in replying to the Assistant Judge, to refer to the origin or foundation of the jurisdiction.

2. Application should be made by the Court, and, if necessary, by the Foreign Office, to the Ottoman authorities to hand over, or produce, the cheques necessary for the purposes of the prosecution.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. H. Bertram Cox's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by you to acknowledge the receipt of our Report of the 10th July last, on the subject of the proposal for raising an Irregular Corps in Cyprus for service with Her Majesty's army abroad.

That you desired Mr. Bertram Cox to return to us the papers which were referred to in our Report, and to request that we would consider further, whether, in view of section 176 (3) of "The Army Act, 1881,"—which by section 190 (23) extended to Cyprus—any local law would be necessary for the raising and the discipline of a force of Irregulars, to be paid for from Imperial funds and officered by officers of the regular army, but available for general service.

That as regarded the general question of raising troops in Cyprus, you desired

Mr. Bertram Cox to point out that there appeared to be nothing in the Conventions with Turkey to prevent such a step, that the Cypriot was before the occupation liable to military service or to payment of the exemption tax, and that that liability was transferred to Her Majesty—the tax being still levied, and that that circumstance would seem to afford justification of the proposal to utilize the military services of Cypriots in lieu of the tax, especially as it was only intended to recruit volunteers, and further that the island was assigned to Her Majesty in order to enable her to make provision for implementing her obligation to defend the Asiatic dominions of the Sultan, and that, in order that that obligation might be fulfilled, it seemed essential that Her Majesty should be able to defend her own dominions from attack, and that with that object should be at liberty to make use of the resources handed over by the Sultan for the purpose of enabling her to fulfil her obligation.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was further to point out that a Chinese regiment had been raised at Wei-hai-Wei and was now serving against disorderly forces in the very country which granted the lease of the territory in which the regiment was recruited; and that a closer parallel was afforded by the practice in Bosnia, a country which was held from the Sultan of Turkey on similar terms to those governing Her Majesty's occupation of Cyprus. That Mr. Bertram Cox was to inclose copy of a letter from the Foreign Office, transmitting a despatch from Her Majesty's former Ambassador at Vienna, which shewed that whereas Bosnians were treated, for the purposes of naturalization, exactly as any other foreigners, yet soldiers in the Bosnian regiments took the oath to the Emperor and were treated in every way as Austro-Hungarian soldiers, though remaining Bosnian subjects.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to request that we would take the matter into our consideration, and would report:—

1. Whether a Cypriot Corps could not be raised without infringing the Conventions under which the island was occupied;

2. If such a corps could be raised, whether the provisions of the Army Act were not sufficient authority for the necessary action on the part of Her Majesty's Government without any further legislation?

In obedience to your commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That a Cypriot Corps could be raised for service in Cyprus without any question of infringement of the Convention, and—while there would be power to legislate in Cyprus for such a force—the members of it would be subject to the provisions of the Army Act in so far as these provisions were not modified by an Ordinance of the Legislature of Cyprus, or under section 177 of "The Army Act, 1881."

We understand, however, that the question put to us, relates to a proposal to raise a Cypriot Corps for service in any part of the world.

By the Convention, Cyprus was assigned to be occupied and administered by England. We do not think that, if the Sultan should object, the assignment of the island for this limited purpose could be relied upon as justifying the raising of a force there for general service. No objection could, however, properly be taken by any power other than Turkey, and if it be the case, as suggested by Sir N. O'Conor's despatch of the 20th June, 1900, that the Sultan will not raise any objection, this point will probably not prove of practical importance. Another difficulty, however, arises with reference to the status of Cypriots. The proposed corps would be part of Her Majesty's regular forces within the definition in the Army Act, 1881, section 190 (8), as being a force consisting of soldiers liable by the terms of their enlistment to render continuously, for a term, military service to Her Majesty in any part of the world—(see Colonial Office to Law Officers, 27th June, 1900.)

By section 95 of "The Army Act, 1881," the number of aliens serving together, at any one time, in any corps of the regular forces is not to exceed the proportion of one alien to every fifty British subjects—a provision which was first introduced into our military law in 1837 by 1 Vict., cap. 29.

If Cypriots are to be regarded as aliens, it is manifest that this provision would be violated by the formation of the proposed corps as part of Her Majesty's forces, as defined by the Army Act. To treat Cypriots as British subjects would be inconsistent with the Reports of the Law Officers of the 11th November, 1878, the 21st March, 1879, and the 8th January, 1881, and while we observe that some relaxation of this view has obtained in the matter of passports and protection under them, we do not feel justified, on the materials before us, in advising a new departure of such gravity as would be involved in the assertion that Cypriots are to be treated as British subjects for the purposes of the Army Act.

Section 176 (3) of "The Army Act, 1881," does not remove this difficulty. It does not confer upon Her Majesty any power of raising forces which she does not otherwise possess. It only renders subject to military law any such forces as are there referred to, and which have been lawfully raised.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, May 4, 1900.

Sir,

Detention of S.S. "Tartar" at Hong Kong.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Lucas' letter of the 5th October, 1899, stating that he was directed by you to request our consideration of a question which had arisen with reference to the detention of a vessel chartered by the United States' Government by the harbour authorities of Hong Kong.

That it appeared from a note from the United States' Ambassador (a copy of which was transmitted to us) that the British steam-ship "Tartar" was chartered by the United States' Government, and used as a military transport for the conveyance of troops to and from the United States and the Philippine Islands, and that while on her homeward voyage she was detained at Hong Kong for non-compliance with the local port Regulations.

That in answer to telegraphic inquiries made by the Colonial Office, the Governor of Hong Kong replied that the British ship "Tartar," carrying United States' troops, had entered the port of Hong Kong on the 6th September, and that complaint had been made to the Harbour-master by some persons on board of overcrowding. That on the application for clearance of the vessel on the 13th September, it appeared that the certificate of the "Tartar" showed that she was licensed to carry 741 passengers, whereas the declaration of the master showed that she had on board 1,140. That thereupon the Harbour-master declined to grant a clearance until sufficient apparatus for preservation of life had been supplied. That this was done, and the vessel cleared on the afternoon of the 14th September.

That in refusing a clearance under the circumstances, the Harbour-master acted in accordance with the provisions of Ordinance 26 of 1891 of Hong Kong, and the Attorney-General of the Colony had advised that, having regard to the provisions of section 4 (5) and section 6 (1) of that Ordinance, such action was correct.

That it appeared, however, to you that it was open to question whether the "Tartar" being employed, though temporary, as a transport in the service of the United States' Government should not have been considered a public ship, and as such not bound to comply with the provisions of the local law.

That Mr. Lucas was to request us to take these matters into our consideration and to advise:—

1. Whether the "Tartar" was a public ship.
2. Whether the "Tartar" was bound to comply with the provisions of the local law of Hong Kong while in the waters of the Colony.
3. Whether the Harbour-master was justified in refusing to clear the "Tartar" under the circumstances set forth.

4. Generally.

In obedience to your commands we have taken the matter into our consideration and have the honour to

Report—

1. That the facts are not stated in sufficient detail for us to arrive at a conclusion on this point. But it is usual to accept the assurance of a Government that a vessel is a public vessel of that Government, and we think this assurance ought to be accepted in such a case as this. The "Tartar" would be an American public vessel if under the control of officers commissioned by the United States' Government, and the assertion of the Government on the point should for such a purpose as this be treated as conclusive.

2. If the "Tartar" should have been treated as a public vessel of the United States—as we think she should—she was not bound to comply with the local law on a matter of this kind affecting merely the internal economy of the vessel.

3. We think she should have been cleared, if any Representative of the United States' Government asserted her to be a public vessel.

4. We have nothing to add.

We have, &c.

Gentlemen,

Recognition by U.S. Govt. of Spanish Colonial Concessions to British Companies.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you, herewith, a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington, forwarding two opinions of the Attorney-General of the United States of America relative to the recognition, by his Government, of Concessions which had been granted by Spain to certain British Companies, prior to the outbreak of the Spanish-American war in 1898.

The earlier of these opinions relates, more particularly, to a claim of the Manila Railway Company in connexion with certain subventions granted to it by Spain. This matter will shortly form the subject of a separate reference to you from this Department. For the special purposes of the present reference, however, it is thought that you will desire to have your attention particularly directed to this opinion, because (1) it is referred to in the later opinion on the Cable Company's cases, and also (2) because it cites, in a convenient form, the opinion of many eminent writers on the obligations of nations in these matters.

The later opinion concerns the question of the recognition by the United States of the Concessions granted by Spain—

(a.) To the Eastern Extension, Australasia and China Telegraph Company, Limited, in the Philippine Islands; and

(b.) To the Cuba Submarine Telegraph Company in Cuba.

In a separate list you will find the previous correspondence which has passed between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States with regard to the two last-mentioned cases, and I am to direct your attention especially to the opinions of the Law Officers of the Crown, which are dated respectively the 4th January, and the 2nd May, 1899, and on which the representations of Her Majesty's Government to the Government of the United States of America were based.

In connection with these questions I am to ask you to take into your consideration the terms of Notice No. 9, of 1900, issued on the 8th September last by Her Majesty's High Commissioner for South Africa, and particularly the words which are underlined in red in the copy of that Notice, which is herewith inclosed. It is understood that certain questions which have arisen with regard to the construction to be placed upon that Notice are about to be referred to you for your opinion by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion—

1. As to whether it is necessary or desirable, in view of the attitude which has been taken up by Her Majesty's Government in regard to the Concessions granted by the South African Republic, that Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington should be instructed to advance any further arguments in reply to the opinion of the United States' Attorney-General, which appears to have been communicated to his Excellency as embodying the views of the United States' Government; and

2. If so, in what terms such reply should be framed.

I have, &c.

Report.

We do not think that the attitude taken up by Her Majesty's Government in regard to Concessions granted by the South African Republic forms any obstacle to pressing the claims made upon the United States' Government on behalf of the Telegraph and Cable Companies in the Philippines and Cuba.

There is nothing in the Notice issued by the High Commissioner on the 8th September, 1900, at variance with the opinions expressed by the Law Officers in the Reports of the 4th January and 2nd May, 1899, and we think it is desirable, having regard to the importance of the questions raised and the interests involved, that the claim should be further pressed.

2. We think that the United States' Government should be informed that, notwithstanding the opinions of the Attorney-General of the United States, Her Majesty's Government adheres to the views already expressed.

It might be pointed out that there is no warrant for the contention raised by the Attorney-General of the United States that the obligations undertaken by Spain in relation to the Companies in question are divisible into those for the general benefit of Spain and those exclusively for local benefit. To admit such a contention would leave it open, in all cases of conquest or cession, to the succeeding Government to repudiate the obligations of their predecessors on alleged grounds of motives, which, even if they could be proved to have existed, cannot affect the rights of property secured to individuals or Companies as a consideration for executing works of local improvement.

Such a contention is, in our opinion, contrary to the recognized principles of international law as set out in the opinions of the Law Officers above referred to.

Gentlemen,

Claim of Manila Railway Company for interest guaranteed under their Concession from Spanish Government.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the claim against the United States' Government of the Manila Railway Company for the interest guaranteed by the Spanish Government under the Company's Concession of 1885 (See Inclosure 5 in Paper A).

The Company have explained, in their letter of the 11th August, 1899 (Paper A), their grounds for holding the United States' Government liable for the payment of the interest, and in the pamphlet which forms Inclosure 5 of that letter will be found a copy of their Concession.

On the receipt of that letter Her Majesty's Representative at Washington was instructed to give to the agent of the Company in that capital such unofficial support as he properly could towards obtaining a favourable consideration of the Company's request, and when the Company's letter (Paper B) of the 7th March last was received, setting forth the straits to which they were reduced by the delay in arriving at a decision on the part of the United States' Minister of War, Lord Pauncefote was requested to bring the facts therein stated to the knowledge of the United States' Government, and to add that the case appeared to involve considerable hardship, and even injustice, to the Company.

Lord Pauncefote inclosed, in his despatch No. 134 of the 2nd May last (Paper C), a copy of the note addressed by him to the United States' Government on the subject, together with a brief statement of the Company's claim drawn up by their agent, and communicated by his Excellency to the United States' Government at the same time.

Lord Pauncefote has now forwarded in his despatch No. 33, Treaty, of the 4th instant (Paper D) copies of the opinions of the United States' Attorney-General with regard to the obligations of the United States towards the Manila Railway Company, and also towards certain Telegraph Companies with Concessions in Cuba and Manila whose claims form the subject of a separate reference to you from this Office.

The conclusion arrived at appears to be that the Concessions in question are not binding as Contracts on the United States, but that the grantees have an equitable claim on the provinces, to be adjusted, as regards the Philippines, by Congress or possibly by the Executive of the United States, if the settlement cannot await action by the future Government.

You are aware of the policy which has been adopted by Her Majesty's Government with regard to certain Concessions which were originally granted by the Governments of the then Transvaal Republic and Orange Free State respectively, and which were still running in favour of the concessionnaires at the time of the annexation of those two Republics to Her Majesty's dominions, and of the terms of Notice No. 9 of 1900 issued on the 8th September last by Her Majesty's High Commissioner for South Africa.

A copy of that Notice (Paper E) is inclosed herewith for convenience of reference, and I am to draw your attention specially to the words underlined in red, as it is thought that the attitude already adopted by Her Majesty's Government in somewhat analogous circumstances towards holders of Concessions in South Africa may afford an important indication of the limits within which the claims of British concessionnaires in Cuba or Manila may consistently and properly be pressed on the attention of the United States' Government.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and, having regard to the terms of Sir A. Milner's Notice, that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the view of the United States' Attorney-General may be accepted by Her Majesty's Government as equitable so far as the case of the Manila Railway Company is concerned, or whether any, and, if so, what representations should be addressed to the United States' Government on the subject.

ZANZIBAR

No. 46.

[June 28, 1900.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, June 14, 1900.

Gentlemen,

Treaty between Germany and Zanzibar: Operation of Article providing for revision.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list, in connexion with a question which has arisen as to the construction of Article XXIV of the Treaty between Germany and Zanzibar which was concluded on the 20th December, 1885, and ratified on the 5th July following.

In the view of Her Majesty's Government who, since the assumption by this country of a Protectorate over Zanzibar, are charged with the conduct of all the Sultan's foreign relations, a revision of this Treaty is highly desirable in the interests of Zanzibar, and in these circumstances it becomes necessary to ascertain what consequences would follow if Great Britain were, on behalf of Zanzibar, to move for a revision of the Treaty, and if Germany on her side were either to refuse to entertain the proposal, or were unable to come to an agreement with this country as to the alterations to be introduced into that document.

Article XXIV contains the following amongst other provisions, namely, that:—

"After the expiration of fifteen years, to commence from the day of the ratification of this Treaty, it shall be competent for the High Contracting Parties to move for a revision of the present Treaty in order to allow of such alterations, additions, or amendments being made, as experience may have shown to be necessary or desirable.

"Such a motion must, however, be notified one year previous to the expiration of the present Treaty, otherwise the Treaty will be considered as tacitly prolonged for a further term of ten years . . . ."

No specific provision is, however, made for such an eventuality as that of the parties to the Treaty being unable to agree on the alterations to be made in it; though the words "expiration of the present Treaty," which occurred in the above quoted Article, seem to imply that the Treaty can come to an end. As the text of the Treaty leaves the matter apparently in doubt, indications of the intentions of those by whom the Treaty was negotiated must be looked for elsewhere; and the correspondence which took place at the time of the negotiations of the Treaty between Germany and Zanzibar, and of the Treaty of 1886 between Great Britain and Zanzibar, which was founded on it, seems to throw some light on the subject.

The Treaty between Germany and Zanzibar was partly negotiated with the Sultan of Zanzibar by Sir John Kirk, Her Britannic Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar, acting on behalf of Germany, and on the 16th October, 1885, Sir John sent home a draft as about to be submitted to the Sultan by the German Plenipotentiary (Admiral Knorr), who thenceforward acted as negotiator for Germany.

The Article in this draft, which corresponded with the XXIVth Article of the signed Treaty, ran as follows:—

"After the expiration of ten years, to begin with the day of the ratification of the Treaty, the High Contracting Parties can move for a revision of the present Treaty in order to resolve on those alterations . . . . which experience shall have proved to be necessary or desirable. Such a motion must, however, be announced at least one year before."

There is nothing in this Article to indicate any intention to terminate the Treaty.

Sir J. Kirk, who had informed Her Majesty's Government that it was essential that the five nations, viz., the United States, France, Germany, Great Britain, and Italy, should all adhere to the same principles, and make their Treaties in conformity with the principles adopted, was also authorized to negotiate a British Treaty on the basis of the German Treaty. He proceeded to do so, and on the 14th November, 1885, the Sultan accepted the draft British Treaty in principle, reserving minor points for future discussion.

On the 28th November Sir John Kirk telegraphed that the Sultan's interests as regarded the remaining details of the German Treaty and Tariff had been confided to him (Sir J. Kirk) and to the German Consul.

On the 19th December, 1885, Sir J. Kirk sent home the draft British Treaty, which, he said, was in exact accordance with that agreed to between the German Representatives and the Sultan.

Article XXVI of the British draft Treaty (which remained unaltered in the Treaty as eventually signed), ran as follows:—

"The present Treaty shall remain in force for a period of fifteen years, to reckon from the day of the exchange of ratifications.

"It shall be competent for the High Contracting Parties thereafter to move for a revision of the present Treaty in order to allow of such alterations, additions, or amendments as experience may have shown to be necessary or desirable; but such a motion must be notified by the Party claiming a revision one year previous to the expiration of the present Treaty, otherwise what is herein agreed upon shall be considered binding upon both Parties for a further period of ten years."

On the 28th January, 1886, the following inquiry, among others, was addressed by telegraph to Sir J. Kirk:—

"Article XXVI of draft British Treaty. Is it meant that, if due notice is given, but Parties cannot agree on terms of revision, Treaty shall lapse after fifteen years?"

It may here be observed, in explanation, that Her Majesty's Government were then anxious to secure their Treaty privileges for as long a term as possible.

Sir J. Kirk replied as follows:—

"I am afraid the Germans understand it in the sense stated, and attach importance to it; they wished Treaty to expire after ten years, and extended it to meet my wish."

In view of this statement by Sir J. Kirk, it seems impossible, notwithstanding the wording of the first draft of the German Treaty, to doubt the intention of the negotiators to terminate the Treaty after fifteen years, in the event of no revision having previously resulted from notice duly given.

The date upon which the Treaty would terminate in such a case would clearly be fifteen years from the date of the exchange of the ratifications; and as the exchange took place at Zanzibar on the 5th July, 1886, the Treaty would therefore expire on the 5th July, 1901.

I have the honour to request you to take the above observations and the inclosed copy of the German-Zanzibar Treaty into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to the consequences which would ensue in the event of a failure of the Parties to that Treaty to come to an understanding as to the manner in which it should be revised.

His Lordship would also be glad at the same time to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to offer on the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

1. Memorandum, Mr. Oakes .. .. October 19, 1899.
2. "Africa No. 1 (1887)." (Treaty between Great Britain and Zanzibar, April 30, 1886.)
3. "Africa No. 3 (1887)," containing Treaty between Germany and Zanzibar, December 20, 1885.

Report.

In our opinion, the notification of a motion for a revision of the Treaty under Article XXIV would, if no agreement were come to, operate so as to prevent the Treaty from being tacitly prolonged for a further term of ten years.

Although there is no express provision that the Treaty was only to last for fifteen years, it is provided by implication.

If, therefore, it is desired that the Treaty should be prolonged for the further period of ten years, and there is danger of Germany not agreeing to the desired alterations, we would suggest that no motion should be notified under the Article of the Treaty.

Gentlemen,

Detention of s.s. "Bhundara" at Zanzibar in quarantine. Claim for compensation.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers marked in the accompanying list with reference to a claim which has been put forward by the British India Steam Navigation Company for 2,965*l.*, as compensation for the detention in 1898 and 1899 of the steam-ship "Bhundara" at Mombasa and Zanzibar before the grant of pratique.

On the 25th December, 1898, this ship arrived at Mombasa with cases of plague on board, and having had six deaths from that epidemic since her departure from India nine days previously.

Her passengers numbered some 1,400, of whom over 1,000 were Indian coolies under engagement to work on the Uganda Railway. She also carried 700 tons of rice destined for Zanzibar.

At that time the only Plague Regulations existing in the East Africa Protectorate and Zanzibar were provisional ones (see Inclosures 1 and 2 in Paper A), and had not yet received the sanction of the Secretary of State; but by the declaration of "urgency" attached by Sir A. Hardinge to his issue of the East Africa Regulations

(Inclosure 2 in Paper A), they became at once enforceable, and Her Majesty's Government were made responsible for them unless and until they were disallowed, and publication of their disallowance had been formally made. They remained in force until May last, when revised Regulations were issued.

Article XIV is a saving clause reserving to Her Majesty's Commissioner and to the Sultan's Government power, when deemed fit, to relax or increase the stringency of any of these Regulations in special cases.

Under the said clause Sir A. Hardinge declined to permit the vessel to remain at Mombasa, and advised the Government of Zanzibar to adopt a similar course should she proceed thither; but owing to representations received from the owners, and in view of the fact that the last plague cases on board were stated to have recovered on the 27th December, and that no fresh ones had occurred since, the vessel was allowed to land the coolies on the 16th January, 1899, at a temporary quarantine camp established on the Island of Manda, Lamu; and on the 22nd January Her Majesty's Sub-Commissioner at Mombasa telegraphed that the "Bhundara," having returned to Mombasa, had been disinfected and was then engaged in discharging her cargo.

She then left for Zanzibar, arriving there on the 26th January. After due precautions had been taken as to the disinfection of the rice cargo destined for that port the ship was given free pratique, and left Zanzibar on the 1st February.

The various dates specified by the British India Steam Navigation Company in their letter of the 10th August, 1899 (Paper B), are correct, except in so far as an error appears to have been made by the owners' Calcutta agent in giving the 24th December, 1898, as the date of the occurrence of the last case of plague; the accounts received by this Department make the date to have been the 26th, whereby the claim for demurrage would be diminished by 200*l*.

A Memorandum has been prepared in this Department in regard to the action taken by Her Majesty's Government respecting requests for the support of claims for compensation made by British subjects on foreign Governments in consequence of losses suffered through the application of Sanitary laws (Paper C).

I am, however, in this connexion to explain that the Islands of Zanzibar and Pemba are under British protection, but are administered by the Sultan. Mombasa is in the Sultan's mainland dominions, but is, with the rest of His Highness' mainland dominions, included, for administrative purposes, in the East Africa Protectorate, and is administered by officers appointed by, and responsible to, Her Majesty's Government.

I am to add, in view of the terms of the third paragraph of the letter from the owners' Calcutta agent, that the provisions of the Venice Convention of 1897 (Paper D) did not, during the time the "Bhundara" was in African waters, form part of the legislation either of Zanzibar or of the East Africa Protectorate; nor does Her Majesty's Government appear to have been under any legal obligation to enact those provisions in either territory.

I have the honour to request you to take this letter and its inclosures into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the owners of the "Bhundara" have a legal claim for damages against the Administration of the East Africa Protectorate $\frac{\text{or}}{\text{and}}$ against the Government of the Sultan of Zanzibar, and, if so, I am to request you to favour his Lordship with your views regarding the amount and apportionment of the sum claimed in the letter from the Company (Paper B), together with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

His Lordship would be much obliged if an early reply could be returned to this letter.

I have, &c.

We do not think, on the facts as stated in the papers submitted to us, there is any evidence that the Administration of the East Africa Protectorate or the Government of the Sultan of Zanzibar acted unreasonably or vexatiously in the matter in question in enforcing Regulations thought necessary for the public safety and for preventing the introduction of plague.

The owners of the "Bhundara" have, therefore, no legal claim for compensation against either the East Africa Protectorate or the Government at Zanzibar.

The owners of the "Bhundara" should be informed that their claim for compensation cannot, under the circumstances, be admitted.

Foreign Office, September 7, 1901.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the correspondence noted in the accompanying list relative to an application made by certain shareholders of the Abyssinian Exploration (Parent) Company to Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington, His Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Abyssinia, now on leave in this country, to make an affidavit in connection with a petition to wind up the Company.

Abyssinian Exploration Company. Application of shareholders for Affidavit by Colonel Harrington.

On the 19th of July last the Abyssinian Exploration (Parent) Company addressed a letter to Lord Lansdowne (Paper A), requesting that His Majesty's Representatives in Abyssinia and at Jibuti, a French port on the Red Sea from which access is obtained to Abyssinia, might be instructed to assist their Manager, Mr. Wileman, whom they were sending to Abyssinia with a view to commencing operations under a Concession held by them.

The letter inclosed a copy of the Company's prospectus with a translation of the Concession.

The Concession purports to convey in the name of Count Nicholas de Leontieff, Governor-General of the Equatorial provinces of Ethiopia, acting in virtue of powers granted to him by the Emperor Menelek of Ethiopia, the right of working all mines in those Equatorial provinces on certain conditions and within the limits defined for a period of fifty years.

At the bottom of p. 2 of the prospectus it is stated that certain papers may be inspected at the offices of the Company's solicitors, amongst which is a Decree of the Emperor Menelek, dated the 12th June, 1897, appointing Count Leontieff to be Governor-General of the Equatorial provinces, and granting to him (inter alia) the right to exploit the resources of the provinces mentioned in the Concession.

Lord Lansdowne had already forwarded to His Majesty's Agent in Abyssinia a copy of the prospectus, which had appeared in the advertisement columns of the "Times" and other newspapers, and this had reached Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington in the interior of Abyssinia after he had left the capital on his way to England on leave of absence.

In his despatch No. 24 of the 6th July (Paper C), Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington reported that on receipt of the prospectus he forwarded it to the Italian Agent at the capital, as a friendly colleague, and requested him to inquire of the Emperor whether Count Leontieff had any authority to grant Concessions in Abyssinia.

The reply of the Italian Agent, who brought the matter to the Emperor's notice, showed that Count Leontieff had no such authority, that the Decree of the 12th June, 1897, mentioned in the prospectus, was an incorrect translation of a Decree in Amharic, the language of Abyssinia, issued by the Emperor on the 9th June, 1897, and that the actual terms of this Decree did not confer on Count Leontieff the powers claimed for him in the prospectus.

The Emperor wished Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington to know that he gave him full permission to make these facts public.

In consequence of the information contained in Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington's despatch the Abyssinian Exploration Company were informed on the 6th ultimo that the Emperor had authorized Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington to make it publicly known that he had never given to Count Leontieff any authority to grant Concessions to foreigners (Paper D).

On the 9th ultimo the Company forwarded to Lord Lansdowne a copy of the alleged Decree of June 12, 1897, and inquired whether he was acquainted with it (Paper E).

They were informed on the 19th ultimo (Paper F) that, according to the information received by His Majesty's Government, the document was an incorrect translation of a Decree issued in Amharic by the Emperor Menelek on the 9th June, 1897. Correct translations of the Decree in French and English were transmitted to them.

The translation into English had been transmitted to the Foreign Office by Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington in a despatch dated the 30th April, 1898 (paper FF), and was the work of his interpreter.

On the 2nd instant Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington addressed a despatch to Lord Lansdowne (Paper G), inclosing an extract from a further letter which he had received from the Italian Agent in Abyssinia, stating that the Emperor authorized Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington in clearer and more definite terms than those previously employed, to publish the correct translation of His Majesty's Decree of the 9th June, 1897, and to make known all the information he possessed in regard to the real limits fixed for Count Leontieff's action in the grant of the Equatorial provinces of Abyssinia.

On the 27th July, four of the shareholders of the Abyssinian Exploration Company (Messrs. Stanbury, Crowson, C. E. Rowe, and H. C. Rowe), wrote to Lord Lansdowne inquiring whether the Concession granted by the Emperor Menelek was a just and valid one, as rumours to the contrary had appeared in the press (Paper H).

A reply was sent to them on the 6th ultimo (Paper I) in terms similar to those of the letter to the Abyssinian Company of the same date (Paper D).

On the 17th ultimo, Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington communicated to the Foreign Office a letter addressed to him by Messrs. Burgess, Cosens, and Co., solicitors, acting for the four shareholders named above, in which they announced their clients' decision to file a Petition to wind up the Company, and inquired whether Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington would be prepared to make an affidavit in support of this case. A copy of Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington's reply appears on the back of the letter.

In a letter dated the 2nd instant (Paper K), Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington communicated to this Department further letters from Messrs. Burgess, Cozens, and Co., and on the 3rd instant they addressed a letter to Lord Lansdowne (Paper L) in which they mentioned that their clients' Petition to wind up the Company was filed on the 2nd instant, and that counsel was about to appeal that the case be heard as one of special urgency on the 18th instant.

On the 5th instant they addressed a further letter to Lord Lansdowne (Paper M), stating that their clients were advised by counsel that an affidavit by Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington in verification of the statements in the letter sent to them from this Office on the 6th ultimo was essential for the support of their Petition to wind-up the Company, and that the letter alone would be insufficient for the purpose. In these circumstances they requested that Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington might be authorized to make such an affidavit.

Messrs. Burgess, Cosens, and Co. addressed a private and confidential letter to Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington on the 5th instant (Paper N), inclosing a copy of their clients' Petition, a notice of a statutory meeting of the Abyssinian Exploration Company, to which is annexed a Report of the Directors, and an Enquiry Agent's Report containing information in regard to certain of the Directors of the Company.

Lord Lansdowne requests that you will take the papers sent herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour him, at your early convenience, with your opinion as to whether, Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington may properly be authorized to make an affidavit in support of the Petition, and, if so, what should be the terms of the affidavit, or, in the contrary case, what should be the nature of the reply to be returned to Messrs. Burgess, Cosens, and Co.

His Lordship would also be glad to be furnished with any observations which you may have to make in regard to this matter.

I have, &c.

Report.

I do not think it desirable that Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington should make an affidavit in this case. His only information is that which was received by him in his official capacity, and it is not, unless under very special circumstances, desirable that evidence should be tendered in respect of information so received. By making an affidavit Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington would be mixing himself up in a private dispute, and it is not desirable that an official in his position should be exposed to cross-examination as to what passed with the Emperor Menelek.

I think Messrs. Burgess, Cosens, and Co. should be informed that it is deemed unadvisable that Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington should, with reference to the proposed winding up of this Company, make an affidavit as to matters which came before him in his official capacity.

No. 2.

[January 29, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, January 10, 1901.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, with regard to the arrest of certain French citizens in Johannesburg by the British military authorities and to their deportation to Ceylon, where they are at present detained, as prisoners of war.

Frenchmen serving with Boers in Ceylon as Prisoners of War.

The circumstances of the case are so far known to Her Majesty's Government almost exclusively from the account given of them by Count E. de Courcenay, one of the prisoners. The only Report on the subject which has been received from the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-chief in South Africa, gives no details. These circumstances, as reported in Count de Courcenay's letter of the 28th August (Inclosure in document C), are as follows:—

The French citizens in question had originally taken up arms for the South African Republic, but had laid them down two months before the 6th July last when their arrest took place. Two of them had already taken the oath of neutrality in conformity with Lord Roberts' Proclamation of the 31st May (Inclosure E), and the five others were actually arrested in the office whither they had gone to do likewise.

They explain that they did not take the oath immediately on the publication of the Proclamation because they were at that time engaged in the Mines Police, and were already bound by an oath of neutrality, which, as they had been told, was effectual ("valable").

They also explain that they did not protest at the time against their arrest, as they understood they were merely to be sent out of the country.

It is stated further in the communication of the 24th ultimo from the French Ambassador that all the men had received residential permits ("permis de séjour") from Lord Roberts, and were not arrested till a month after the British troops had occupied Johannesburg; that they were made the object of no charge; that no sentence was pronounced against them; and that they were not even tried.

The Ambassador adds that, according to the French Consul at Cape Town, the British authorities hold that a man who has once borne arms may be made a prisoner of war at any time thereafter during the continuance of hostilities; but his Excellency argues on the contrary, that, according to international law, the fact of bearing arms for one belligerent is not an offence for which a penalty can be inflicted by the other belligerent, the right to make a man a prisoner of war being exercisable solely to prevent him bearing arms after capture, and being therefore exercisable solely against actual combatants on their being forced to lay down their arms.

The French Government in no way contest the right of the British authorities to expel these persons; but, in view of the above-mentioned arguments, request that they may be released from captivity as prisoners of war.

Annexed to the papers are Memoranda (Papers F and J) by the Legal Adviser of the Department and by the Director of Military Intelligence respectively on the right of the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-chief in South Africa to expel obnoxious persons from the theatre of war and of the Colonial authorities to expel obnoxious persons from those portions of the Cape Colony and of Natal which have not been placed under martial law, together with a further Memorandum (Paper K) by Sir John Ardagh on the special point which forms the subject of this reference.

I have the honour to request you to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion on the point thus raised by the French Ambassador, it being assumed, pending the arrival of the futher Report which Lord Roberts has been asked to furnish, that the facts are as stated by his Excellency and by the prisoners themselves in the inclosure in the document marked "C."

I also have the honour to request you to favour his Lordship with any observations you may have to offer on the case generally.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion the broad proposition contended for by the French Ambassador cannot be sustained, as we think that the right of making prisoners of war is not limited solely to the case of actual combatants on their being forced to lay down their arms.

A combatant does not secure the immunity contended for merely by ceasing to bear arms; he remains liable to be arrested and treated as a prisoner of war, if the belligerent thinks such a measure expedient.

Indeed, the immunity from treatment as prisoners of war which is usually extended to the non-combatant population does not apply without some qualification to the population of such a country as the Transvaal where all able-bodied men are, or may be, soldiers whether they have actually borne arms or not; the belligerent may, if he thinks his safety requires it, treat all such persons as prisoners of war, the case of sailors on captured merchant-vessels being a somewhat analogous case.

In the present case it does not appear that anything had taken place to make improper the arrest of these persons as prisoners of war. The Proclamation related to burghers, not to foreigners serving in the Boer armies; and it is not shown that the British authorities had accepted the oath of neutrality in the case of those who took it with knowledge that they were not burghers.

Whether their arrest and deportation were, under the circumstances, desirable or proper is a matter on which we have not materials for advising. Whether they should be released now on satisfactory assurances that they will not return to South Africa is a question of policy.

We further think that the point raised by Sir John Ardagh, that by taking up arms the parties in question ceased to be French citizens, is worthy of consideration, and may with advantage be taken, in view of the possibility of the French Government making demands for compensation for the deportation of these parties to Ceylon.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, December 6, 1900.

Gentlemen,

Ambulance with Boer forces: right to fly Dutch flag.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers enumerated in the inclosed list, relative to a complaint made by the Netherland Government that a Dutch ambulance in attendance on the Boer forces was prevented from flying the Netherland flag while temporarily within the British lines. This complaint raises questions of some importance and complexity as to the construction and meaning of the Geneva Convention of 1864.

For the purpose of elucidating these questions, it has been found necessary to go rather fully into the history of the Convention, and a statement has been prepared by Major-General Sir John Ardagh, K.C.I.E., the Director of Military Intelligence, in consultation with the Legal Adviser to this Department, which is annexed to this letter.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into consideration, and that you will favour the Marquess of Lansdowne with your opinion upon the validity of the complaint that the incident described in the Netherland Minister's Memorandum of the 28th July, 1900, constituted an infraction of the Geneva Convention and, in particular, upon the following questions:—

1. Does the Geneva Convention of 1864, according to the proper and natural construction of its provisions, apply solely to the personnel and materiel of the military ambulances and hospitals of belligerents?

2. Does the Geneva Convention confer recognition, sanction, protection, or neutrality upon the personnel and matériel of voluntary Red Cross Societies or Associations for the aid of the sick and wounded in war, furnished—

(a.) By belligerent nationals?

(b.) By neutral nationals?

3. Does the Geneva Convention sanction or enjoin the use of the Red Cross flag or armlet by voluntary Aid Societies not forming an integral part of, or affiliated officially to, the army of the State to which they belong?

4. Is the "national flag" prescribed in Article VII of the Convention, that of the belligerent to whose army the ambulance or hospital belongs; or, that of the State to which the Aid Society furnishing the matériel and personnel belongs?

5. In the event of your being of opinion that the Geneva Convention does not contain any recognition of voluntary Societies for the aid of sick and wounded in war; are these Societies entitled to claim under general international law any special rights, privileges, or immunities, beyond those which may be accorded to them as a matter of grace, in consideration of their humane efforts to alleviate suffering, by the military authorities of the belligerents, in so far as the necessities of war permit?

6. Having regard to the practical difficulties which have been experienced with regard to the construction and working of the Geneva Convention, is it, in your opinion, desirable that its terms should be revised?

7. Is it desirable that the employment of the Geneva Red Cross flag and arm badge should be protected and controlled by legislation?

Lord Lansdowne will be glad at the same time to be favoured with any general observations upon the matters involved which you may be good enough to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Report.

1. The Geneva Convention of 1864, according to the proper and natural construction of its provisions, in my opinion, applies solely to the military ambulances and hospitals of belligerents, including such as are affiliated to the army and under the control of the Commanding Officer. The inhabitants of the country who bring help to the wounded are entitled to protection under Article V.

2. (a.) The Geneva Convention has, in terms, no application to voluntary Red Cross Societies or similar Associations, but such Societies or Associations—if constituted by the inhabitants of the country—would be entitled to protection under Article V while bringing help to the wounded.

(b.) Such Societies or Associations, furnished by neutral nationals, are not dealt with by the Convention unless they be attached to one of the armies.

3. No.

4. The "national flag" prescribed in Article VII is the flag of the belligerent to whose army the ambulance or hospital belongs.

5. There is no provision of general international law according any special rights, privileges, or immunities to such Societies beyond those which ought to be accorded to them, as a matter of grace, in consideration of their humane efforts to alleviate suffering.

6. It may be pointed out that the interpretation which, in my opinion, should be placed upon the terms of the Geneva Convention appears not to have been universally adopted, and some of the despatches appear to indicate that His Majesty's Government has acquiesced in a more liberal construction of these provisions. This may make it undesirable that His Majesty's Government should, at once, declare in an unqualified way for the construction of the Convention indicated in this Report.

Whether any revision of its terms should be attempted is a matter of policy and largely one of military expediency.

It is possible that the considerations applicable to hospital ships by no means apply with equal force in the case of warfare on land, and that considerable inconvenience might result if neutral ambulances and hospitals, for which the Commander of the opposing forces is not responsible, were recognized as entitled to the protection of their own national flag.

7. It is not, in my opinion, desirable that the employment of the Geneva Red Cross flag and arm-badge should be protected and controlled by legislation. This should be left to International Convention and the control of the military authorities on the spot.

Annex I.

Statement.

THE amelioration of the condition of sick and wounded soldiers in war began to attract attention many centuries ago, and became the subject of Treaties and Conventions made between nations and between military Commanders in the past. These Agreements concerning the treatment to be accorded to sick and wounded were ordinarily special and temporary, and although they afforded indications of a recognition of humanitarian principles by belligerents, and examples from which a certain degree of uniformity in practice might be deduced, they were inadequate to constitute a definite system, and were entirely devoid of international recognition or acceptance.

After the capture of Jerusalem in 1187, Saladin gave permission to the Knight's Hospitallers to enter and attend to the wounded Christians.

In 1743, before the battle of Dettingen, a Treaty for the protection of the wounded and the hospitals was made between the Austro-Hanoverian army under George II and the French army under Marshal de Noailles.

When the French retreated from Oporto in 1809, the Duke of Wellington gave "safe conducts" to the French medical officers whom he requested to be sent to treat the wounded they had left in his hands.

There were other examples during the Napoleonic wars, but on their close interest in the wounded died away.

The exertions of Miss Nightingale during the Crimean War, and of other philanthropic persons on similar occasions, drew public attention to the matter; but the chief credit of having aroused an active interest in alleviating suffering upon the battle-field is due to M. Dunant, whose book, entitled "Un Souvenir de Solferino," gave a vivid description of the painful spectacles which he beheld after that battle, and the misery and distress which were entailed upon wounded soldiers by the inadequate arrangements for their succour.

Dunant was the first to propound the proposal for the creation of voluntary Societies for the aid of the sick and wounded. His volume produced a profound impression in Europe, and led to the formation in Geneva—his native town—of a Committee for the aid of wounded soldiers. This Committee issued on the 1st September, 1863, invitations to an International Conference at Geneva for the purpose of considering the question. It was attended by thirty-six Representatives from European States, the large majority belonging to the medical profession and many to the military branch of it.

Lueder, p. 64.
Moynier, p. 59.

A Circular accompanying the invitations set forth the objects in view, viz.:—

Lueder, p. 60.

The formation in each State of National Societies for the purpose of supplementing the insufficiency of the military sanitary services; the formation and organization in time of war by the Committees of the belligerent nations of voluntary corps of hospital attendants; and the provision of the requisite transport, supplies and medicines: the whole to be placed at the disposition and under the orders and discipline of the army Chiefs.

The Conference met at Geneva on the 26th October, 1863, and adopted Resolutions to the above effect, as well as the specification of a white armlet with a red cross as a uniform distinctive mark.

They also added recommendations to the effect that:—

(a.) Governments should protect and facilitate the operations of Aid Committees.

(b.) Neutrality should be accorded by belligerents to ambulances and hospitals, to the official sanitary personnel, to the voluntary attendants, to the inhabitants who helped the wounded, and to the wounded themselves.

(c.) Uniform distinctive marks and flags should be adopted in all armies.

It was fully understood that the Resolutions and recommendations were merely expressions of personal opinion, without legal value and of no binding effect on the States to which the Representatives belonged; and it became clear that in order to advance beyond this academic stage the subject must be discussed by responsible Representatives duly accredited by the respective States.

At the instigation of the Geneva International Committee, the Swiss Federal Council issued invitations for an International Congress to assemble at Geneva on the 8th August, 1864.

Twenty-five States were invited, and sixteen sent Representatives. (It may be observed that the war between the Germanic Confederation and Denmark was then going on.) The principal abstentions were Austria, Bavaria, the Papal States, Russia, Turkey, and Greece. Great Britain was represented by Dr. Longmore and Dr. Rutherford.

During and subsequent to the Conference of 1863, it had become evident that the proposal to neutralize, or, indeed, to give State recognition to, Voluntary Aid Societies would meet with considerable opposition. The Geneva International Committee, therefore, in drafting a project of Convention to form the basis for discussion at the Congress, were apparently apprehensive that the introduction of contentious matter might render the meeting abortive, and, although it was patent to all that they took the deepest interest in the question of Aid Societies, these are not mentioned or alluded to in any way in the draft.

Lueder, p. 94.

General Dufour, the Swiss Commander-in-chief, was elected President of the Congress, and in his opening Address he declared that the question before them was only that of neutralizing the ambulances and their personnel, and in no way of the extension or the foundation of Aid Societies.

The draft and the introductory Address are important evidences of intention.

In the discussions which ensued, the German and Belgian Delegates advocated the neutralization of volunteer hospital attendants, and the French Delegates stated that they were expressly forbidden by their Government to accept this proposal. The Swiss and Dutch Delegates supported the French opposition. As it had been agreed that the majority could not bind the minority, only those Articles upon which the opinions of the Delegates were unanimous could be accepted, and those upon which there was a diversity of views were dropped.

The draft as amended by the Congress became the final form in which the Geneva Convention, as it now stands, was signed by the twelve Plenipotentiaries who had full powers, on the 22nd August, 1864, viz., Baden, Belgium, Denmark, France, Hesse-Darmstadt, Italy, Netherlands, Portugal, Prussia, Spain, Switzerland, and Wurtemburg.

Most of the Powers, including Austria, Great Britain, Russia, Turkey, and the United States, subsequently acceded at various dates up to 1882.

Hague Conference.

The Convention has not been amended since 1864, and is still in force. An adaptation of its principles to maritime warfare forms the subject of a separate Convention signed at the Hague on the 29th July, 1899.

Proposals have frequently been made for the revision of the Convention of 1864. The Swiss Federal Council issued invitations for a Congress for the purpose of revising the Geneva Convention in 1868; the Congress met at Geneva on the 5th October, 1868, and, as on the former occasion in 1864, the Swiss International Committee charged itself with the preparation of draft proposals for consideration.

The details of these proposals will be subsequently alluded to, but at this point it is only necessary to state that the Congress agreed to fifteen additional Articles, and that the Delegates of fourteen States signed them on the 20th October, 1868, under reserve of the approval of their Governments.

Great Britain, France, and Russia disapproved of certain Articles. The Franco-German War supervened, and the Additional Articles have never been ratified.

Brussels Conference, Protocol 9, August 11, 1874.

The question of revision of the Geneva Convention was next officially treated at the Conference of Brussels in 1874, when the Delegates, failing to agree as to the nature of modification, confined themselves to laying the various amendments proposed before their respective Governments for consideration.

At the Peace Conference held at the Hague in 1899, a Convention for the adaptation of the principles of the Geneva Convention of 1864 to maritime warfare was agreed to, signed, and subsequently ratified.

Hague Conference, Final Act, July 29, 1899.

This Conference also unanimously expressed the wish that steps might shortly be taken for the assembly of a Special Conference having for its object the revision of the Geneva Convention.

Hague Conference, Sitting July 5, 1899.

No action has yet been taken upon the recommendation, and it appears to be open to any Power to call attention to it, but the initiative rests especially with the Swiss Federal Council.

This completes the official history of the Geneva Convention up to the present time.

The subject of aid to the sick and wounded in war has, however, been constantly kept before the world by the Red Cross Societies which were formed in all civilized States as a sequel to the initiative given by the parent Society at Geneva in 1863. International Conferences of these Societies were held at Paris in 1867; Berlin, 1869; Geneva, 1884; Karlsruhe, 1887; Rome, 1892; and Vienna, 1897. These meetings now take place quinquennially, the place and programme being arranged by the International Committee at Geneva.

Meetings have also been convened by other Aid Societies from time to time, the most recent having been an International Congress held in Paris in August 1900.

At these Conferences the revision of the Geneva Convention and the status of Aid Societies have usually been the principal subjects discussed.

Memorandum, Baron Gericke.

In the course of various wars which have taken place since 1864, allegations have been made of infractions of the terms of the Geneva Convention, and a case has recently arisen in South Africa, which is set forth in a Memorandum communicated to the Foreign Office by the Netherland Minister, dated the 28th July, 1900.

The substance is as follows:—

A Dutch Red Cross ambulance, at Elandsfontein on the 29th May, had hoisted upon it the Netherland national flag. A British officer lowered and carried away the flag. Lord Kitchener came up and inquired what the ambulance was. Dr. Hollander, who presumably was in charge of the ambulance, replied that it belonged to the Netherland Red Cross, and that a British officer had deemed it his duty to lower the Netherland flag. Lord Kitchener accepted the responsibility of having given the order, and added, "I will not allow any other flag in this country except the British."

Dr. Hollander replied that, in conformity with the Geneva Convention, he had the right and the duty to fly the flag. Lord Kitchener told him that he did not care.

The Minister then observes:—

"Il résulte de la teneur du deuxième alinéa de la Convention de Genève du 22 Août, 1864, que le drapeau de la Croix Rouge pour ambulances, &c., doit être accompagné en toute circonstance du drapeau national.

"Ce qui précède constituerait donc une infraction de la Convention Internationale à laquelle la Grande Bretagne a adhéré le 18 Février, 1865."

Apart from the exactitude of the narrative, which will be reported upon by Field-Marshal Lord Roberts, two questions present themselves:—

1. Whether the Geneva Convention applies to a Netherland Red Cross ambulance?
2. What is the "national flag" prescribed in Article VII?

It is manifest from Baron Gericke's Memorandum that the Netherland Foreign Minister is under the impression that the Geneva Convention does apply to a Netherland Red Cross ambulance, and that the "national flag" means the flag of the nation whose subjects furnished the ambulance.

This belief appears to be widely entertained. The ambulances of British and other Aid Societies have on many occasions flown the flags of their own nation when, as neutrals, they were engaged in succouring the sick and wounded of belligerents; and the Geneva Convention is popularly regarded as the fundamental charter of the Red Cross Societies, which in recent years have done so much to alleviate suffering in war.

It is, on the other hand, maintained by those who have studied the subject, both in the Foreign Office and in the War Office, that the supporters of the views which have just been quoted, misapprehend the meaning and interpretation of the Convention, and attribute to it a far more extended field of application than its language warrants. They contend that it does not apply to voluntary Aid Societies or Red Cross Associations, but solely to the military ambulances and hospitals of belligerents, and that the national flags specified in Article VII are the flags of the belligerent nations.

In support of their views they adduce the following arguments:—

1. There is no mention whatever in the Convention of Geneva of 1864 of Red Cross Societies or Aid Societies, voluntary or neutral.

2. The organizations upon which neutrality is conferred by the first Article are "les ambulances et les hôpitaux militaires," i.e., military ambulances and hospitals. In certain English books this sentence has been improperly translated "ambulances and military hospitals." It will be observed that in Articles II and III the consecution is inverted, and that in Article IV the hospital and the ambulance receive different treatment.

3. The word "ambulance" in French is a military term, meaning a movable hospital equipment accompanying troops in the field for the succour, treatment, and transport of the wounded from the field to the permanent or temporary hospitals.

In English military parlance, "ambulance" has the same meaning. The term has, however, been appropriated in recent years by civil organizations, such as the St. John's Ambulance Society, by public hospitals, police, fire brigades, &c., in connection with aid in ordinary cases of accident or mishap. The word is now often used in English by an elliptical figure of speech for an ambulance waggon.

4. In 1864 there were practically no other ambulances in Europe but those used in armies.

5. Article II specifies the personnel in terms only employed in the army.

6. Article III states that, under certain circumstances, this personnel may rejoin the corps to which it belongs, indicating thereby that it must be military.

7. The Conference at Geneva in 1868 for the revision of the Convention had before them the following proposal, inter alia, viz.:—

Lueder, p. 163.

"3. Garantir aux individus faisant partie du personnel sanitaire la conservation de leur traitement pendant leur séjour chez l'ennemi."

"Traitement" here clearly means the pay and allowances to which they were entitled in their own army, and obviously cannot apply to Voluntary Aid Societies.

Lueder, p. 96.

8. A proposal to neutralize voluntary hospital attendants was made and rejected during the debates upon the Articles of the Convention.

9. At the Conference of 1868 for the revision of the Convention the following proposals were made and rejected:—

"4. Mettre le personnel des Sociétés de Secours au bénéfice de la neutralité.

"5. Réglementer les rapports à établir entre les Commandants-en-chef et les Sociétés de Secours."

This rejection shows that the omission of Aid Societies from the original Convention and from the additional Articles of 1868 was not a mere accidental oversight, but a deliberate and intentional exclusion.

10. At the Conference of Brussels in 1874, on the rules of military warfare, one of the draft Articles submitted was:—

"39. Le personnel mentionné à l'Article II de la Convention de Genève, ainsi que les membres des Sociétés de Secours admis sur le théâtre de la guerre par les autorités militaires, jouiront des droits garantis par la dite Convention à moins qu'ils ne prennent part aux hostilités."

1901

The Conference failed to agree, and the Article fell through. It would evidently never have been put forward if the Aid Societies had already been recognized as coming under the protection of the Geneva Convention.

These arguments, it is claimed, tend to prove conclusively that the Geneva Convention in its fair and natural sense when construed according to the ordinary accepted canons of interpretation, only applies, and was intended only to apply, to the personnel and matériel of the military ambulances and hospitals of belligerents; and that all the efforts which have since been made to extend its provisions to Voluntary Aid Societies have failed owing to want of unanimity.

Report of 6th International Conference of Red Cross Societies, p. 4.

In most of the continental States, National Aid Societies or Red Cross Societies have been organized and equipped in time of peace in order to form, under definite Regulations, an integral part of the regular Army Medical Service in time of war.

When this incorporation takes place, the personnel and matériel of these Red Cross Societies pass under the protection of the Geneva Convention as units of the national forces, in a manner analogous to the change of status of militia or volunteers in this country, who become subject to the Army Act when embodied for service. In countries in which liability to military service is general there is little difficulty found in subjecting the Red Cross Societies to strict State control tempered by certain privileges and immunities, and for national purposes there can be no objection to the system, or to the method by which these Aid Societies, which are voluntary and civil in time of peace, are transformed into branches of an Army Medical Service in time of war, become subject to the military authorities of their belligerent State, and are thus brought within the provisions of the Geneva Convention.

It is contended, however, that this procedure is inapplicable to the case of Red Cross Societies and volunteer ambulances of neutral nationality furnishing succour to the sick and wounded of a belligerent State.

If these organisations remain civil and voluntary they can have no claim to the privileges of the Geneva Convention, and are only entitled to such facilities and such benevolent treatment as the belligerent Commanders may, subject to military exigencies, accord them in consideration of the benefits accruing to sick and wounded combatants through their humane efforts.

There is, however, another aspect of the question to be considered. The first duty of a neutral is to abstain impartially from giving aid or support to either of the belligerents in carrying on the war. That principle is fully recognized by all writers upon international law, but there are exceptions to its absolute and universal application in practice. Real impartiality is stated by Wheaton to consist in refusing aid to both combatants, and not in giving it in the same measure to each.

To this, however, the generally admitted right of individual neutrals to trade with belligerents—even in contraband—subject to risk of capture and condemnation, is a notable exception, in which this country is deeply concerned. An apparent equality of measure in benevolence may be, in fact, exceedingly partial and favourable to one of the belligerents, especially when the want supplied is only felt by that belligerent, as, for instance, war material, food, or coal, with all which the other belligerent may be well furnished.

In like manner, the almost total absence of a military medical service on one side renders the aid furnished by neutral Red Cross Societies and ambulances to the sick and wounded of that side a most material factor in sustaining the power of resistance of the troops, and enabling them to prolong their opposition.

In the present war in South Africa it is beyond doubt that the Boers owe the greater part of their ambulance and hospital service to the contributions of neutral States, and there is evidence tending to prove that in several instances the humanitarian pretext was made use of as a cloak to cover the movements of armed subjects of neutral States in making unofficial war. Some, indeed, threw the pretence entirely aside, and openly joined the fighting ranks of the Boers. Others professing neutrality acted as spies, and surreptitiously carried correspondence, and Lord Roberts recently reported that a Dutch doctor, with the Red Cross badge on his arm, was found killed in action with a rifle in his hand, and wearing a bandolier half emptied of cartridges.

However exceptional these cases may be, and however laudable the humane and charitable purpose of the Aid Societies, no surprise can be felt at the disinclination on the part of the Delegates in 1864, 1868, and 1874 to place irresponsible civil Aid Societies on the same footing as the regular military medical service, with its responsibility to authority and its long and honourable record.

It would seem that the only procedure open to a neutral ambulance in order to become entitled to the privileges of the Geneva Convention is to join and be incorporated with the military medical service of a belligerent. In States where there is no legislation analogous to our Foreign Enlistment Act, or Neutrality Proclamations, it is open to individual citizens to take service with a belligerent at their own risk, and unless the sum of such individual acts constitutes a proof of animus adjuvandi on the part of the Government of the State, no breach of neutrality can be alleged.

But the case of an organized Society recognized by the State stands upon a different basis. It such a body as the Dutch National Red Cross Society dispatches an ambulance with the approval and consent of its Government to join and be incorporated in the military medical service of the Boer army, such an act is primâ facie a breach of neutrality, and would afford grounds for a diplomatic protest or even stronger measures.

It is not suggested that the Netherland Government displayed as a neutral State any undue partiality towards the Boer belligerents. The offer of the services of a Dutch Red Cross ambulance was made formally to Her Majesty's Government, and was politely declined on the ground that the British medical service was adequate.

The offer was also made to and accepted by the Boers, so that the measure meted to each was so far equal. But the Netherland Government does not appear to have perceived the technical dilemma in which the Dutch ambulance stood. If it entered into and became a part of the Boer army, a breach of neutrality would be committed; and if it did not place itself under the Boer Military Commander, it would not be entitled to the privileges of the Geneva Convention.

In the case now under consideration, it is quite clear that the Dutch ambulance had no intention of renouncing its nationality, as it hoisted the Netherland flag openly. It was not therefore a belligerent, and could not claim the privileges of the Geneva Convention, if the premises and deductions set forth above are accepted as well founded.

The appeal of Dr. Hollander to the provisions of the Geneva Convention, put forward by the Netherland Minister under the instructions of the Netherland Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, appears therefore to fail; and it may be further pointed out that even if the Convention of Geneva had been applicable to this case, the claim of Dr. Hollander, that by the VIIth Article of that Convention it was his right and his duty to fly the Netherland national flag, is also untenable.

The first portion of Article VII runs as follows:—

"Un drapeau distinctif et uniforme sera adopté pour les hôpitaux, les ambulances, et les évacuations. Il devra être, en toute circonstance, accompagné du drapeau national."

Apart from the other Articles of the Convention, it is undeniable that the natural meaning and interpretation of this clause is that the hospital or ambulance, besides flying the Geneva Red Cross flag, should also hoist the flag of the nation to which it belonged.

But when it is considered that the ambulances and hospitals are military and belligerent, it results that the national flags flown by them must be those of one of the belligerents. The flags of neutrals are not mentioned, and the ambulances and hospitals of neutrals have no place whatever in the Convention, and no claim under Article VII to fly the flag of a neutral State on the battle-field. That right and duty is reserved to belligerents only.

It is, however, a well-established fact that not only the Dutch Aid Societies, but also those furnished by England and Germany, when neutrals, have flown their own national flags, under the impression that Article VII entitled them to do so. The error is therefore pardonable, and is clearly due to the natural meaning of that Article when read alone without those which precede it.

The misconception is further encouraged by the analogy furnished by the Convention of 1899 for the application of the Geneva Convention to maritime warfare, which in Article V lays down that—

Peace Conference at the Hague, Blue Book, p. 351.

"All hospital ships shall make themselves known by hoisting, together with their national flag, the white flag with a red cross provided by the Geneva Convention."

Here the national flag is undoubtedly the flag of the nation which provides the hospital ship, whether she be neutral or belligerent, and it is not unreasonable to arrive at the inference that the wording of Article VII of the original Convention was capable of a similar interpretation. Its limitation to belligerents only becomes evident when the extent of the applicability of the whole Convention is studied.

From the diversity of views entertained on the interpretation of the Geneva Convention, it is clear that the actual wording of the Articles is wanting in precision; and the numerous attempts which have been made during the last thirty-six years to procure emendation, indicate that the text, both in principle and in extent, leaves much to be desired, and affords openings for serious abuses.

Among the many complaints which have been presented against the Convention of 1864 the following may be mentioned:—

1. The preamble and the Articles are ambiguous. In the mind of the public, and sometimes of the official authorities, there is no distinction drawn between the Red Cross Societies and the organizations entitled to use the Red Cross by the terms of the Geneva Convention between the official military medical service and the Volunteer Aid Societies—all are popularly supposed to be regulated by the Convention.

2. Red Cross Societies and Voluntary Aid Societies are not even mentioned in the Convention. At the time when it was drawn up, these Associations were extremely few in number, and were still in process of evolution. They have, in the course of the last thirty-six years, developed into wide-spread, useful, and stable organizations, constituting an important factor in the question of the care of sick and wounded; their status, rights, and duties remain still undefined, while their capabilities, their merits, and their utility eminently deserve recognition, in so far as their operation can be made to conform with the necessities of war.

3. The privileges and immunities accorded by Articles II and V upon those who attend and succour the sick and wounded are vague, indefinite, and inconvenient.

Neutrality ceases when an ambulance or hospital has no sick and wounded, while the presence of two patients is sufficient to confer it.

An inhabitant of the country who affords shelter to two wounded men has an immunity from billetting and war contributions.

4. The provisions of Articles I and VI are vague, and might become embarrassing to a military commander.

At Lindley, in the Orange Free State, on the 17th July, 1900, Captain Longhurst, R.A.M.C., was in charge of a British Hospital, and had stored in his office a number of arms and accoutrements belonging to patients in hospital, in accordance with paragraph 1726 of the Queen's Regulations for the Army.

The British troops left. The Boers entered the town and found arms in the hospital, accused Captain Longhurst of violating the Geneva Convention, and threatened to have him tried and punished for having arms concealed under cover of the Red Cross, in contravention of Article I of the Geneva Convention.

They also objected to the employment as hospital orderlies, wearing the Red Cross arm badge, of combatant soldiers who had recently been fighting.

British ambulance waggons, moreover, carry arms as part of their equipment, and this practice might also be alleged to be an infraction of the Convention.

It is evidently desirable that a clear understanding on these points should be arrived at by modifying the Convention or the Regulations.

5. The Red Cross flag and armlet prescribed by Article VII are, in most countries, not protected by legislation, and their employment is open to serious abuse. Authority to use the Red Cross flag or badge should be granted only by specified Naval and Military Departments. Unauthorized use should be subjected to heavy penalties; and improper, fraudulent, or dishonourable employment of the flag or badge by authorized persons should be subject to severe punishment.

Up to the present time there have been frequent instances of misuse, and, so far at any rate as this country is concerned, no means of repressing them at present exist.

The Geneva flag has been used as a trade-mark on provisions, as an advertisement by tradesmen, by Voluntary Societies having no connection with the Red Cross, by the organizers of dishonourable stratagems, by spies, by marauders, and by irresponsible individuals.

Until an exclusive right to use and control is conferred upon Her Majesty's Government, and legal penalties for infraction instituted, there can be no check upon these abuses. The legislation should cover the whole Geneva Convention, as well as Red Cross and Aid Societies.

Foreign Office to the Attorney-General.

Foreign Office, February 6, 1901.

Sir,

Commission to examine Claims of people expelled from South Africa.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers, as marked in the accompanying list, on the subject of a Commission which it is proposed to appoint for the purpose of investigating the claims of foreigners expelled from South Africa by the British authorities.

The circumstances which have led to the proposed appointment of the Commission in question are briefly as follows:—

In September last (Paper A) the German Embassy informed this Department that they would have to present various claims for compensation on behalf of Germans expelled from South Africa, and suggested that it might be convenient to deal with these claims by a Mixed Commission on the lines of the Anglo-German Commission which had so successfully settled the German claims in connection with the seizure of the German ships "Bundesrath" and "General."

It did not appear, however, to Her Majesty's Government (Paper B) that the two cases were parallel; for while it is admitted that it is for a Prize Court—and therefore for an international Tribunal—to decide whether there is ground for arresting a neutral ship on suspicion of carrying contraband, it never can be admitted that any authority other than British can decide whether the military have just ground for expelling aliens from a territory owned or occupied by Great Britain.

Letters were accordingly drafted to the War Office and Colonial Office (Paper C) drawing attention to the claims which had been received from various foreign Governments whose nationals had been expelled from South Africa, explaining the manner in which Lord Lansdowne considered that those claims could best be dealt with, and asking those Departments for any observations they might have to offer on the course suggested.

After some correspondence (Papers D to M inclusive) both Departments eventually expressed their general concurrence in the draft instructions to the President of the Commission which were inclosed in the letter from this Department of the 9th January (Paper G). The Colonial Office, however, suggested that the 5th paragraph should run as follows:—

"On the conclusion of your investigations in South Africa you should return to England, and, after taking any further evidence in London which you may find necessary, you should furnish His Majesty's Government with a report on the results at which you have arrived, in which should be included the amounts at which you assess the damages in such cases as you think call for any, together with the particulars which have enabled you to arrive at the various assessments. The principle which should guide the Commission in these assessments should be that of fair and reasonable compensation for direct damage, excluding indirect or consequential damages," while the War Office further proposed that, for the expression in the 1st paragraph of those instructions "foreigners in consequence of their expulsion," &c., should be substituted the following clause:—

"Persons of various nationalities in consequence of alleged arbitrary treatment by the British military authorities in South Africa, in the way of arrest, detention, expulsion, or deportation; and in respect of suffering, loss, and damage to person, property, or business occasioned by such treatment."

Lord Lansdowne is prepared to adopt the amendment suggested by the Colonial Office in the letter above referred to, but he is inclined to think that the additions proposed by the War Office, especially the words "and in respect of suffering, loss, and damage to person, property, or business occasioned by such treatment," might be taken to mean that His Majesty's Government are willing to admit claims for indirect or consequential damages—which is not the case.

I am to request you to take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and to favour his Lordship, at your early convenience, with your views as to whether the amendment suggested in the War Office letter of the 30th ultimo is liable to bear the above interpretation, and, if so, what way you would propose that it should be altered with a view to avoiding all misapprehension as to the intentions of His Majesty's Government on the subject.

Lord Lansdowne would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations you may have to offer on the draft instructions to the President of the proposed Commission, as well as on the various suggestions that have since been made by Mr. Underdown, in regard to its modus operandi (Paper O), especially on the proposal that it should commence its sittings in London instead of in South Africa.

You will see from the Papers marked (P), (Q), (R), and (S) that the German Government have expressed a wish that a German legal specialist should be allowed to appear before the Commission as counsel to advocate individual German claims, and that His Majesty's Government have assented to their request.

I have, &c.

Report.

In my opinion it is not desirable to insert in the reference the paragraph proposed by the War Office. It appears to me that it may be open to the objection stated in the letter now under reply, and that the claims for investigation should be confined to those made on behalf of foreigners. Perhaps after the words "foreigners" in the first paragraph of the reference it might be desirable to insert the words "subjects of friendly Powers," as, of course, it is not contemplated that any claims by subjects of the late Republics should be investigated.

I suggest, for consideration, that it might be well to formulate the matters into which the Commissioners are to inquire. As the draft reference stands at present, the Commissioners are to assume that the General has an absolute right to expel, during hostilities, from the theatre of war any person whose presence is considered by him to be dangerous. Taken strictly, this would exclude any inquiry by the Commissioners as to whether the expulsion was, under the circumstances, unreasonable; but the papers before me seem clearly to intimate that it is the intention of His Majesty's Government that this line of inquiry should be open to the Commissioners.

It might be desirable also to direct the Commissioners to assume that every State has, by international law, the right to expel aliens whose presence is considered dangerous, as it is possible that it may be desirable to have recourse to this principle in support of some of the deportations from Cape Colony. I do not overlook the fact that Sir J. Ardagh, in his very able Memorandum, gives reasons for considering the whole of South Africa to be within the theatre of war, but questions may be raised upon this.

I would suggest the insertion, after the third paragraph, of a paragraph in some such terms as the following:—

"You are to investigate whether the power of expulsion is shown in any cases to have been exercised unreasonably or capriciously, or whether it was attended in its exercise with the infliction of any unnecessary hardship."

I think that the alteration in the last paragraph proposed by the Colonial Office may be accepted, subject to one observation. We can hardly exclude all consequential damage, inasmuch as the consequences may be the immediate result of the act complained of. I would suggest that the last words of this paragraph should run as follows:—

"Compensation for direct damage, excluding consequential damages, except for natural and proximate consequences of the act complained of."

The whole subject of remoteness of damage has given rise to a great deal of discussion in the Courts of this and other countries, and it is extremely difficult to state with completeness and accuracy the true principles within the compass of a short sentence.

The words above suggested have often been used in legal decisions, and will, I think, be sufficient to intimate to the legal member of the Commission that the principles of English law, excluding remote damages, are to be applied.

One or two observations occur to me upon Mr. Underdown's suggestions.

The power to give full indemnity to witnesses could be conferred only by Statute.

I do not think that it is desirable to make the Chairman's opinion final on points of law. It may very often be difficult to say precisely where fact ends and law begins, and I think it would be much better not to attempt any distinction of this sort, but to trust to the deference which the other members of the Commission will naturally pay to the opinions of the legal member on questions of law.

I think the clause giving power to the Commissioners to refer questions of law to to the Law Officers of the Crown is very objectionable. The Commissioners ought to decide for themselves, and it will be for the Government, with the assistance, if necessary, of the advice of the Law Officers, to decide how far they will act on their recommendation.

Claims of Foreigners expelled during Boer war: Instructions to Commission.

Sir,

BY direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, I have the honour to transmit to you a draft, amended in accordance with the suggestions contained in your letter of the 7th instant, of the communication which his Lordship proposes to address to the President of the Commission to investigate the claims to compensation which have been made by various foreigners, in consequence of their expulsion by the British military authorities from the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony respectively.

I am to request you to inform his Lordship whether this draft, as now amended, meets with your approval.

Draft of Letter to President of Commission.

Foreign Office, February , 1901.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Marquess of Lansdowne to inform you that you have been chosen by His Majesty's Government for the position of President of the Commission which it has been decided to appoint for the purpose of investigating the claims to compensation which have been made by various foreigners, subjects of friendly Powers, in consequence of their expulsion by the British military authorities from the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony.

This Commission will, beside yourself, consist of A. (military officer), B. (civilian), C. (military officer), D. (civilian), and its business will be to investigate these claims, inquiring carefully into the grounds for each expulsion, ~~with a view to ascertaining if it was justified, and, if so, how and why~~.

~~The principle by which you will be guided in~~ You are to assume, for the purposes of this inquiry, ~~is~~ that a General commanding an army in the field has an absolute right to remove or expel, during the continuance of hostilities, from any place within the theatre of war, all persons whose continued presence therein is considered by him to be dangerous, prejudicial, or inconvenient in connection with his military operations, and to deport such persons to such a distance from the theatre of war as shall be necessary effectually to prevent their speedy return to it.

You are further to assume that every State has by international law the right to expel aliens whose presence is considered dangerous.

You are to investigate whether the power of expulsion is shown in any cases to have been exercised unreasonably or capriciously, or whether it was attended in its exercise with the infliction of any unnecessary hardship in any such cases whether a claim for compensation is established.

You will open your sittings in London; and after investigating such claims as are brought before you here, you will proceed to South Africa with a view to continuing your investigations on the spot.

The various military and civil authorities of the places at which you may see fit to prosecute your researches will be instructed to give you every facility for carrying out the task intrusted to you.

On the conclusion of your investigations in South Africa, you should return to England, and after taking any further evidence in London which you may find necessary, you should furnish His Majesty's Government with a Report on the results at which you have arrived, in which should be included the amounts at which you assess the damages in such cases, if any, as you think, call for compensation, together with the particulars which have enabled you to arrive at the various assessments. The principle which should guide the Commission in these assessments should be that of fair and reasonable compensation for direct damage, excluding consequential damages except for natural and proximate consequences of the act complained of. In the event of any of the claimants, or their respective Governments, to whom your awards will in due course be communicated, not being content with your award, you will be expected to examine their further representations, and advise His Majesty's Government as to the reply which should be returned to them.

Mr.   has been appointed Secretary to the Commission, for the purpose of seeing to the discharge of such clerical work as may be found necessary in the course of your Mission, and generally facilitating your task.

The financial arrangements are dealt with in a separate despatch.

[June 5, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,   Foreign Office, May 14, 1901.

Nationality of V. Verby and children in the East Africa Protectorate.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to inclose, for your consideration, a despatch, dated 30th January of last year, from Sir Arthur Hardinge, at that time Her late Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar, in which certain questions are raised relative to the national status (a) of M. Vladimir Verby, a lay missionary in the service of the Church Missionary Society at Taveta, in British East Africa, who is stated to be a Bulgarian by birth and to have been recently married to an English lady; also (b) of any children, born in the Protectorate, being the issue of such marriage.

The first question put by M. Verby, according to Sir A. Hardinge's despatch, was whether his residence in a territory which, "though not nominally, is for all practical purposes a part of Her Majesty's dominions," could not be regarded as equivalent to residence in a British Colony. In connection with this inquiry reference is made to the case of a fugitive from justice in German East Africa who had sought an asylum in the adjoining British Protectorate. The facts of this case will be explained briefly at a later stage of this letter.

It seems probable, from the context, that M. Verby was under the impression that residence anywhere in "Her Majesty's dominions" would qualify him for naturalization under the Act of 1870 (33 Vict., cap. 14). One of the conditions precedent, however, to naturalization under that Act is a residence of five years in the United Kingdom, which obviously could not be fulfilled by residence either in a British Protectorate or in a British Colony.

Whether residence in the East Africa Protectorate might or might not be considered, for the purpose of colonial naturalization, equivalent to residence in any Colony, is technically a question of the construction of the law of the particular Colony concerned. As a matter of fact, however, it may be safely assumed that no Colony has, by its municipal legislation, prescribed that residence in the East Africa Protectorate is equivalent to residence in the Colony for the purposes of complying with the conditions precedent to naturalization, the operation of which would, in no circumstances, extend beyond the limits of the Colony itself.

No machinery has as yet been established by means of which an alien can become naturalized in the British East Africa Protectorate, or, so far as Lord Lansdowne is aware, in any other British Protectorate, with the exception of Southern Rhodesia, for which special provision was made by the Orders in Council of the 7th March and 19th May, 1899. It would seem, therefore, that M. Verby's residence in the Protectorate is, at present, of no avail for the purpose of his acquiring either British or British colonial naturalization, and Lord Lansdowne proposes, with your concurrence, to instruct His Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar to inform him to that effect.

The second question asked by M. Verby involves consideration of a more complex and far-reaching character. He inquires whether children born of his marriage in the British East Africa Protectorate would be British subjects, and, if not, what their nationality would be, assuming that he takes no steps to register them, or to procure their registration as Bulgarian or Ottoman subjects.

No provision is made in "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897," for compulsory registration, but, even were such the case, it is not apparent how the national status of either M. Verby or his children could be affected thereby. What the nationality of the children may be in contemplation of Ottoman or Bulgarian law is immaterial; the real issue to be determined is whether they can be said to be British subjects jure soli. The answer to this depends presumably upon the solution of two questions, viz.:—

(a.) Does His Majesty, by his Representatives, exercise, in fact, dominion and sovereignty in such portion of the territory of the British East Africa Protectorate as lies outside the mainland portion over which the Sultan of Zanzibar still retains his sovereign rights; and, if so—

(b.) Can it be properly said that children born on such territory are, at common law, British subjects jure soli, by virtue of their birth in the King's dominions.

As you are aware, the principles involved in the first of these questions were discussed at considerable length in the trial of Regina v. Jameson. A paper summarizing the contentions of the Crown, and the arguments advanced against them on that occasion, is inclosed for convenience of reference. The accompanying volumes of the "Map of Africa by Treaty" contain all the documents of importance relating to the early history and constitution of the East Africa Protectorate, such as the various Concessions granted to the British East Africa Company by the Sultan of Zanzibar; the Royal Charter granted to the Company in 1888; the various Treaties made by the Company with native Chiefs; the transfer by the Company of the territory which it administered to the British Crown in 1895. The East Africa Order in Council of 1897 is likewise inclosed, together with a map of the Protectorate (packet A). These papers will enable you to form an opinion as to whether His Majesty exercises "dominion and sovereignty" in the territory in question, should you consider it necessary to determine that point before expressing an opinion on the second question, which is really the crucial one.

It may now be convenient to refer briefly to the Lohse incident, to which Sir Arthur Hardinge alludes, although it only indirectly affects the specific questions raised in his despatch. In August 1897, Sir Arthur Hardinge reported that the German authorities of the adjoining dependency had requested the surrender of a native convict, accused of murder, who had escaped from the German gaol at Moshi and taken refuge at Taveta. He inquired if he might surrender the fugitive in the absence of an Extradition Treaty between the German dependency and the British Protectorate. The papers relating to this case are inclosed in a separate packet marked (B) and I am to invite your special attention to Lord Salisbury's Minute of the 19th August. You will observe from the telegram to Sir Arthur Hardinge of the 30th August, that, as an executive act, Lord Salisbury stated that he was prepared to maintain that British East Africa is "part of Her Majesty's dominions" for the purpose of the operation within the limits of the Protectorate of "The Extradition Act of 1870," at least in so far as regarded persons over whom the Courts had jurisdiction under the new Order in Council. It is to this instruction that Sir Arthur Hardinge now alludes. A question involving somewhat similar considerations has recently arisen in Southern Nigeria (see packet C).

The present reference has been forwarded to the Colonial Office for Mr. Secretary Chamberlain's concurrence and for any additional observations which he might wish to offer. The correspondence with that Department, together with a Memorandum by the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Staples v. the Queen, of the grounds of their Report to Her late Majesty the Queen, dated the 27th January, 1899, which has been obtained for your confidential information, will be found in packet (D).

I am to request that you will take these Papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion:—

1. As to whether you concur in the instructions which it is proposed to send to His Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar in reply to the first question raised in Sir A. Hardinge's despatch.

2. As to whether any children of M. Verby's which may be born in the East Africa Protectorate, but outside the Sultan's territory, can be held to have been born in the King's dominions, and, as such, to be natural born British subjects jure soli.

His Lordship, while desirous of confining the comments which are now submitted to you with the inclosed Papers as far as possible to the specific questions raised by Sir Arthur Hardinge, would nevertheless be glad to be favoured with any general observations you may think well to offer, with regard to the national status of children born in British Protectorates.

I have, &c.

Report.

1. We concur in the instructions which it is proposed to send to His Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar in reply to the first question raised in Sir A. Hardinge's despatch.

2. We are of opinion that the British East Africa Protectorate cannot be considered as a portion of His Majesty's dominions so as to confer upon the children of aliens who may be born there the status of British subjects.

The Order in Council of 1897, under which the administration of the Protectorate is carried on, is expressly framed under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, which is only applicable to territories outside His Majesty's dominions.

It may well be that such territories should be treated as within His Majesty's dominions for the purposes of Extradition Treaties and of the Foreign Enlistment Act as these involve relations with other Powers, and the territories are in fact under His Majesty's control. But they have not for all purposes been made part of His Majesty's dominions.

It has not yet been thought expedient to confer the status of British subjects upon the natives of Protectorates. Whether the time has come for such an exercise of sovereignty over all, or any, of the Protectorates as would make them, for all purposes, a portion of His Majesty's dominions is a question of policy on which we are not called upon to advise.

Gentlemen,

War in South Africa: Censorship of telegrams. Claims for compensation.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to inclose, for your consideration, the papers noted in the accompanying lists marked (A) and (B) respectively, which relate to claims for compensation arising out of telegrams stopped or delayed by the military censorship which it was found necessary to establish at Aden and elsewhere during the military operations in South Africa.

The origin and history of this censorship is fully set out in the accompanying printed Secret Memorandum.

The Articles of the International Telegraph Convention on which it was based are cited in paragraph 2. The manner in which its establishment was first notified to foreign States is explained in paragraph 5. The actual text of that notification is given in Appendix I, page 19; and the subsequent notices issued from time to time, through the channel of the International Bureau at Berne, are collected in Appendix II, pp. 20–26 of the same Memorandum.

The two specific questions on which Lord Lansdowne desires to be favoured with your opinion, are as follows:—

1. The liability of His Majesty's Government to pay compensation for loss occasioned in consequence of a message dispatched on the 22nd November, 1899, from Lourenço Marques to Messrs. Ringel, of Hamburg, having been held up by the Military Censor at Aden, which action the German Government maintain constitute an infraction of the VIIth Article of the International Telegraph Convention.

2. The liability of His Majesty's Government to pay compensation to the Eastern Telegraph Company in respect of certain telegrams which have passed over their lines, but which were stopped, delayed, deleted, or transposed by the Military Censors at Aden and elsewhere.

The first of those questions is referred to in paragraph 21, p. 13, of the printed Memorandum, and the whole of the correspondence relating to it is put up in Packet (A).

It will be seen, on reference to Lord Salisbury's note to Count Hatzfeldt of the 23rd October last, that His Majesty's Government advanced the contention that their right to detain or delay telegraphic messages rested upon Article VIII rather than upon Article VII of the Telegraph Convention. That the IIIrd Article of the same Convention expressly declared that no responsibility is accepted on account of the Service of International Telegraphy; and that, therefore, there had been no infraction of the Convention and no ground for claiming compensation. The grounds on which the German Government dissent from this view are stated in Count Hatzfeldt's note of the 16th March last. This last note was referred for the observations and opinion of His Majesty's Postmaster-General, and I am to direct your especial attention to Sir George Murray's letter of the 11th instant, and to the views expressed therein.

With regard to the second question, I am to refer you to the correspondence in Packet (B), and to the views of the Post Office also contained in Sir G. Murray's letter of the 11th instant.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will report to Lord Lansdowne—

1. Whether you consider the views in the Post Office letter of the 11th May, so far as they relate to the German claim, and as qualified by Mr. Lamb's semi-official letter to Mr. Bertie of the 13th instant, to be well founded and such as may properly form the basis of a reply to Count Hatzfeldt's last note.

2. Whether you consider the views expressed in the same letter, so far as they relate to the claim of the Eastern Telegraph Company, to be right and proper in the circumstances.

Lord Lansdowne will also be obliged if you will favour him with your opinion generally on the papers sent herewith.

I have, &c.

Report.

We think the action of His Majesty's Government should be justified under Article VIII, and that the view taken by the Postmaster-General as to the transmission of telegrams "at the sender's risk" is sound. We do not think that Article III can be relied on for this purpose; but in all other respects we think that the Post Office letter of the 11th May, as qualified by Mr. Lamb's, may properly form the basis of a reply to Count Hatzfeldt's last note.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, June 13, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Nationality of Germans in late Orange Free State.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list, which relate to the nationality of certain persons who were Burghers of the late Orange Free State.

The circumstances of the case are briefly as follows:—

Persons of German nationality had in many cases obtained the Burghership of the Free State and were resident within what had been the territory of that Republic at the date of its annexation to the British dominions.

The Proclamation of the 3rd September, 1900 (Document A) by Field-Marshal Lord Roberts announcing the annexation of the Orange Free State contained the following provision:—

"All persons residing in the Orange River Colony, heretofore Burghers of the Orange Free State, have . . . . . become the subjects of Her Majesty except those Burghers who were attached to some commando prior to the annexation, and who have continuously since then been in arms against Her Majesty."

A Memorandum of the 16th March last from the German Embassy (Document B), stated that the attention of the German Government had been called to this Proclamation, by which numerous Germans were turned, without their concurrence, into British subjects, and that the Imperial Government would therefore be grateful if the opportunity could be offered to the Germans affected by the Proclamation of refusing in some way to accept the status of British subjects.

It is in regard to this request that your advice is now sought.

On receipt of this Memorandum His Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin was requested to obtain the opinion of the Legal Adviser to the Embassy as to whether Germans who had become Burghers of the Orange Free State could in any, and if so, in what, circumstances, retain their German nationality. The report has been received and will be found in the inclosed despatch from Sir F. Lascelles, No. 57, Africa, of the 22nd ultimo (Document C). According to this report German nationality is lost:—

1. By dismissal on application. This request for dismissal can only be refused when certain conditions as to the fulfilment of the compulsory military service in Germany have not been complied with.

2. By decision of the authorities. This is a dismissal without application, by disobeying the command to return home in case of war and by entering without permission the State service of a foreign Power; and, with certain exceptions which appear however to be of no great importance for the purposes of the present reference.

3. By living uninterruptedly for the period of ten years in a foreign country.

A German does not, therefore, according to the opinion of Justizrath Schneider, lose his German nationality by becoming a Burgher of the late Orange Free State unless one or other of the above-mentioned conditions is fulfilled.

There appears to be no fixed and universally recognized rule of international law with respect to the acquisition of a new nationality on the conquest or cession of the whole or part of a State.

Definite public announcements as to the nationality of subjects of a State the whole of which has been annexed by another State, do not appear to be usual. This is probably due to the fact that as the old nationality ceases to exist, there can be no question of making arrangements whereby certain classes of persons may retain it. It has no doubt been assumed that all persons of the old nationality, whether domiciled in the territory of the old State or not, acquire the nationality of the conquering and annexing State; the most that the latter can do is not to hinder its new subjects from acquiring the nationality of some third State. The following examples may be cited: the conquest and annexation of Geneva, of Mühlhausen in 1792, and of the Netherlands by France in 1795, of Hanover and Hesse-Cassel by Prussia in 1866, of Burmah by Great Britain in 1886, and the annexation of the Ionian Islands to Greece in 1864.

In none of these cases does any specific arrangement appear to have been made under which members of the annexed populations could avoid accepting the nationality of the annexing State. In the cases of the annexations of Mühlhausen and of Geneva, natives were declared to be born Frenchmen by the fact of annexation, but the liberty of emigration was granted to them. Any such specific grant is perhaps of little practical value where the whole State is annexed; for, from the moment at which conquest and annexation have been actually accomplished, the nationality of the annexing State is the only one available, and a subject or citizen of the annexed State who does not wish to adopt the nationality of the annexing State must, before he can logically reject or renounce such nationality, find some third State willing to adopt him as a subject. In the meantime, however, he must apparently of necessity be of the conqueror's nationality, or of none at all.

Two particular cases of considerable interest in this connection may here be mentioned:—

1. The case of Count Platen Hallemund, a Hanoverian subject, a brief account of which is given in a letter to the London "Observer" of the 19th ultimo (Document D).

From this letter it appears that Count Platen Hallemund migrated to Austria with the dispossessed King of Hanover, but was cited before a Berlin Court on a charge of high treason alleged to have been committed by him abroad as a subject of the King of Prussia.

It was argued by eminent jurists that the Count's emigration from Hanover at the time of the annexation had prevented the transfer of his allegiance to Prussia; but this plea was overruled and he was, according to the letter in the "Observer," sentenced in contumaciam to penal servitude.

The records of this Department do not contain any report of this case, but it is not perhaps rash to suppose the Court to have held that, Hanoverian nationality having ceased to exist, the Count must necessarily have become invested with Prussian nationality, and that, from the point of view of Prussian law, he necessarily continued to be a Prussian subject until such time as he acquired another nationality in such a manner as to divest him of Prussian nationality.

2. The case of Chong Khan, who had been a subject of the King of Burmah, before the annexation of that State by Great Britain; this case is set out in the reference recited in the Report of the 24th March, 1888 (Document E), from your predecessors in office.

This man was resident out of Burmah, namely, in Siam, at the time of the annexation; but the Report mentioned advises that he had nevertheless become a British subject.

The whole of the Orange Free State has been annexed by Great Britain and the case appears, therefore, to be strictly similar to those mentioned above.

It is doubtful whether for the present purpose any useful analogies can be drawn from the consideration of cases in which a portion only of a State has been annexed, and the nationality of that State has not been extinguished by its entire absorption within the dominions of the annexing State. The radical difference between cases of partial and of entire annexation is that, where a part only of a State is annexed, the old nationality survives, and it becomes necessary to consider what classes of the persons who were before the annexation invested with that nationality, become invested after that event with the nationality of the annexing State.

A Memorandum which has been prepared in this Office, and which deals with the more important cases in recent times of partial absorption, is inclosed for your information and consideration should you so desire, in connection with the point more immediately under discussion (Document F).

The general question of the transfer to Great Britain of the allegiance of the Burghers of the late Orange Free State has already been before you and formed the subject of your Report of the 17th May, 1900 (Document G), in which you advised the Secretary of State for the Colonies that the "inhabitants" of the State would become British subjects upon annexation, but that it had been usual in recent times to allow those who did not desire to become subjects of the conqueror to leave the conquered territory within a reasonable time and that you thought this course would properly be followed in the present case.

It only remains to consider the special case of persons who are subjects of the annexed State or the annexed territory in virtue of naturalization. A case of this nature formed the subject of your Report of the 22nd October last, in which you advised that no distinction should be drawn between the case of a natural-born and that of a naturalized citizen.

The case of the persons on whose behalf is made the request contained in the above-mentioned German Memorandum is, therefore, that of naturalized subjects of a State the whole of which has been annexed, and whose nationality derived from that State has ceased to exist, but whose nationality of origin has not, according to the law of the country of origin, been lost to them.

I have the honour to request you to take the above-mentioned observations and papers into your consideration and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion:—

1. As to what, from the stand-point of international law, are the legal merits of the application made in the Memorandum of the 16th March last from the German Embassy.

2. As to whether there is any objection from a legal point of view to releasing from their obligations under the Proclamation such Burghers of German origin as formally express their desire not to accept British nationality, on condition that they no longer remain in the British dominions in South Africa, and

3. Generally.

Report.

1. We are of opinion that the application made by the German Embassy in the Memorandum of the 16th March, 1901, is reasonable and in accordance with international usage. As we advised in our Report of the 17th May, 1900, it has been usual in recent times to allow those who do not desire to become subjects of the conqueror to leave the conquered territory within a reasonable time.

2. We see no objection to His Majesty's Government making an announcement that Burghers of German origin who do not desire to become British subjects can show their election not to do so by making a declaration that they desire to retain their German nationality and transferring their domicile to German territory, and we think that under existing circumstances such conditions would be reasonable and proper.

Such a condition would not be open to the same objections as the one suggested, viz., that such Burghers should no longer remain in the British dominions in South Africa, and would be in accordance with the terms agreed to by Germany on the cession of Alsace-Lorraine.

[June 29, 1901.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, June 29, 1901.

Sir,

Extradition Treaties between British and foreign Protectorates.

WE were honoured with your commands, signified to us in the letter of Mr. Antrobus of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by you to inform us that certain questions had arisen with reference to the surrender from British Protectorates of fugitive criminals from Foreign Protectorates, and that he was to transmit to us for our consideration a correspondence which had passed between the Colonial Office and the Foreign Office on the question.

That it would be observed that it had been suggested that the local authorities of the British Protectorates in West Africa should be empowered to conclude Agreements with the adjoining Colonies or Protectorates of France and Germany for the mutual surrender of such persons as came under their respective jurisdictions, such Agreements being drawn up, as far as possible, on the lines of the Extradition Treaties already existing between the United Kingdom and France or Germany.

That you were advised that the Extradition Acts did not apply to British Protectorates inasmuch as their operation appeared to be confined to His Majesty's Dominions. That it would therefore be necessary to provide by legislation in the British Protectorates concerned for giving powers to arrest and hand over offenders from French or German Colonies or Protectorates.

That Mr. Antrobus was to inclose copies of Reports* received from the Law Officers of the Crown with reference to this matter, and it would be observed that on the 21st of November, 1893, our predecessors, Sir Charles Russell and Sir John Rigby, reported that it would not be possible by Order in Council under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act to make Extradition arrangements between the territory within the field of operation of the British South Africa Company and the Orange Free State, and the South African Republic, and that it would seem to follow from this opinion that it would be equally impossible to give the administrative powers required, inasmuch as the authority to legislate in British Protectorates was given by Order in Council passed under the provisions of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act.

That Mr. Antrobus was, however, to point out that in their Report of the 18th April, 1894, the Law Officers, Sir Charles Russell and Sir John Rigby, reported that it was competent to the High Commissioner by virtue of his Commission to enter into Extradition arrangements with the South African Republic, the Orange Free State and the authorities of the Portuguese possessions in South Africa, and that, if such arrangements were made, legislation should be provided by Proclamation inasmuch as the Order in Council of the 9th May, 1891, a copy of which was inclosed, had committed to the High Commissioner for South Africa the exercise on behalf of Her late Majesty of all her jurisdiction, including that under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890."

That it would be observed that the powers given to the High Commissioner by that Order in Council were conferred under the provisions of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act.
